It omits the postscript on Dr. Guillermo Sanchez, the orchestra's youthful physician-in-attendance. He fortunately had no serious illnesses to contend with, but he had a few scares, including the pneumonia one of the members' wives came down with in Paris. But no matter how trivial the upset, this 27-year-old Guatemalan was on hand. Indeed, he once responded like a fire horse to a scrawled note from a member stating simply "I feel low." He once responded, too, to a call on shipboard early in the morning. In dressing gown, with stethoscope sticking out of pocket, he stumbled into the designated room to find himself among three girls only half dressed. On hearing of this adventure Gaston, our French cabin mate, was delighted. "Tonight," he said, "I weel visit them, and you weel lend me your petite telephone, no?"

It also omits a little sketch of the labors of Leslie Rogers, librarian of the orchestra. His job on the trip was to see that every part was properly placed on every stand in the right order, and that every change, correction or cut ordered by the conductor was carried out exactly.

Nearly Tripped

He nearly got tripped up in Brussels one night when he removed the Belgian national anthem from the stands at the intermission. Then he got the sudden hunch Mr. Munch might play it again at the end. He did, but the men were caught by surprise and it took a half minute for them all to come in. His only disaster was the failure of the music of "God Save the Queen", to arrive in time for the London concert. Mr. Rogers rushed off to the librarian of the Royal Philharmonic, got the music (which the men had never seen) and had it on the stands for the opening ceremony. It went off, too, although the orchestra was playing one version, while Munch was conducting another.

It omits quotations from the fantastically enthusiastic music critics and reporters, who simply ran out of adjectives in every city from Paris to Berlin, from Amsterdam to London. I was most amused by one critic's verdict. The Boston Symphony said, was "the chromium Apollo of all orchestras." Another said "how can we possibly listen to our own orchestra after listening to this?" And still another summed it all up with this: "incontestably the best in the world."

And it omits the endless ancedotes, the language problems with conductors, customs men and border guards and the little details, as in the case of the many anti-American signs appearing usually along the railroad lines near the big cities. These signs, Communist inspired, range from "Ridgway and Your Microbe War Go Home," to merely "Army go home." And under them, in the bright phrase of some sharp American publicity man, occurs the legend: "Via Pan American."

Most of all, it omits a tribute to the man whose orchestra in training, in style, in technical mastery and in spirit it still is. That this man who vainly labored for

of "Red River."

Honor Boston Symphony

The highest award offered by the Académie du Disque Français has been presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its RCA Victor recording of the Brahms Fourth Symphony, Charles Munch conducting. The announcement was made before the French Congress, L'Assemblee Nationale, and sent by radiogram to Symphony Hall officials.

years to take his orchestra to Europe could not have been there was the melancholy aspect of the tour. For not one member of the orchestra, and indeed even Mr. Munch himself, was unaware that behind it all, behind the ovations, behind the glamor and the glitter and the excitement attending every occasion, stood the ceaseless energy and the unfailing artistic purpose of Serge Koussevitzky.

Die Rheinpfalz
May 15, 1952

Ein Exempel vollendeter Orchestertechnik

Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester gastierte erstmals in Deutschland

Das Große Haus in Frankfurt war der repräsentative Schauplatz für das erste Auftreten eines der ältesten und angesehensten Orchester Amerikas in Deutschland. Die Musiker Europas sahen dem Ereignis mit um so größerer Spannung entgegen, weil hier endlich einmal Gelegenheit geboten war, die sagenhafte Perfektionierung amerikanischer Orchestertechnik von Auge zu Auge und von Ohr zu Ohr gleichsam abzutasten und kritisch auf sich wirken zu lassen. Und so sah man denn im weiten Rund des wiedererbauten Theaters der Goethestadt viele deutsche Komponisten, Dirigenten und Musiker von Rang und Namen, aber auch bekannte Persönlichkeiten aus Politik, Verwaltung und Wirtschaft. Die Pfalz war vertreten durch Regierungspräsident Dr. Pfeiffer. (Von der Ueberreichung einer Adresse an das Orchester auf einem Empfang bei Hochkommissar McCloy haben wir in unserer gestrigen Ausgabe schon berichtet.)

Das Bostoner Orchester bietet schon äußerlich ein glänzendes Bild. Es ist in den Streichern besetzt mit 20 ersten, 14 zweiten Violinen, 12 Bratschen, 10 Celli und neun Kontrabässen. Die Bläser weisen die auch bei unseren großen Orchestern übliche Stärke auf. Die Klangfarbe des Blechs ist aber heller, schmetternder, durchdringender, als wir dies gewöhnt sind, weil die Mensurierung der Instrumente enger ist als bei uns. Dasselbe gilt auch für die Hölzer, vor allem die Oboen. Ihr süß einschmeichelnder Ton erinnert daran, daß auch sie nach romanischer Mensur gebaut sind. Dieser sinnlich-kräftigen, in südlichen Farben leuchtenden Tonkoloristik der Bläser steht ein Streicherklang von unbestechlicher, klarer Sachlichkeit gegenüber, fast von einer nordischen Kühle. Und es scheint, als ob die Amerikaner bei ihrem Orchester eine Synthese getroffen hätten zwischen dem Ideal südlich-romanischen und nördlich-germanischen Musizierens.

An den einzelnen Pulten sitzen hervorragende Künstler, durchweg. Bei den Bläsern wird dies natürlich leichter ohrenfällig als bei den Streichern. Da fielen uns auf der ganz ausgezeichnete Trompeter Roger Voisin, der Oboist Ralph Gomberg, der Klarinettist Gino Cioffi und der Pauker von Klasse Max Polster. Aber diese Einzelleistungen verdecken nicht das gleichmäßige und ausgewogene Können in den Gruppen. Das Zusammenspiel ist bewundernswert homogen. Präzision und Eleganz der technischen Bewältigung auch der kniffligsten Stellen sind nicht mehr zu überbieten. Die Streicher arbeiten bogentechnisch zusammen wie eine vollendet konstruierte Maschine. Bei den Celli gefiel uns die Beweglichkeit und herrliche Tongebung besonders, während die Kontrabassisten Aufmerksamkeit erregten durch die Weichheit und die Fülle ihrer Klangqualität gleichermaßen. Dies ist wohl eine Folge ihrer gemischten Bogenführung. Denn der eine Teil der Bassisten bevorzugt die deutsche, die andere die französische Schule.

Alles in allem also ein Klangkörper höchster spielerischer Potenz, ein Riesenінstrument, für das es keine Schwierigkeiten mehr zu geben scheint. Dabei muß bedacht werden, daß die Akustik des Frankfurter Hauses nicht ideal ist und den Gästen die gestaffelte deutsche Sitzordnung ungewohnt war.

Nun aber zum Programm und seiner künstlerischen Bewältigung. Hier muß zunächst dem Dirigenten Pierre Monteux eine tiefe Verbeugung gemacht werden für seine bewundernswerte Leistung. Wir lernten in ihm einen Maestro der alten, vornehmen Schule, etwa eines Nikisch oder Weingartner, kennen. Dieser kleine, fast 80jährige Franzose mit dem schwarzen Schopf und dem mächtigen weißen Moustache beherrscht das Orchester mit spielender Eleganz. Gestochene Genauigkeit und unbedingte Werktreue scheinen seine Devise.. Pierre Monteux führte das Bostoner Orchester in einer formalen Transparenz, die fast ästhetisch kühl anmutete. Aber dennoch wehte sinnliche Schönheit, beispielsweise in der Ouvertüre zu „Benvenuto Cellini" oder in „Alborada del Grazioso" von Ravel. Straußens Eulenspiegel" kam in einer fast kammermusikalischen Auflichtung und trotzdem in aller Buntheit. Lediglich die Dritte Symphonie von Brahms ließ uns kühl. Diese Dritte darf bei aller Subtilität nichts einbüßen von ihrer monumentalen Wucht. Wir lieben bei Brahms einen heißeren Odem und leidenschaftlichere Akzente.

Dann aber zu dem für uns Interessantesten des Abends, nämlich zur Dritten Symphonie von William Schuman. Mit diesem Werk brachten uns die Amerikaner ein Werk ihrer eigenen Schule. Von jener Schule, von der Aaron Copland schreibt, daß sie für die künstlerische Entwicklung Amerikas wichtiger sei als die Züchtung der komplizierten Maschinerie erstklassiger Orchester und die Förderung vollendeter Kunsttechnik. Denn diese könnten keine bedeutsame musikalische Kultur schaffen. „Das verzwickte Problem für eine wirklich reife musikalische Stellung liefert der Komponist . . ."

William Schuman widmete seine Dritte Symphonie dem Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester. Im Jahre 1941 war die Uraufführung. Im folgenden Jahr erhielt Schuman den ersten Preis der New Yorker Kritiker-Gilde. Das Werk hat eine Spieldauer von 20 Minuten und ist geteilt in zwei Hälften, deren erste von einer Passacaglia und einer Fuge gebildet wird, während die zweite ein Choral und eine Toccata umfaßt. Man muß wissen, daß Schuman ein Schüler von Roy Harris ist, dem man nachsagt, daß er der erste in Amerika geborene Tonsetzer sei, dessen rhythmische und melodische Begabung amerikanische Urlaute aussagten. Seine Eckigkeit in der Formgebung glich er durch eisernes Studium der musikalischen Gesetzmäßigkeiten aus, so daß heute Harris einer der bedeutendsten Satzkünstler der Neuen Welt ist.

Diese Satzkunst hat Schuman übernommen. Er baut seine Themata auf mit der kühlen Berechnung eines Ingenieurs. Er weiß die einzelnen Bestandteile übereinander zu schichten und nach einem wohlgeordneten Plan Gegensätze und Höhepunkte aufeinander abzustimmen. Er weiß auch kontrastreich zu instrumentieren und kennt dabei die Vorzüge der einzelnen Instrumente so gut, daß er ihnen Paradestückchen auf den Leib zu schreiben vermag.

Mit der Interpretation dieser Symphonie von William Schuman haben die Bostoner Symphoniker uns vom heutigen Stand amerikanischer Musik und Kultur mehr ausgesagt, als sie vielleicht beabsichtigt haben. Wir danken Pierre Monteux und den Bostonern besonders für den Vortrag dieses amerikanischen Werks.

Die Gäste wurden sehr herzlich gefeiert.

W. M. E.

[244]

Boston Symphony to Give 3 EC Concerts

FRANKFURT, May 7 (S&S)—Three concerts—one of them exclusively for members of the U.S. Armed Forces and their guests—have been scheduled in the U.S. Zone and in Berlin next week by the touring Boston Symphony Orchestra.

All military posts in the Zone and their Special Services officers have been allocated ticket quotas for the armed services performance at 3 pm May 14 in Frankfurt's Grosses Haus. Each member of the Armed Forces is permitted to bring one German or American civilian guest, it was announced.

For EUCOM, ticket reservations will start at 8 am today at Frankfurt Military Post Special Services Section, telephone 7254. Military personnel stationed in Frankfurt Municipal Subpost should telephone that number for tickets. Soldiers and officers in other parts of EUCOM and the Frankfurt post must contact their post or subpost Special Services officers for ticket reservations.

The Boston Symphony rehearsing under Charles Munch.

Reserved tickets must be picked up at the Special Services information center in Frankfurt's Carleton Hotel before noon the day of the performance. Tickets unclaimed after that time will be issued on a first-come, first-served basis.

For the military performance the conductor will be Charles Munch, the orchestra's musical director. The program will consist of selections from Barber, Debussy, Ravel and Brahms.

The Boston Symphony, now in Paris, also will present public concerts at 8 pm May 13 in Frankfurt's Grosses Haus and at 8 pm May 15 in Berlin's Titania Palast, with the program featuring the works of a modern American composer along with older French and German compositions.

The American composer is William Schuman, whose Symphony No. 3 (in two parts and four movements) will be presented. Works of other composers include those of Brahms, Berlioz, Ravel, Hindemith and Strauss.

Pierre Monteux, who recently retired as director of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, will be the guest conductor in both concerts.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU

8.5.52

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester begann am Dienstag in Paris seine erste Europatournee, die es in der kommenden Woche auch nach Frankfurt führen wird. Unter Charles Munch brachte es Werke von Samuel Barber, Walter Piston, Debussy und Ravel. Die Anwesenheit von Staatspräsident Auriol, Außenminister Schuman und anderen hohen Regierungsvertretern und Diplomaten machte das Konzert zu einem gesellschaftlichen Ereignis ersten Ranges. UP

Jubel um die Bostoner Symphoniker

Von unserem Dr.-St.-Musikkritiker

Frankfurt, 14. Mai. (Eigener Bericht) Von weither waren Musiker und Musikfreunde gestern abend im neuen Frankfurter Opernhaus zusammengeströmt, um das einzige Konzert zu hören, das die Bostoner Symphoniker in der Bundesrepublik geben. Die Wagenauffahrt rings um das große Frankfurter Haus ließ schon von außen den Ausnahmecharakter des Ereignisses erkennen. Denn das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester hat am meisten dazu beigetragen, Amerikas Musikleben in der Welt berühmt zu machen. Arthur Nikisch und Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux und Serge Kussevitzky waren die Lehrmeister dieses mehr als hundertköpfigen Orchesters. Die große europäische Musiktradition lebt hier in einem Stil und in einer Vollendung fort, wie sie das arme Europa heute kaum noch leisten kann.

Darmstäd

Klark

Das Bostoner

Freilich ist auch etwas typisch Amerikanisches hinzugetreten: man verachtet dort nicht die Technik. Im Gegenteil: die Virtuosität jedes einzelnen dieser Musiker ist unüberbietbar. Strengste Auslese und Musizierdisziplin hat hier eines der ganz großen Weltorchester entstehen lassen, das uns einen neuen Maßstab für Vollkommenheit aufzwingt. Der greise Pierre Monteux, ein Meister der klaren Form und der unbedingten Werktreue, dirigierte das Frankfurter Konzert mit seinem altmodischen langen Taktstock. Aber was er mit ihm zuwege brachte, war voller Leben und idealer Klangschönheit. Bei Ravel waren die 65 Streicher dieses Orchesters wie eine einzige große Harfe, im „Till Eulenspiegel" von Richard Strauß entdeckte man Dinge, die man mit solcher Klarheit und Präzision überhaupt noch nie gehört hat. Daß aber auch die große Tradition der deutschen Symphonik, in der dieses amerikanische Orchester aufgewachsen ist, ungebrochen weiterwirkt, bewies die klassisch groß gespielte Dritte von Brahms. Mit William Schumans Dritter Symphonie gab es ein repräsentatives Werk des zeitgenössischen Amerika. Der Beifall steigerte sich im Lauf des Abends bis zu einem brausenden Erfolg. Die Bostoner, die zu den Pariser Mai-Festspielen nach Europa gekommen sind, werden morgen noch ein Gastkonzert im Berliner Titania-Palast geben.

Wenn man eine New Yorker Z
schlägt und nach dem Konzert kann man im Verlauf einer Wo len sogar an aufeinanderfolgenden Tagen, die Namen der drei bedeutendsten amerikanischen Orchestervereinigungen finden: die New Yorker Philharmonie, das Philadelphia-Orchester und die Bostoner Sinfoniker. Der amerikanische Kritiker Virgil Thomson hat diese drei Klangkörper miteinander verglichen und gesagt, daß jedes dieser Orchester Ausdruck der Wesensart seiner Heimatstadt sei und seine Dirigenten ebenso geformt habe, wie es von ihnen herangebildet worden ist. Besonders interessant ist der Vergleich zwischen dem Philadelphia-Orchester, dem er Klangwärme und größte Empfindlichkeit zuspricht, und den Bostonern, deren Spiel äußerste instrumentale Vollkommenheit, klangliche Durchsichtigkeit und ein innerer Abstand von dem wiedergegebenen Werk kennzeichnen.

Von Paris kommend, hat das Bostoner Sinfonieorchester im Frankfurter Großen Haus gespielt (ein zweites öffentliches Konzert wird es in Berlin geben). Rund hundert Musiker saßen in der gewohnten klassischen Anordnung auf der Bühne, ein wohlproportionierter, allen Aufgaben gewachsener Orchesterkörper, dessen klangliches Volumen von dem Zuschauerraum kaum gefaßt werden konnte. Die ausgedehnte Vortragsfolge war vielseitig und auch symptomatisch: mit zwei französischen und zwei deutschen Werken bedeutete sie Verpflichtung der Vergangenheit gegenüber, mit der Wiedergabe der Sinfonie eines zeitgenössischen amerikanischen Komponisten Aufgeschlossenheit für die Gegenwart, die das Orchester seit je ruhmvoll auszeichnet; sie war aber andererseits auch so gewählt, daß sie die hervorragenden Eigenschaften des Orche-

Die Ouverture zu „Benvenuto
Berlioz, in harten glänzenden gestaltet, leitete den Abend ein Sinfonie von Brahms war das der ersten Konzerthälfte. Die entsprach in geradezu jeder bester sinfonischer Tradition; m feststellen, auch ohne zu wissen, daß Carl Muck und Max Fiedler Dirigenten der Bostoner waren. Freilich wirkt diese Tradition, gepaart mit solch moderner Orchesterkultur, wie auf Hochglanz poliert — vielleicht dabei auch einer gewissen Patina beraubt. Es gibt in diesem Orchester keine Instrumentengruppe, die der anderen nachstände, jeder Musiker ist ein Meistersolist seines Instrumentes und zugleich Exponent einer Präzision im ganzen, die nur durch absolute Einordnung erreicht werden kann. Ravels brillantes kleines Orchesterstück „Alborada del Grazioso", noch mehr der „Till Eulenspiegel" von Richard Strauß sind Aufgaben, die mit Virtuosität gelöst werden müssen und faszinierend gelöst wurden. So brauchte auch der junge Amerikaner William Schuman sich keine Fesseln anzulegen, als er für die Bostoner seine Dritte Sinfonie schrieb, die Koussevitzky uraufgeführt hat und die wohl zu den Standardwerken des Orchesters zählt. Die Sinfonie hat zwei Teile, die sich in vier Sätze gliedern: mit Passacaglia, Fuge, Choral und Toccata sind barocke Formen aufgegriffen. In bald strenger, bald freier Satzweise, auch in der instrumentalen Gewandung die Themenkomplexe stark profilierend, musiziert Schuman melodiös, gefühlsklar und unsentimental.

Dirigent des Abends war der Franzose Pierre Monteux, ein überragender Musiker und Orchesterführer, der vor einem

Darmstädter Echo 15 May, 1952

Klarheit als Maßstab

Das Bostoner Sinfonieorchester gastierte in Frankfurt

Wenn man eine New Yorker Zeitung aufschlägt und nach dem Konzertplan sieht, kann man im Verlauf einer Woche, zuweilen sogar an aufeinanderfolgenden Tagen, die Namen der drei bedeutendsten amerikanischen Orchestervereinigungen finden: die New Yorker Philharmonie, das Philadelphia-Orchester und die Bostoner Sinfoniker. Der amerikanische Kritiker Virgil Thomson hat diese drei Klangkörper miteinander verglichen und gesagt, daß jedes dieser Orchester Ausdruck der Wesensart seiner Heimatstadt sei und seine Dirigenten ebenso geformt habe, wie es von ihnen herangebildet worden ist. Besonders interessant ist der Vergleich zwischen dem Philadelphia-Orchester, dem er Klangwärme und größte Empfindlichkeit zuspricht, und den Bostonern, deren Spiel äußerste instrumentale Vollkommenheit, klangliche Durchsichtigkeit und ein innerer Abstand von dem wiedergegebenen Werk kennzeichnen.

Von Paris kommend, hat das Bostoner Sinfonieorchester im Frankfurter Großen Haus gespielt (ein zweites öffentliches Konzert wird es in Berlin geben). Rund hundert Musiker saßen in der gewohnten klassischen Anordnung auf der Bühne, ein wohlproportionierter, allen Aufgaben gewachsener Orchesterkörper, dessen klangliches Volumen von dem Zuschauerraum kaum gefaßt werden konnte. Die ausgedehnte Vortragsfolge war vielseitig und auch symptomatisch: mit zwei französischen und zwei deutschen Werken bedeutete sie Verpflichtung der Vergangenheit gegenüber, mit der Wiedergabe der Sinfonie eines zeitgenössischen amerikanischen Komponisten Aufgeschlossenheit für die Gegenwart, die das Orchester seit je ruhmvoll auszeichnet; sie war aber andererseits auch so gewählt, daß sie die hervorragenden Eigenschaften des Orchesters, Präzision und unbedingte Klarheit, ins helle Licht rückte.

Die Ouvertüre zu „Benvenuto Cellini" von Berlioz, in harten glänzenden Kontrasten gestaltet, leitete den Abend ein, die Dritte Sinfonie von Brahms war das Hauptwerk der ersten Konzerthälfte. Die Wiedergabe entsprach in geradezu jeder Einzelheit bester sinfonischer Tradition; man muß sie feststellen, auch ohne zu wissen, daß Carl Muck und Max Fiedler Dirigenten der Bostoner waren. Freilich wirkt diese Tradition, gepaart mit solch moderner Orchesterkultur, wie auf Hochglanz poliert — vielleicht dabei auch einer gewissen Patina beraubt. Es gibt in diesem Orchester keine Instrumentengruppe, die der anderen nachstände, jeder Musiker ist ein Meistersolist seines Instrumentes und zugleich Exponent einer Präzision im ganzen, die nur durch absolute Einordnung erreicht werden kann. Ravels brillantes kleines Orchesterstück „Alborada del Grazioso", noch mehr der „Till Eulenspiegel" von Richard Strauß sind Aufgaben, die mit Virtuosität gelöst werden müssen und faszinierend gelöst wurden. So brauchte auch der junge Amerikaner William Schuman sich keine Fesseln anzulegen, als er für die Bostoner seine Dritte Sinfonie schrieb, die Koussevitzky uraufgeführt hat und die wohl zu den Standardwerken des Orchesters zählt. Die Sinfonie hat zwei Teile, die sich in vier Sätze gliedern: mit Passacaglia, Fuge, Choral und Toccata sind barocke Formen aufgegriffen. In bald strenger, bald freier Satzweise, auch in der instrumentalen Gewandung die Themenkomplexe stark profilierend, musiziert Schuman melodiös, gefühlsklar und unsentimental.

Dirigent des Abends war der Franzose Pierre Monteux, ein überragender Musiker und Orchesterführer, der vor einem Menschenalter Leiter des Bostoner Sinfonieorchesters war und trotz seiner 77 Jahre mit erstaunlicher Spannkraft und Energie seinen klaren romanischen Interpretationswillen auf die Spieler überträgt: er reißt sie zu Wunderleistungen an Genauigkeit der Einsätze und der dynamischen Differenzierung mit.

Ein wertvolles, ein unvergeßliches Erlebnis: dieses amerikanische Spitzenorchester, das von einem kritischen Publikum mit Beifall überschüttet wurde.

T.

[244]

NEWSPAPER CUTTINGS ON AMERIKA HAUS GIESSEN ACTIVITIES

Giessener Anzeiger

vom [illegible] 1952

Die Bostoner konzertierten in Frankfurt

Nun konnte man sie auch einmal hierzulande vernehmen, die 113 Mann des Bostoner sinfonischen Orchesters, dem der Ruf vollendeter Präzision vorausging. Wir erinnern uns noch an die Äußerungen Stuckenschmidts auf seiner Tournee durch die Amerika-Häuser: die Vollendung sei hier von so hohen Graden, daß selbst an Stelle des musikantischen Impulses das glasklare Gefüge letzter technischer Ausgewogenheit trete. Der Eindruck, den man vorgestern im Frankfurter Großen Haus (wo das weltberühmte Orchester nebst Berlin sein einziges westdeutsches Gastspiel gab) empfangen durfte, war zunächst frappant: hier arbeitete ein Klangkörper, kopfstark wie kaum einer, erste Garnitur musikalischer und instrumentaler Qualitäten, auf Bruchteile von Sekunden genau, in einem wundervollen Zusammenspiel der tonalen Linien, ja, selbst die prägnant eingesetzten Pausen klangen hier. Von imponierender Gewalt die Wucht der Bässe, der Posaunen, der Kesselpauken, die das akustisch gut gebaute Haus voll aufnimmt. Das Geflirre der Streicher, die zart und rein schwebenden Holzbläser-Soli — all das hat den Rang einer bis ins Letzte durchgefeilten, verläßlichen Musikschar, bei deren immenser rhythmischer Beherrschtheit und orchestraler Fülle man gerne jene Imponderabilien vom Seelischen, vom Künstlerisch-Individuellen her vergißt, die uns die großen europäischen Orchester trotz vielleicht minderer Perfektion menschlich näherrücken.

Unter den mannigfach wechselnden Dirigenten der Bostoner sah man in Frankfurt den Meister Pierre Monteux, einen kleinen, Clemenceau ähnelnden Franzosen, trotz leichter Beleibtheit ungemein agil und von graziöser Noblesse, in der Zeichengebung selbst beim Fortissimo sparsam, ein souveräner, sensitiver Orchesterleiter ohne jede Spur von Routine. Nach einem so konventionellen, auf äußere Bravour ausgerichteten Musikstück wie Berlioz' Cellini-Ouvertüre (die sich übrigens in den Staaten besonderer Beliebtheit erfreut) wählte man die Sinfonie Nr. 3 in F-dur von Brahms, die durchsichtig in ihrer Struktur, im 2. Satz voll überirdischer Verklärtheit, im Finale voll elementarer Gewalt erklang. In die grellen, aufpeitschenden Klangbilder der Sinfonie Nr. 3 des modernen Amerikaners Schuman mußte man sich erst hineinhören; die Bostoner interpretierten den heimischen Komponisten in einer hinreißenden Vivace-Manier. Weit mehr als bloße Artistik waren die beiden letzten, dem musikalischen Humor gewidmeten Stücke: Ravels „Alborada de Grazioso", in Noten gesetzter Esprit Galliens, und Richard Strauß' schalkhaft-ausgelassenes Rondo „Till Eulenspiegel" — ein besonderes Erlebnis, die Straußschen sinfonischen Wogen und feinen, scherzhaften Lichter in dieser Klangfrische zu erfahren! Auch hierin schien alles exakt ausgemessen: ein da capo gab es nicht, obwohl die Ovationen des vollbesetzten Hauses für Meister Montreux, für die Bostoner kein Ende nehmen wollten. Eine Huldigung an den Geist der Musik, dargeboten von besten Kräften der alten und der neuen Welt.

•

gf.

Im Anschluß an das Konzert gaben Mrs. Ellen McCloy und der hessische Ministerpräsident Gg. August Zinn im Foyer des Großen Hauses einen Empfang. Unter den Gästen sah man Oberbürgermeister Dr. Kolb, Intendant Harry Buckwitz und Eberhard Beckmann vom Hessischen Rundfunk. Der Regierungspräsident der Pfalz, Dr. Pfeiffer, übergab dem Orchester eine Grußadresse an den einzigen noch lebenden Mitbegründer des Ensembles, den 92jährigen Daniel Kunz, der aus Oberstaufenbach in der Pfalz stammt.

Europe.
the one not one ed even that behind the citement
he ceasetic pur-

[244]

MAY 13 1952

Jubel um das „Boston Symphony Orchestra“

Frankfurter Gastspiel unter Pierre Monteux im Großen Haus

Am Schluß des Konzertes, nach dem zündend glanzvoll gespielten „Till Eulenspiegel“, verharrten die faszinierten Besucher noch lange auf den Plätzen. Begeisterter Beifall rief Pierre Monteux, den Dirigenten, immer wieder auf das Podium. Mit liebenswerter Bescheidenheit und Bonhomie wies der berühmte französische Seniormeister des Taktstocks die Ovationen dem Orchester zu, schließlich auch dessen jetzigem ständigem Leiter, Charles Münch, der im Publikum saß.

Ein glanzvolles musikalisches und gesellschaftliches Ereignis war dieses erste deutsche Gastspiel des viel genannten amerikanischen Elite-Orchesters. Man kannte den herrlichen Klangkörper, der mit den zwei Tage zuvor hier gehörten Berliner Philharmonikern die fast gleichaltrige Tradition (70 Jahre) hat, hierzulande bisher nur von Schallplatten. Seine fast unwahrscheinliche Volkommenheit der Spielpräzision, der klanglichen Kultur — Ergebnis kontinuierlicher Erziehungsarbeit durch Spitzendirigenten wie Nikisch, Muck, Monteux, Kussewitzky, um nur die hervorstechendsten Namen zu nennen —, diese Qualitäten offenbarten sich am Dienstagabend in Frankfurt hinreißend. Schnittig und federnd elastisch „kam“ das Rhythmische, musterhaft durchsichtig bot sich das Klangbild im beweglichen Wechsel- und Zusammenspiel der Instrumentalgruppen. Die Aufzählung der Orchestermitglieder im Programmheft verriet deren Abkunft aus aller Herren Länder. Ein einducksvolles Beispiel, wie im „Schmelztiegel“ Amerika sich aus dem Beitrag verschiedenster Nationen eine eigene amerikanische Kulturleistung konsolidiert hat.

Die Ouvertüre zur Oper „Benvenuto Cellini“ von Hector Berlioz — an sich ein schon etwas verblaßtes, nur noch in seinen impetuosen Allegro-Teilen noch stärker fesselndes Stück — wurde hier zum elektrisierenden Auftakt in der brillanten Art, wie sie durch Monteux und das Orchester klingendes Leben erhielt. Die Dritte Symphonie (F-dur) von Brahms, in Frankfurt lange nicht mehr gehört, erstand mit einer bei uns ungewohnten, gleichsam lateinischen Klarheit und Eleganz des Klanglichen, die aber in der Zurückdrängung des norddeutsch Schwerblütigen, Grüblerischen sehr ansprechen konnte. Als eine gewisse „pièce de résistance“ erschien vielen Hörern wohl die Dritte Symphonie des Amerikaners William Schuman. Ein Werk von oft recht harter Linearität und in aggressiven, grellen Farben ausklingend, doch — wenn auch nicht bruchlos im formalen Aufbau — Aeußerung eines urwüchsig kraftvollen, unkonventionellen symphonischen Denkens. Als versöhnliches „Bonbon“ gab es hiernach Maurice Ravels „Alborada del Grazioso“, dessen burleske Pikanterie sich mit allen delikaten Finessen moderner Orchestersprache mitteilte. Zum Schluß, unnachahmlich funkelnd in seinen kapriziösen Lichtern, Richard Straußens genialstes Konzertwerk: „Till Eulenspiegels lustige Streiche“.

Pierre Monteux, der Siebenundsiebzigjährige, dessen Name bereits der Musikgeschichte angehört in Verbindung mit den Uraufführungen der entscheidenden Frühwerke Strawinskys, strahlte die Ruhe überlegener Meisterschaft am Dirigentenpult aus. Dabei spürte man aber eine Antriebskraft von außerordentlicher Intensität, die im Hinblick auf die vorgerückten Jahre des Künstlers ganz besondere Bewunderung wecken mußte. Ein Konzertabend, den die Musikfreunde nicht so bald vergessen werden.

Hugo PUETTER

[244]

DIE NEUE ZEITUNG

7.5.52

Kurze Kulturnachrichten

Charles Munch und Pierre Monteux dirigieren in Frankfurt. Frankfurt (NZ). — Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester, das beim Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit in Paris das erste Konzert auf europäischem Boden am Dienstag gegeben hat, wird am 13. und 14. Mai auf Einladung des Frankfurter Amerikahauses einmal für das deutsche Publikum und einmal für Angehörige der amerikanischen Armee konzertieren. Das erste Konzert, dessen Programm wir bereits mitgeteilt haben, leitet der 77jährige, von seiner Tätigkeit am Concertgebouw-Orchester und in San Francisco her hochgeschätzte Pierre Monteux. Der ständige Dirigent des Orchesters, Charles Munch, der zu den bedeutendsten Orchesterleitern der USA zählt, wird vor den Soldaten unter anderem die Vierte Symphonie von Brahms erklingen lassen.

GOINGS ON ABOUT TOWN

ASSOCIATES, 51 E. 57th St.: August Macke; through June 27. . . . ¶ Group shows at the FEIGL, 601 Madison Ave., at 57th St.; through July 26. Open Saturdays. HELLER, 108 E. 57th St.; through June 28. Open Saturdays. SALMAGUNDI CLUB, 47 Fifth Ave., at 12th St.; through Sept. 5. Weekdays, 12:30 to 6; Sundays, 2 to 6.

NOTE—The semiannual Washington Square Outdoor Art Exhibit is on view daily, starting at noon and continuing until dark; through Sunday, June 15.

MUSEUMS

BROOKLYN MUSEUM, Eastern Parkway—Oils, sculptures, and ceramics by students of the Brooklyn Museum Art School; through June 15. (Weekdays, 10 to 5; Sundays, 1 to 5.)

JEWISH MUSEUM, Fifth Ave. at 92nd St.—Twenty-one Biblical paintings (dated 1948-52) by Ben-Zion, in an exhibition commemorating the Museum's fifth anniversary; through July 31. . . . ¶ Oil paintings, miniatures, and silhouettes of Jewish men and women, done by American artists during the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries; through July 31. (Mondays through Thursdays, 3 to 5; Sundays, 11 to 6.)

METROPOLITAN MUSEUM, Fifth Ave. at 82nd St.—Approximately a hundred lithographs, wood engravings, etchings, and drawings, by Cézanne's contemporaries; through Sept. 1. . . . ¶ "Americans on Land and Sea," lithographs by Currier & Ives from a large group recently presented to the Museum by Miss A. S. Colgate; through Sept. 1. (Weekdays, 10 to 5; Sundays, 1 to 5.)

MUSEUM OF MODERN ART, 11 W. 53rd St.—Works by fifteen contemporary Americans, in a rather grab-bag assortment that ranges from paintings by Edwin Dickinson and Jackson Pollock to "colored-light" compositions by Thomas Wilfred, inventor of the Clavilux, a sort of spectrum organ; through July 27. (Weekdays, noon to 7; Sundays, 1 to 7.)

MUSEUM OF NON-OBJECTIVE PAINTING, 1071 Fifth Ave., at 89th St.—Klee and Kandinsky, among others, are represented in a survey covering the years 1900 to the present, called "Evolution to Non-Objectivity." (Tuesdays through Saturdays, 10 to 6; Sundays, noon to 6.)

MUSIC

BENEFIT CONCERT—Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, with Frank Davis, baritone. A benefit for the Harlem Branch, Y.M.C.A. (Lewisohn Stadium, Amsterdam Ave. at 138th St. Monday, June 16, at 8:15. For tickets, call AU 6-0700, Ext. 34.)

GOLDMAN BAND—Edwin Franko Goldman conducting this summer's series of Guggenheim Memorial Concerts. (Central Park Mall. First concert, Wednesday, June 18, at 8:30; thereafter, every Sunday, Monday, Wednes-

Charles Munch, Esq. . . . Distinguished Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

PORTRAIT BY FABIAN BACHRACH

Bachrach

PHOTOGRAPHER OF MEN
54 EAST 52ND ST., NEW YORK
PL 5-6233
AIR CONDITIONED

GOINGS ON ABOUT TOWN

ASSOCIATES, 51 E. 57th St.: August Macke; through June 27. . . . ¶ Group shows at the FEIGL, 601 Madison Ave., at 57th St.; through July 26. Open Saturdays. HELLER, 108 E. 57th St.; through June 28. Open Saturdays. SALMAGUNDI CLUB, 47 Fifth Ave., at 12th St.; through Sept. 5. Weekdays, 12:30 to 6; Sundays, 2 to 6.

NOTE—The semiannual Washington Square Outdoor Art Exhibit is on view daily, starting at noon and continuing until dark; through Sunday, June 15.

MUSEUMS

BROOKLYN MUSEUM, Eastern Parkway—Oils, sculptures, and ceramics by students of the Brooklyn Museum Art School; through June 15. (Weekdays, 10 to 5; Sundays, 1 to 5.)

JEWISH MUSEUM, Fifth Ave. at 92nd St.—Twenty-one Biblical paintings (dated 1948-52) by Ben-Zion, in an exhibition commemorating the Museum's fifth anniversary; through July 31. . . . ¶ Oil paintings, miniatures, and silhouettes of Jewish men and women, done by American artists during the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries; through July 31. (Mondays through Thursdays, 3 to 5; Sundays, 11 to 6.)

METROPOLITAN MUSEUM, Fifth Ave. at 82nd St.—Approximately a hundred lithographs, wood engravings, etchings, and drawings, by Cézanne's contemporaries; through Sept. 1. . . . ¶ "Americans on Land and Sea," lithographs by Currier & Ives from a large group recently presented to the Museum by Miss A. S. Colgate; through Sept. 1. (Weekdays, 10 to 5; Sundays, 1 to 5.)

MUSEUM OF MODERN ART, 11 W. 53rd St.—Works by fifteen contemporary Americans, in a rather grab-bag assortment that ranges from paintings by Edwin Dickinson and Jackson Pollock to "colored-light" compositions by Thomas Wilfred, inventor of the Clavilux, a sort of spectrum organ; through July 27. (Weekdays, noon to 7; Sundays, 1 to 7.)

MUSEUM OF NON-OBJECTIVE PAINTING, 1071 Fifth Ave., at 89th St.—Klee and Kandinsky, among others, are represented in a survey covering the years 1900 to the present, called "Evolution to Non-Objectivity." (Tuesdays through Saturdays, 10 to 6; Sundays, noon to 6.)

MUSIC

BENEFIT CONCERT—Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, with Frank Davis, baritone. A benefit for the Harlem Branch, Y.M.C.A. (Lewisohn Stadium, Amsterdam Ave. at 138th St. Monday, June 16, at 8:15. For tickets, call AU 6-0700, Ext. 34.)

GOLDMAN BAND—Edwin Franko Goldman conducting this summer's series of Guggenheim Memorial Concerts. (Central Park Mall. First concert, Wednesday, June 18, at 8:30; thereafter, every Sunday, Monday, Wednes-

Charles Munch, Esq. . . . Distinguished Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

PORTRAIT BY FABIAN BACHRACH

Bachrach
PHOTOGRAPHER OF MEN
54 EAST 52ND ST., NEW YORK
PL 5-6233
AIR CONDITIONED

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUN 8 - 1952

Morin to Present Concert Honoring Dr. Koussevitsky

A recording of the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky playing the double bass will be a highlight of the WTAG "World's Great Music" program tonight at 11.15.

It will be a Koussevitzky Memorial Concert, prepared and presented by Raymond Morin, host-narrator of the radio series. As a two-fold tribute, the program will mark the first anniversary of the famed musician's death and will commemorate the establishment by him of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation 10 years ago.

Mr. Morin interviewed Dr. Koussevitzky several times during the final decade of the latter's life. He will recall three important phases of Dr. Koussevitzky's career: as virtuoso of the double bass, as champion of the contemporary composer, and as conductor of the Boston Symphony. Listeners will hear recording indicative of the three phases.

Career Highlights

Between musical selections Mr. Morin will give highlights of Dr. Koussevitzky's career. He will recall personal associations and will give the backgrounds of the featured works.

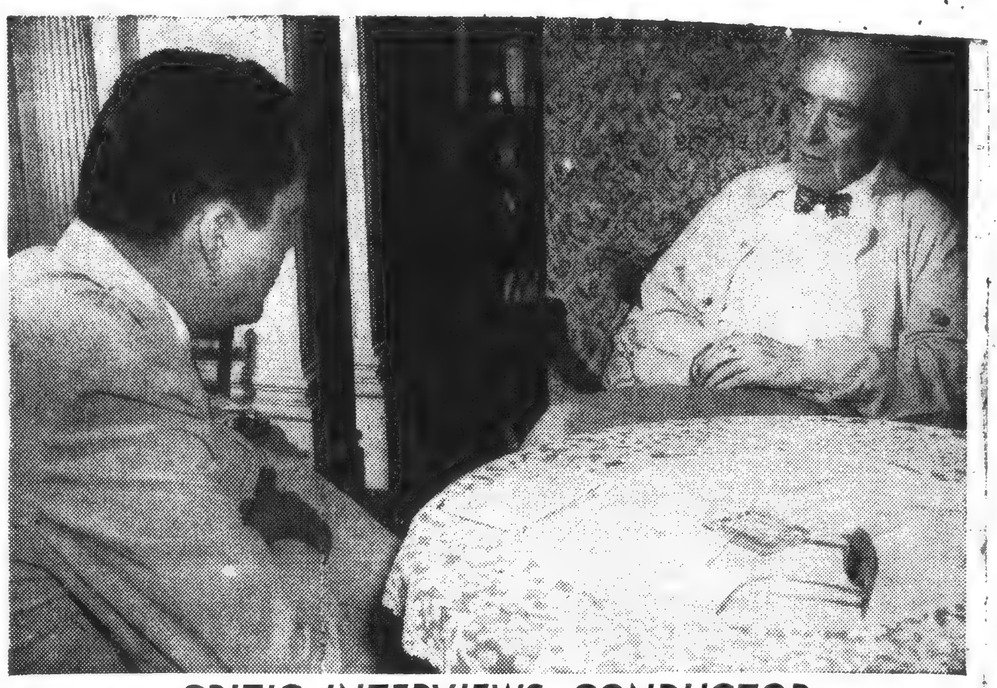
The opening selection will be Koussevitzky's "Valse Miniature" for double bass, played by him and accompanied by Pierre Luboshutz.

The second selection will be Four Sea Interludes from Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," one of the first works commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation. The opera is dedicated to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky, the musician's wife. The interludes are Dawn, Sunday Morning, Moonlight and Storm. They will be played by the London Symphony Orchestra under Sir Malcolm Sargent.

Heard in 'Specialty'

Dr. Koussevitzky will be heard conducting the Boston Symphony in three movements from Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor. The late musician referred to his conducting of Tschaikovsky works as the "specialty of the house." Mr. Morin will tell listeners the reasons for Dr. Koussevitzky's affinity for Tschaikovsky music.

The Koussevitzky Memorial Concert on WTAG is one of a series of such programs being presented across the nation at this time. Mr. Morin can also be heard Saturday afternoons at 3 on the "Masterworks of Music" program, which is an hour and a half in length. Next Saturday's selections are to be announced.



CRITIC INTERVIEWS CONDUCTOR

Raymond Morin (left) is shown conversing with the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the latter's Summer residence, "Seranak," in Lenox. Between musical works on his Koussevitzky Memorial Concert tonight on WTAG, Mr. Morin will reminisce about his meetings with the late musician. The photograph was taken in 1950.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
JUN 6 1952

Brandeis Festival Honors Memory of Kousseritzky

By JOHN WM. RILEY

WALTHAM, June 15—The Brandeis University Festival of the Creative Arts came to a close in the Adolph Ullman Amphitheatre today with a concert of music for string orchestra in the afternoon, a film symposium and closing forum in the evening. Several thousand attended each event.

The Sunday afternoon concert was dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, for he had had an early hand in the framing of musical policy at Brandeis and had assisted the composers represented on the program.

Aaron Copland, famed American composer, was the program's commentator, under the rather silly title of "Discussant." Leonard Bernstein conducted the orchestra, made up of Boston Symphony players.

William Schuman's forthright Symphony for Strings, first performed by Koussevitzky in 1943, opened the program. Ben Weber, a new composer, was represented by Two Pieces for String Orchestra, rather unfocused studies in lyric sound. Benjamin Britten's Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings concluded the first half of the program.

The second half began with Irving Fine's Notturno for Strings and Harp, a warmly conceived and heartfelt tribute to the memory of Koussevitzky, and closed with Mr. Copland's bright and jazzy Concerto for Clarinet and String Orchestra. David Lloyd, tenor, and James Stagliano, horn, were the soloists in the Britten work. David Oppenheim played the solo part of the Copland Concerto.

* * *

Such an event as this Brandeis Festival of the Creative Arts, presented in the fourth year of the university's existence, strikingly shows the vitality, awareness and creative energy which pervade the atmosphere at Brandeis.

The stated purpose of the Festival was one of "inquiry." It was not intended that all questions asked should be answered. Yet it was inevitable that the welter of ideas and arts should produce something of a jumble. But the cumulative effect will undoubtedly be one to provoke thought and consideration of values.

Physically the Festival was an impressive and well managed affair. Traffic moved smoothly. The Ullman Amphitheatre proved an attractive and appropriate setting. Somewhere in the management the contract with the audience was forgotten, as each event began later from a half to three quarters of an hour. This necessitated rather scanty coverage. Undoubtedly there were justifiable reasons.

There were high spots and low spots. The combination of discussion and performance proved unwieldly. The ideas of the various speakers were never integrated. Conclusions were practically impossible, except in the case of Prof. Ludwig Lewisohn, whose brief arrows shot at modern literature hit the mark squarely.

The performance of Stravinsky's "Les Noces" was a noteworthy affair, tarnished only by completely inappropriate settings, costumes and dance. The work of the soloists and chorus was excellent.

Leonard Bernstein's new opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," a musical study of tensions between husband and wife, showed a major talent fussing with a minor thing in jiggly, humorous fashion.

Marc Blitzstein's new version of the late Kurt Weil's "The Threepenny Opera" proved a delight. It will be seen on Broadway next season. And the Sunday afternoon concert of contemporary music showed that some of our modern composers—Copland, Fine and Britten, especially—are not afraid to write memorable tunes, and to compose with the heart as well as the head.

Taken altogether, the Festival of Creative Arts, was a provocative and noteworthy event. In other years, when put on with sharper focus and clearer intention, it should become a stimulating affair which will shed light, and warmth as well, on the contemporary arts.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUN 8 - 1952

Brandeis Schedules Koussevitzky Tribute

A concert by members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, in memory of Serge Koussevitzky will be presented next Sunday at Brandeis University as part of the four-day Festival of the Creative Arts. Before his death, Dr. Koussevitzky served as first music consultant to the University.

Aaron Copland will discuss the program, which will feature the first Boston performance of his "Concerto for Clarinet."

Other compositions to be performed include Walter Schuman's "Symphony for Strings"; the premiere of Ben Weber's "Two Pieces for String Orchestra"; "Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings," by Benjamin Britten, and the "Notturno for Strings and Harp," by Irving Fine. The concert will be held in the Adolph Ullman Amphitheatre on the campus.

BOSTON, MASS.
POST
JUN 15 1952

MUSIC

Tribute to Wallace Goodrich

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The late Wallace Goodrich was not given to boasting. Like most important and successful people he let his accomplishments speak for themselves. But I do recall hearing him say, with pardonable satisfaction, that at approximately the same time he had been made director of the New England Conservatory, a warden at the Church of the Advent and president of his golf club, the Essex County. That he felt, added up to a full and rounded life, as indeed it did. Although his musical achievements were conspicuous, he was far removed from the conventional notion of a musician as a slightly eccentric person, absorbed in his art and indifferent to all else.

* * *

His connection with the Conservatory began in 1888, when, following his graduation from the Newton High School, he became a pupil in organ of Henry M. Dunham and in composition of George W. Chadwick, whom he was later to succeed as director. From 1894-97 he studied in Germany and France and in the latter year he joined the Conservatory faculty as teacher of organ. In 1907 he became dean, and his directorship lasted from 1931-42. He then resigned and was made director emeritus.

* * *

Mr. Goodrich's main musical activities were those of organist, conductor and educator. A composition pupil not only of Chadwick but of Rheinberger in Munich, he composed in a small way, mostly sacred music. His "Ave Maria" for chorus and orchestra (Munich 1895) has been performed at the Conservatory. In 1919 he wrote choral music for a requiem celebration of the Holy Eucharist, excerpts from which were sung at his funeral at the Church of the Advent last Monday. He was a skillful orchestrator and made orchestral settings of songs of Debussy and (quite recently) Strauss. He arranged for organ and orchestra, and most effectively, Franck's organ chorale in B minor. This version was brought out by the Boston Symphony in October, 1921, with the arranger as organist and repeated two years later, when the organist was Marcel Dupre.

* * *

Mr. Goodrich's organ studies were completed with the great Widor in Paris and he was the author of a valuable book, "The Organ in France," one of the reasons why the French government later made him a chevalier of the Legion of Honor. He was organist at Boston's Trinity Church from 1902-07 and previously at the Church of the Messiah. In all he was organ soloist with the Boston Symphony, whose official organist he was from 1897-1900, no less than 18 times. He played Handel's Concerto in D minor at the first pair of concerts in Symphony Hall, in October,

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 16 1952

BLITZSTEIN'S WORK GIVEN AT BRANDEIS

'Threepenny Opera,' in New English Adaptation, Heard at Creative Arts Fete

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WALTHAM, Mass., June 15—Marc Blitzstein has done a truly creative job in preparing his new English adaptation of "The Threepenny Opera," which was performed here last night at Brandeis University's Festival of the Creative Arts.

Only the musical numbers of the new version were played and sung, and Mr. Blitzstein as narrator tied them together with a succinct commentary that might well have been a model for others in a festival which has been long on words. The whole work was announced for production by the City Center Opera for its last spring season and then deferred. If the rest is as good as what was heard last night, "The Threepenny Opera" in this version is a sure shot to enliven the coming season.

"The Beggar's Opera," the source material of "The Threepenny Opera," was written by John Gay and Pepusch, and had its premiere in England more than two centuries ago. In the late Twenties, Kurt Weill and Bert Brecht made an adaptation in Germany, and it was introduced in Berlin in 1928. It ran for years—in and out of Germany.

Brecht took Day's book and made it meaningful for the troubled and yet vibrant Berlin of those days. Weill's music depended as much on his own genius as on Pepusch. He wrote a score that has inventiveness and subtlety, that used jazz idioms with independence and freshness and that imparted an ineffable pathos to a story that is amusing on the surface but that is impregnated with a ferocious bitterness.

Setting of Story Changed

Mr. Blitzstein has not touched the music or instrumentation. He has changed the setting of the story to New York in 1870, and the raffish people inhabit the docks and the low dives in the area. Being a theatre musician of talent, Mr. Blitzstein has seen to it that the words really fit the music. More than that his conception fits that of Weill and Brecht.

Leonard Bernstein conducted a vivid performance. Lotte Lenya, Mr. Weill's widow, who appeared in "The Threepenny Opera" in Berlin in 1928, was the one singer last night who caught the essential fury of the work. David Thomas, Mary Kreste, Jo Sullivan, George Mathews, Anita Ellis and the Brandeis University Glee Club carried out their assignments vigorously.

Since "The Threepenny Opera" is fundamentally a stage piece, it needs sets, costumes and action. Last night it was done in concert style, although the singers tried to create the feeling of the characters they were impersonating. They were somewhat bedeviled by having to work in front of mikes.

Another stunning work on last night's program was Stravinsky's "Les Noces," scored for soloists, chorus, four pianos and percussion. Written between 1917 and 1923, the music, which is still in the composer's Russian vein, has wonderful sonorities and tremendous rhythmic drive. While Mr. Bernstein conducted it in fine style, acoustical problems prevented him from reaching every one in the audience of 3,600 with full impact. Nevertheless, it is clearly a superb score.

The capable soloists were Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and Leon Lishner, and members of the Arthur Fiedler Chorus took part. The pianists were Kalman Novak, Rhea Sadowsky, Allan Sly and Gregory Tucker, and the percussionists were Everett Firth, Charles Smith, Philmore Gilbert, Stanley Spector, Donald Bush and Simon Brown.

Cunningham Prepared Dances

Merce Cunningham of the Brandeis staff prepared choreography for "Les Noces," and he and Natanya Neumann danced the principal roles. It must be said that his dance conception seemed to be far from the barbaric worlds of Stravinsky's music.

Mr. Cunningham also prepared dances for Pierre Schaeffer's "Musique Concrete," which had its first performance in this country. The assignment was much more difficult, if not impossible.

As for "Musique Concrete," it purports to assemble sounds of the natural world on tape or disks and to organize them in some kinds of artistic forms. This is the latest thing in Paris, and it struck this listener as an unmitigated bore.

Perhaps in a sealed chamber such sounds—shouts, tinkles, gasps, clatters, etc.—are amusing. In an open-air amphitheatre, the wind blowing through the trees, the sound of traffic and the clang of a passing train provide overwhelming competition.

This afternoon Mr. Bernstein conducted members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert for string orchestra, played in memory of Serge Koussevitsky.

There were incisive performances of William Schuman's energetic and spacious Symphony for Strings; of Ben Weber's two pieces for string orchestra, which is chromatic, like early Schoenberg and somewhat prevailingly somber in mood; of Benjamin Britten's evocative Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings, with David Lloyd as the tenor and James Stagliano as the horn soloist; of Irving Fine's deeply felt and sensitively wrought Notturno for Strings and Harp, written in memory of Mr. Koussevitsky, and Aaron Copland's imaginative and brilliantly written Concerto for Clarinet, with David Oppenheim as the soloist.

In the talk department, Mr. Copland served this afternoon as "discussant," a favorite word at this festival. Yesterday afternoon at the poetry session, Ludwig Lewisohn was the discussant, and the poets who spoke and read from their works were Karl Shapiro, Peter Viereck and William Carlos Williams. Last night Hans W. Heinsheimer was the discussant. Tonight there was a film symposium and a concluding forum, with Louis deRochemont as a new discussant.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUN 8 - 1952

Morin to Present Concert Honoring Dr. Koussevitsky

A recording of the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky playing the double bass will be a highlight of the WTAG "World's Great Music" program tonight at 11.15.

It will be a Koussevitzky Memorial Concert, prepared and presented by Raymond Morin, host-narrator of the radio series. As a two-fold tribute, the program will mark the first anniversary of the famed musician's death and will commemorate the establishment by him of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation 10 years ago.

Mr. Morin interviewed Dr. Koussevitzky several times during the final decade of the latter's life. He will recall three important phases of Dr. Koussevitzky's career: as virtuoso of the double bass, as champion of the contemporary composer, and as conductor of the Boston Symphony. Listeners will hear recording indicative of the three phases.

Career Highlights

Between musical selections Mr. Morin will give highlights of Dr. Koussevitzky's career. He will recall personal associations and will give the backgrounds of the featured works.

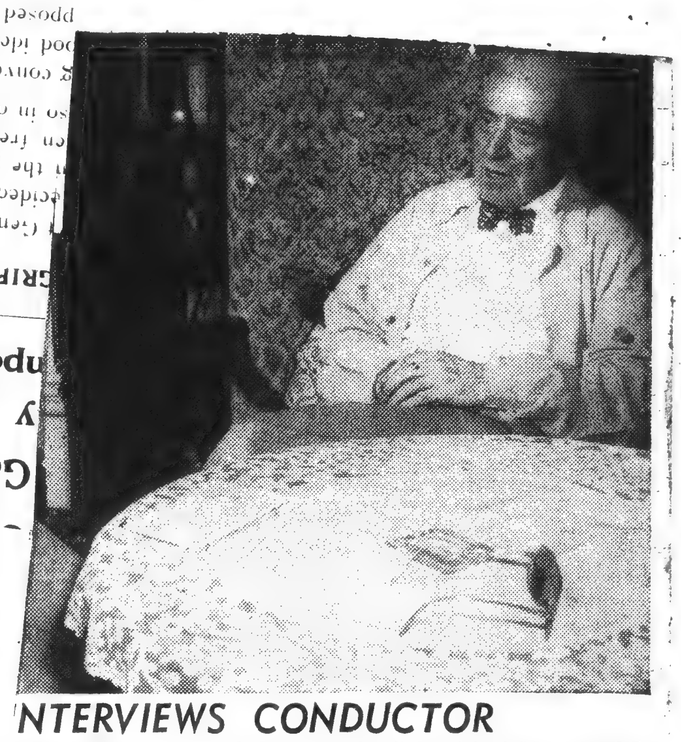
The opening selection will be Koussevitzky's "Valse Miniature" for double bass, played by him and accompanied by Pierre Luboshutz.

The second selection will be Four Sea Interludes from Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," one of the first works commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation. The opera is dedicated to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky, the musician's wife. The interludes are Dawn, Sunday Morning, Moonlight and Storm. They will be played by the London Symphony Orchestra under Sir Malcolm Sargent.

Heard in 'Specialty'

Dr. Koussevitzky will be heard conducting the Boston Symphony in three movements from Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor. The late musician referred to his conducting of Tschaikovsky works as the "specialty of the house." Mr. Morin will tell listeners the reasons for Dr. Koussevitzky's affinity for Tschaikovsky music.

The Koussevitzky Memorial Concert on WTAG is one of a series of such programs being presented across the nation at this time. Mr. Morin can also be heard Saturday afternoons at 3 on the "Masterworks of Music" program, which is an hour and a half in length. Next Saturday's selections are to be announced.



INTERVIEWS CONDUCTOR

...own conversations with Koussevitzky at "Seranak," in ... on his Kous-sevitzky Memorial Concert tonight on WTAG, Mr. Morin will reminisce about his meetings with the late musician. The photograph was taken in 1950.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
JUN 16 1952

Brandeis Festival Honors Memory of Kousseritzky

By JOHN WM. RILEY

WALTHAM, June 15—The Brandeis University Festival of the Creative Arts came to a close in the Adolph Ullman Amphitheatre today with a concert of music for string orchestra in the afternoon, a film symposium and closing forum in the evening. Several thousand attended each event.

The Sunday afternoon concert was dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, for he had had an early hand in the framing of musical policy at Brandeis and had assisted the composers represented on the program.

Aaron Copland, famed American composer, was the program's commentator, under the rather silly title of "Discussant." Leonard Bernstein conducted the orchestra, made up of Boston Symphony players.

William Schuman's Torthright Symphony for Strings, first performed by Koussevitzky in 1943, opened the program. Ben Weber, a new composer, was represented by Two Pieces for String Orchestra, rather unfocused studies in lyric sound. Benjamin Britten's Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings concluded the first half of the program.

The second half began with Irving Fine's Notturno for Strings and Harp, a warmly conceived and heartfelt tribute to the memory of Koussevitzky, and closed with Mr. Copland's bright and jazzy Concerto for Clarinet and String Orchestra. David Lloyd, tenor, and James Stagliano, horn, were the soloists in the Britten work. David Oppenheim played the solo part of the Copland Concerto.

* * *

Such an event as this Brandeis Festival of the Creative Arts, presented in the fourth year of the university's existence, strikingly shows the vitality, awareness and creative energy which pervade the atmosphere at Brandeis.

The stated purpose of the Festival was one of "inquiry." It was not intended that all questions asked should be answered. Yet it was inevitable that the welter of ideas and arts should produce something of a jumble. But the cumulative effect will undoubtedly be one to provoke thought and consideration of values.

Physically the Festival was an impressive and well managed affair. Traffic moved smoothly. The Ullman Amphitheatre proved an attractive and appropriate setting. Somewhere in the management the contract with the audience was forgotten, as each event began later from a half to three quarters of an hour. This necessitated rather scanty coverage. Undoubtedly there were justifiable reasons.

There were high spots and low spots. The combination of discussion and performance proved unwieldly. The ideas of the various speakers were never integrated. Conclusions were practically impossible, except in the case of Prof. Ludwig Lewisohn, whose brief arrows shot at modern literature hit the mark squarely.

The performance of Stravinsky's "Les Noces" was a noteworthy affair, tarnished only by completely inappropriate settings, costumes and dance. The work of the soloists and chorus was excellent.

Leonard Bernstein's new opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," a musical study of tensions between husband and wife, showed a major talent fussing with a minor thing in jiggly, nervous fashion.

Marc Blitzstein's new version of the late Kurt Weil's "The Threepenny Opera" proved a delight. It will be seen on Broadway next season. And the Sunday afternoon concert of contemporary music showed that some of our modern composers—Copland, Fine and Britten, especially—are not afraid to write memorable tunes, and to compose with the heart as well as the head.

Taken altogether, the Festival of Creative Arts, was a provocative and noteworthy event. In other years, when put on with sharper focus and clearer intention, it should become a stimulating affair which will shed light, and warmth as well, on the contemporary arts.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUN 8 - 1952

Brandeis Schedules Koussevitzky Tribute

A concert by members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, in memory of Serge Koussevitzky will be presented next Sunday at Brandeis University as part of the four-day Festival of the Creative Arts. Before his death, Dr. Koussevitzky served as first music consultant to the University.

Aaron Copland will discuss the program, which will feature the first Boston performance of his "Concerto for Clarinet."

Other compositions to be performed include Walter Schuman's "Symphony for Strings"; the premiere of Ben Weber's "Two Pieces for String Orchestra"; "Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings," by Benjamin Britten, and the "Notturno for Strings and Harp," by Irving Fine. The concert will be held in the Adolph Ullman Amphitheatre on the campus.

1900. That inaugural program was repeated under Mr. Munich's direction, at the beginning of the 50th Symphony Hall season. The organist then was E. Power Biggs but Mr. Goodrich, present in the audience, was called upon to take a bow, whereupon a lady in my vicinity innocently asked if that was the composer.

* * *

Mr. Goodrich was a sound rather than a sensational organist and the same might be said of his conducting. He did not go in for willful and highly personal interpretations and he did not care for them in others. This past Symphony season he took particular delight in the performances under Monteux and Ansermet. His own conducting experience was long and varied. It began at the Stadt Theatre in Leipsig. In 1901 he founded Boston's Choral Art Society and directed it for six years. He was conductor of the Worcester Festival for five seasons (1902-07) and of the Cecilia Society of Boston for the ensuing three years.

* * *

When the Boston Opera Company was organized in 1908 Mr. Goodrich was entrusted with the task of training the orchestra. The company began its five-year career in 1909 and Mr. Goodrich was a member of the conducting staff for the first three seasons, making his debut in "Faust" on Dec. 2, 1909. His other operas were "Lakme," "La Boheme," "Rigoletto," "Mignon," "Hansel and Gretel," Converse's "The Sacrifice" (world premiere) and "The Pipe of Desire," which had been brought out under his direction in Jordan Hall and became, in 1916, the first American opera to be mounted by the Met. To this list may be added the Delibes ballet "Coppelia."

His final appearances as conductor of opera were in 1925 and '26. The first of those years the Conservatory put on at the Opera House a performance of "Hansel and Gretel" and followed it the next season with "Mme. Butterfly," both operas being sung in English. For the title roles professional singers were engaged, but members of the faculty and of the student body sang the other parts. These were real performances, with a full orchestra, that of the Conservatory, and all the proper accessories. I recall them both with distinct pleasure.

The concerts of the Conservatory Orchestra were directed by Mr. Goodrich for many years. He made a point of playing unfamiliar works and there was considerable emphasis on French music. He enjoyed conducting excerpts from the dramas of his beloved Wagner, and in this music he had complete authority. Once he was able to collect six harpists and he did the "Rheingold" Prelude, the Entrance of the Gods Into Valhalla, and the Fire Music from "Walkuere" with the full instrumentation, rarely encountered in this country.

An excellent linguist Mr. Goodrich preferred to hear the standard operas in their original tongues. He was a member, and an important one, of the Boston Opera Association that brought us first the Chicago Co., and then the Metropolitan. He enjoyed the respect and friendship of scores of operatic notables. Edward Johnson ex-general manager of the Met. was appropriately one of the honorary pallbearers at his funeral. Mr. Goodrich knew opera and loved it. He knew when it was done well and when it was not. He was never taken in by sham in opera or in anything else. A man of his background, his integrity, his strong

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 16 1952

BLITZSTEIN'S WORK GIVEN AT BRANDEIS

'Threepenny Opera,' in New English Adaptation, Heard at Creative Arts Fete

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WALTHAM, Mass., June 15—Marc Blitzstein has done a truly creative job in preparing his new English adaptation of "The Threepenny Opera," which was performed here last night at Brandeis University's Festival of the Creative Arts.

Only the musical numbers of the new version were played and sung, and Mr. Blitzstein as narrator tied them together with a succinct commentary that might well have been a model for others in a festival which has been long on words. The whole work was announced for production by the City Center Opera for its last spring season and then deferred. If the rest is as good as what was heard last night, "The Threepenny Opera" in this version is a sure shot to enliven the coming season.

"The Beggar's Opera," the source material of "The Threepenny Opera," was written by John Gay and Pepusch, and had its premiere in England more than two centuries ago. In the late Twenties, Kurt Weill and Bert Brecht made an adaptation in Germany, and it was introduced in Berlin in 1928. It ran for years—in and out of Germany.

Brecht took Day's book and made it meaningful for the troubled and yet vibrant Berlin of those days. Weill's music depended as much on his own genius as on Pepusch. He wrote a score that has inventiveness and subtlety, that used jazz idioms with independence and freshness and that imparted an ineffable pathos to a story that is amusing on the surface but that is impregnated with a ferocious bitterness.

Setting of Story Changed

Mr. Blitzstein has not touched the music or instrumentation. He has changed the setting of the story to New York in 1870, and the raffish people inhabit the docks and the low dives in the area. Being a theatre musician of talent, Mr. Blitzstein has seen to it that the words really fit the music. More than that his conception fits that of Weill and Brecht.

Leonard Bernstein conducted a vivid performance. Lotte Lenya, Mr. Weill's widow, who appeared in "The Threepenny Opera" in Berlin in 1928, was the one singer last night who caught the essential fury of the work. David Thomas, Mary Kreste, Jo Sullivan, George Mathews, Anita Ellis and the Brandeis University Glee Club carried out their assignments vigorously.

Since "The Threepenny Opera" is fundamentally a stage piece, it needs sets, costumes and action. Last night it was done in concert style, although the singers tried to create the feeling of the characters they were impersonating. They were somewhat bedeviled by having to work in front of mikes.

Another stunning work on last night's program was Stravinsky's "Les Noces," scored for soloists, chorus, four pianos and percussion. Written between 1917 and 1923, the music, which is still in the composer's Russian vein, has wonderful sonorities and tremendous rhythmic drive. While Mr. Bernstein conducted it in fine style, acoustical problems prevented him from reaching every one in the audience of 3,600 with full impact. Nevertheless, it is clearly a superb score.

The capable soloists were Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and Leon Lishner, and members of the Arthur Fiedler Chorus took part. The pianists were Kalman Novak, Rhea Sadowsky, Allan Sly and Gregory Tucker, and the percussionists were Everett Firth, Charles Smith, Philmore Gilbert, Stanley Spector, Donald Bush and Simon Brown.

Cunningham Prepared Dances

Merce Cunningham of the Brandeis staff prepared choreography for "Les Noces," and he and Natanya Neumann danced the principal roles. It must be said that his dance conception seemed to be far from the barbaric worlds of Stravinsky's music.

Mr. Cunningham also prepared dances for Pierre Schaeffer's "Musique Concrete," which had its first performance in this country. The assignment was much more difficult, if not impossible.

As for "Musique Concrete," it purports to assemble sounds of the natural world on tape or disks and to organize them in some kinds of artistic forms. This is the latest thing in Paris, and it struck this listener as an unmitigated bore.

Perhaps in a sealed chamber such sounds—shouts, tinkles, gasps, clatters, etc.—are amusing. In an open-air amphitheatre, the wind blowing through the trees, the sound of traffic and the clang of a passing train provide overwhelming competition.

This afternoon Mr. Bernstein conducted members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert for string orchestra, played in memory of Serge Koussevitsky.

There were incisive performances of William Schuman's energetic and spacious Symphony for Strings; of Ben Weber's two pieces for string orchestra, which is chromatic, like early Schoenberg and somewhat prevailingly somber in mood; of Benjamin Britten's evocative Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings, with David Lloyd as the tenor and James Stagliano as the horn soloist; of Irving Fine's deeply felt and sensitively wrought Notturno for Strings and Harp, written in memory of Mr. Koussevitsky, and Aaron Copland's imaginative and brilliantly written Concerto for Clarinet, with David Oppenheim as the soloist.

In the talk department, Mr. Copland served this afternoon as "discussant," a favorite word at this festival. Yesterday afternoon at the poetry session, Ludwig Lewisohn was the discussant, and the poets who spoke and read from their works were Karl Shapiro, Peter Viereck and William Carlos Williams. Last night Hans W. Heinsheimer was the discussant. Tonight there was a film symposium and a concluding forum, with Louis deRochemont as a new discussant.

[246]

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUN 8 - 1952

Morin to Present Concert Honoring Dr. Koussevitsky

A recording of the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky playing the double bass will be a highlight of the WTAG "World's Great Music" program tonight at 11.15.

It will be a Koussevitzky Memorial Concert, prepared and presented by Raymond Morin, host-narrator of the radio series. As a two-fold tribute, the program will mark the first anniversary of the famed musician's death and will commemorate the establishment by him of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation 10 years ago.

Mr. Morin interviewed Dr. Koussevitzky several times during the final decade of the latter's life. He will recall three important phases of Dr. Koussevitzky's career: as virtuoso of the double bass, as champion of the contemporary composer, and as conductor of the Boston Symphony. Listeners will hear recording indicative of the three phases.

Career Highlights

Between musical selections Mr. Morin will give highlights of Dr. Koussevitzky's career. He will recall personal associations and will give the backgrounds of the featured works.

The opening selection will be Koussevitzky's "Valse Miniature" for double bass, played by him and accompanied by Pierre Luboshutz.

The second selection will be Four Sea Interludes from Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," one of the first works commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation. The opera is dedicated to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky, the musician's wife. The interludes are Dawn, Sunday Morning, Moonlight and Storm. They will be played by the London Symphony Orchestra under Sir Malcolm Sargent.

Heard in 'Specialty'

Dr. Koussevitzky will be heard conducting the Boston Symphony in three movements from Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E Minor. The late musician referred to his conducting of Tschaikovsky works as the "specialty of the house." Mr. Morin will tell listeners the reasons for Dr. Koussevitzky's affinity for Tschaikovsky music.

The Koussevitzky Memorial Concert on WTAG is one of a series of such programs being presented across the nation at this time. Mr. Morin can also be heard Saturday afternoons at 3 on the "Masterworks of Music" program, which is an hour and a half in length. Next Saturday's selections are to be announced.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
JUN 6 1952

Brandeis Festival Honors Memory of Kousseritzky

By JOHN WM. RILEY

WALTHAM, June 15—The Brandeis University Festival of the Creative Arts came to a close in the Adolph Ullman Amphitheatre today with a concert of music for string orchestra in the afternoon, a film symposium and closing forum in the evening. Several thousand attended each event.

The Sunday afternoon concert was dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, for he had had an early hand in the framing of musical policy at Brandeis and had assisted the composers represented on the program.

Aaron Copland, famed American composer, was the program's commentator, under the rather silly title of "Discussant." Leonard Bernstein conducted the orchestra, made up of Boston Symphony players.

William Schuman's Forthright Symphony for Strings, first performed by Koussevitzky in 1943, opened the program. Ben Weber, a new composer, was represented by Two Pieces for String Orchestra, rather unfocused studies in lyric sound. Benjamin Britten's Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings concluded the first half of the program.

The second half began with Irving Fine's Notturno for Strings and Harp, a warmly conceived and heartfelt tribute to the memory of Koussevitzky, and closed with Mr. Copland's bright and jazzy Concerto for Clarinet and String Orchestra. David Lloyd, tenor, and James Stagliano, horn, were the soloists in the Britten work. David Oppenheim played the solo part of the Copland Concerto.

★ ★ ★

Such an event as this Brandeis Festival of the Creative Arts, presented in the fourth year of the university's existence, strikingly shows the vitality, awareness and creative energy which pervade the atmosphere at Brandeis.

The stated purpose of the Festival was one of "inquiry." It was not intended that all questions asked should be answered. Yet it was inevitable that the welter of ideas and arts should produce something of a jumble. But the cumulative effect will undoubtedly be one to provoke thought and consideration of values.

Physically the Festival was an impressive and well managed affair. Traffic moved smoothly. The Ullman Amphitheatre proved an attractive and appropriate setting. Somewhere in the management the contract with the audience was forgotten, as each event began later from a half to three quarters of an hour. This necessitated rather scanty coverage. Undoubtedly, there were justifiable reasons.

There were high spots and low spots. The combination of discussion and performance proved unwieldly. The ideas of the various speakers were never integrated. Conclusions were practically impossible, except in the case of Prof. Ludwig Lewisohn, whose brief arrows shot at modern literature hit the mark squarely.

The performance of Stravinsky's "Les Noces" was a noteworthy affair, tarnished only by completely inappropriate settings, costumes and dance. The work of the soloists and chorus was excellent.

Leonard Bernstein's new opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," a musical study of tensions between husband and wife, showed a major talent fussing with a minor thing in jiggly, nervous fashion.

Marc Blitzstein's new version of the late Kurt Weil's "The Threepenny Opera" proved a delight. It will be seen on Broadway next season. And the Sunday afternoon concert of contemporary music showed that some of our modern composers—Copland, Fine and Britten, especially—are not afraid to write memorable tunes, and to compose with the heart as well as the head.

Taken altogether, the Festival of Creative Arts, was a provocative and noteworthy event. In other years, when put on with sharper focus and clearer intention, it should become a stimulating affair which will shed light, and warmth as well, on the contemporary arts.

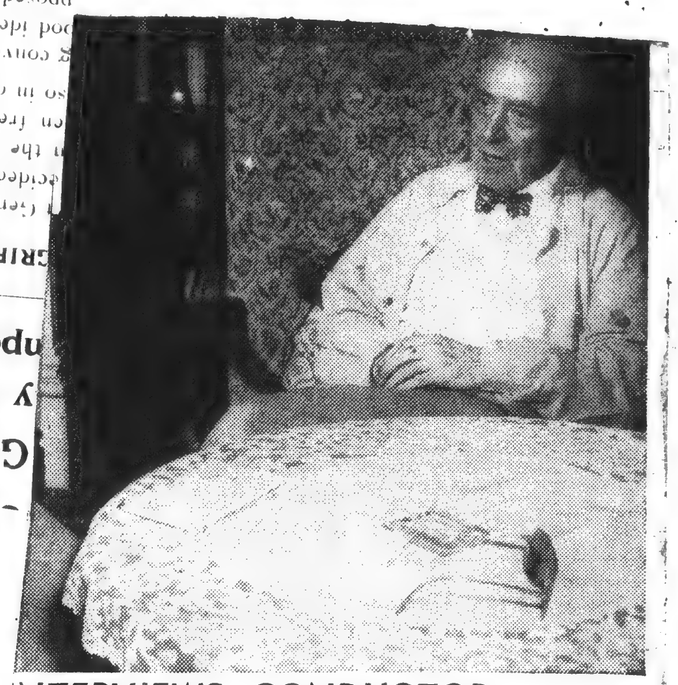
This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUN 8 - 1952

Brandeis Schedules Koussevitzky Tribute

A concert by members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, in memory of Serge Koussevitzky will be presented next Sunday at Brandeis University as part of the four-day Festival of the Creative Arts. Before his death, Dr. Koussevitzky served as first music consultant to the University.

Aaron Copland will discuss the program, which will feature the first Boston performance of his "Concerto for Clarinet."

Other compositions to be performed include Walter Schuman's "Symphony for Strings"; the premiere of Ben Weber's "Two Pieces for String Orchestra"; "Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings," by Benjamin Britten, and the "Notturno for Strings and Harp," by Irving Fine. The concert will be held in the Adolph Ullman Amphitheatre on the campus.



INTERVIEWS CONDUCTOR

...town conversations Koussevitzky at "Seranak," in ...on his Kous-sevitzky Memorial Concert tonight on WTAG, Mr. Morin will reminisce about his meetings with the late musician. The photograph was taken in 1950.

...1900. That inaugural program was repeated, under Mr. Munich's direction, at the beginning of the 50th Symphony Hall season. The organist then was E. Power Biggs, but Mr. Goodrich, present in the audience, was called upon to take a bow, whereupon a lady in my vicinity innocently asked if that was the composer.

* * *

Mr. Goodrich was a sound rather than a sensational organist and the same might be said of his conducting. He did not go in for willful and highly personal interpretations and he did not care for them in others. This past Symphony season he took particular delight in the performances under Monteux and Ansermet. His own conducting experience was long and varied. It began at the Stadt Theatre in Leipsig. In 1901 he founded Boston's Choral Art Society and directed it for six years. He was conductor of the Worcester Festival for five seasons (1902-07) and of the Cecilia Society of Boston for the ensuing three years.

* * *

When the Boston Opera Company was organized in 1908 Mr. Goodrich was entrusted with the task of training the orchestra. The company began its five-year career in 1909 and Mr. Goodrich was a member of the conducting staff for the first three seasons, making his debut in "Faust" on Dec. 2, 1909. His other operas were "Lakme," "La Boheme," "Rigoletto," "Mignon," "Hansel and Gretel," Converse's "The Sacrifice" (world premiere) and "The Pipe of Desire," which had been brought out under his direction in Jordan Hall and became, in 1916, the first American opera to be mounted by the Met. To this list may be added the Delibes ballet "Coppelia."

His final appearances as conductor of opera were in 1925 and '26. The first of those years the Conservatory put on at the Opera House a performance of "Hansel and Gretel" and followed it the next season with "Mme. Butterfly," both operas being sung in English. For the title roles professional singers were engaged, but members of the faculty and of the student body sang the other parts. These were real performances, with a full orchestra, that of the Conservatory, and all the proper accessories. I recall them both with distinct pleasure.

The concerts of the Conservatory Orchestra were directed by Mr. Goodrich for many years. He made a point of playing unfamiliar works and there was considerable emphasis on French music. He enjoyed conducting excerpts from the dramas of his beloved Wagner, and in this music he had complete authority. Once he was able to collect six harpists and he did the "Rheingold" Prelude, the Entrance of the Gods Into Valhalla, and the Fire Music from "Walkuere" with the full instrumentation, rarely encountered in this country.

An excellent linguist Mr. Goodrich preferred to hear the standard operas in their original tongues. He was a member, and an important one, of the Boston Opera As... that brought us first the ... then the Metro... respect...

...and well-founded convictions, was an enormous asset to the community. We regret his passing but we can be grateful that he was spared us for so long. We will not see another like him.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 16 1952

BLITZSTEIN'S WORK GIVEN AT BRANDEIS

'Threepenny Opera,' in New English Adaptation, Heard at Creative Arts Fete

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WALTHAM, Mass., June 15—Marc Blitzstein has done a truly creative job in preparing his new English adaptation of "The Threepenny Opera," which was performed here last night at Brandeis University's Festival of the Creative Arts.

Only the musical numbers of the new version were played and sung, and Mr. Blitzstein as narrator tied them together with a succinct commentary that might well have been a model for others in a festival which has been long on words. The whole work was announced for production by the City Center Opera for its last spring season and then deferred. If the rest is as good as what was heard last night, "The Threepenny Opera" in this version is a sure shot to enliven the coming season.

"The Beggar's Opera," the source material of "The Threepenny Opera," was written by John Gay and Pepusch, and had its premiere in England more than two centuries ago. In the late Twenties, Kurt Weill and Bert Brecht made an adaptation in Germany, and it was introduced in Berlin in 1928. It ran for years—in and out of Germany.

Brecht took Day's book and made it meaningful for the troubled and yet vibrant Berlin of those days. Weill's music depended as much on his own genius as on Pepusch. He wrote a score that has inventiveness and subtlety, that used jazz idioms with independence and freshness and that imparted an ineffable pathos to a story that is amusing on the surface but that is impregnated with a ferocious bitterness.

Setting of Story Changed

Mr. Blitzstein has not touched the music or instrumentation. He has changed the setting of the story to New York in 1870, and the raffish people inhabit the docks and the low dives in the area. Being a theatre musician of talent, Mr. Blitzstein has seen to it that the words really fit the music. More than that his conception fits that of Weill and Brecht.

Leonard Bernstein conducted a vivid performance. Lotte Lenya, Mr. Weill's widow, who appeared in "The Threepenny Opera" in Berlin in 1928, was the one singer last night who caught the essential fury of the work. David Thomas, Mary Kreste, Jo Sullivan, ...rge Mathews, Anita Ellis and ... Brandeis University Glee Club ...ried out their assignments ...rously.

Since "The Threepenny Opera" is fundamentally a stage piece, it needs sets, costumes and action. Last night it was done in concert style, although the singers tried to create the feeling of the characters they were impersonating. They were somewhat bedeviled by having to work in front of mikes.

Another stunning work on last night's program was Stravinsky's "Les Noces," scored for soloists, chorus, four pianos and percussion. Written between 1917 and 1923, the music, which is still in the composer's Russian vein, has wonderful sonorities and tremendous rhythmic drive. While Mr. Bernstein conducted it in fine style, acoustical problems prevented him from reaching every one in the audience of 3,600 with full impact. Nevertheless, it is clearly a superb score.

The capable soloists were Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and Leon Lishner, and members of the Arthur Fiedler Chorus took part. The pianists were Kalman Novak, Rhea Sadowsky, Allan Sly and Gregory Tucker, and the percussionists were Everett Firth, Charles Smith, Philmore Gilbert, Stanley Spector, Donald Bush and Simon Brown.

Cunningham Prepared Dances

Merce Cunningham of the Brandeis staff prepared choreography for "Les Noces," and he and Natanya Neumann danced the principal roles. It must be said that his dance conception seemed to be far from the barbaric worlds of Stravinsky's music.

Mr. Cunningham also prepared dances for Pierre Schaeffer's "Musique Concrete," which had its first performance in this country. The assignment was much more difficult, if not impossible.

As for "Musique Concrete," it purports to assemble sounds of the natural world on tape or disks and to organize them in some kinds of artistic forms. This is the latest thing in Paris, and it struck this listener as an unmitigated bore.

Perhaps in a sealed chamber such sounds—shouts, tinkles, gasps, clatters, etc.—are amusing. In an open-air amphitheatre, the wind blowing through the trees, the sound of traffic and the clang of a passing train provide overwhelming competition.

This afternoon Mr. Bernstein conducted members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert for string orchestra, played in memory of Serge Koussevitsky.

There were incisive performances of William Schuman's energetic and spacious Symphony for Strings; of Ben Weber's two pieces for string orchestra, which is chromatic, like early Schoenberg and somewhat prevailingly somber in mood; of Benjamin Britten's evocative Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings, with David Lloyd as the tenor and James Stagliano as the horn soloist; of Irving Fine's deeply felt and sensitively wrought Notturno for Strings and Harp, written in memory of Mr. Koussevitsky, and Aaron Copland's imaginative and brilliantly written Concerto for Clarinet, with David Oppenheim as the soloist.

In the talk department, Mr. Copland served this afternoon as "discussant," a favorite word at this festival. Yesterday afternoon at the poetry session, Ludwig Lewisohn was the discussant, and the poets who spoke and read from their works were Karl Shapiro, Peter Viereck and William Carlos Williams. Last night Hans W. Heinsheimer was the discussant. Tonight there was a film symposium and a concluding forum, with Louis deRochemont as a new discussant.

Times - June 25th 1952

TH

Petrillo Bans Recordings Abroad By Members; Rodzinski Defies Him

Continued From Page 1

Angeles, who was planning to make some records for Capitol with an orchestra in Paris. Notified by both his local and by the national office, he too, canceled his plans.

Mr. Rodzinski's commitment also was with Remington. He was engaged to make records with the Vienna Ton Kuensteler Orchestra. He went abroad last December. In February, according to Remington officials, he received the following cablegram from Mr. Petrillo:

"American dispatches indicate you intend making records with foreign musicians. This is contrary to your obligations as a member of the American Federation of Musicians. If you make these records, you will be placing your membership in the American Federation in jeopardy."

Mr. Rodzinski made the records in March. Whether the union will prevent him from conducting the Seattle Symphony in March, his next commitment here, remains to be seen. This week he is conducting for the Maggio Fiorentino, Florence, Italy.

Mr. Petrillo was not reached yesterday. It was said he was "en route" from the union's convention, which took place in Santa Barbara, Calif., between June 9 and 12.

Resolution 30, brought before that convention with the approval of the resolutions committee, was as follows:

"To prohibit symphony conductors from recording with foreign orchestras when recordings are sold in conjunction with American recordings."

The delegates did not adopt the resolution, but referred it to the president, Mr. Petrillo, and his board, for action.

The confederation confirmed that it was trying to prevent American conductors from bypassing American orchestras by conducting abroad, but the authority for the move against them was problematical. One belief was that it was a new interpretation of an old law. Other spokesmen were vague.

The authority has not been invoked in all cases. Several conductors with European commitments stood by after they had learned that some colleagues had been warned against conducting abroad. When they received no word from Mr. Petrillo, they decided it was safe to go ahead.

Instrumentalists, too, have gone ahead with scheduled recording commitments without interference. London Records reports that as recently as two months ago the union gave clearance for the violinist, Ruggiero Ricci, to go to England to make recordings with orchestras.

Mr. Rodzinski is managed by National Concert and Artists Corporation. Siegfried Hearst, who handles the conductors of that company, said he had heard nothing directly from Mr. Roszinski about the matter, but he challenged the justice of preventing American citizens from making recordings abroad.

"What is Mr. Petrillo's authority?" he asked. "If he could stop the evil of making so many recordings abroad, he would be remedying the situatoin for American musicians. But as it is, if Americans don't do the conducting. Europeans will. And American citizens are deprived of making a living."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUN 8 - 1952

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY MEMORIAL CONCERT

Boston, June 7—A concert in memory of Serge Koussevitzky will be presented Sunday afternoon, the 8th, as part of the four-day Festival of the Creative Arts at Brandeis University, Waltham. Before his death, Dr. Koussevitzky served as first music consultant to the university. Conducted by Leonard Bernstein, who is director of the festival, and professor of music at Brandeis, the concert will feature members of the Boston Symphony.

Aaron Copland will serve as discussant of the program, in which there will be the first Boston performance of his Concerto for Clarinet. The program will illustrate a number of trends in the concerted instrumental music of our time, by composers who at one time or another were commissioned by the Koussevitsky Foundation. Instituted at Tanglewood in the summer of 1942, in memory of Mme. Koussevitsky, the Foundation gives grants for specific works.

Sea Bird Wings Atlantic to Set Homing Record

A new trans-Atlantic flight ... made history.

Departing from the Inter... ternational Airport here on ... 3, at 8:15 a.m., a lone occupa... began a journey of 3,500 ... across an unknown ocean ...

Twelve days and 18 ho... taking off this sea bird ... size of a crow, and named the Manx Shearwater, landed in ... burrow on the Island of Skokholm in Wales—establishing a startling world record in the homing experiments with these birds.

Released by Rosario Mazzeo, personnel manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a member of the board of directors of the Massachusetts Audubon Society, this bird had been taken on Wednesday, June 1.

Leonard M. Lockley, ... ist on the Manx Shear... engaged the assistance of Mr. Mazzeo in bringing two birds to America for release.

The Manx Shearwater, so called because it formerly nested on the Island of Man, is a sociable bird, breeding in colonies in ground burrows. It has a pigeonlike aspect with long black hooked beak, smooth black head, wings and tail, with snow white underparts. It multiplies chiefly on the islands and headlands in Scotland, Ireland, Wales, and the Scilly Isles.

Mr. Lockley's experiments have found that these birds often travel as much as 600 miles during the nesting season, just to visit their favorite feeding places where they survive off of a fare of small fish.

Since 1933 Mr. Lockley has been extensively banding Shearwaters on Skokholm and conducting experiments to unearth new information about the distances which these birds travel and their instinct to return to a home burrow.

From France, Faroe Islands, and from the Swiss Alps, many of these birds have returned to Skokholm. Until this Manx's recent flight from Boston, a trip from Venice made in 14 days was Mr. Lockley's record for a Shearwater—940 land miles or 3,500 sea miles distant.

Petrillo Bans Recordings Abroad By Members; Rodzinski Defies Him

By ROSS PARMENTER

The American Federation of Musicians is trying to curtail the making of records abroad by American musicians, especially conductors. How far the union's campaign is likely to go is not yet known, but already Arthur Rodzinski has placed his membership in jeopardy by disregarding the ban of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Labor union. Four other widely known musicians have canceled recording commitments in Europe rather than run into trouble.

Artie Shaw, the band leader and clarinetist, was the first to cancel his plans. He went to England last November to make eighteen sides for Decca, but when the union frowned on the project he decided to abandon the recording sessions.

André Kostelanetz was the next to change his plans. He was committed to make some records for Columbia with the Royal Philharmonic in London. However, on April 3 an official of Local 802, the New York branch of the federation, telephoned Columbia Records here and presented the union's point of view. The company cabled to Mr. Kostelanetz in London the same day, advising him not to go ahead with the recording.

H. Arthur Brown, conductor of the Tulsa Philharmonic, received his notice through his local in Tulsa. He had a commitment of a year's standing to go to Paris to make some records to be released in this country by Remington Records. When the local told him members of the federation were prohibited from recording abroad, he decided to abide by the ruling.

The fourth musician was Leonard Pennario, pianist of Los

Continued on Page 24, Column 2

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUN 7 - 1952

Wallace Goodrich, Boston Conductor

Ex-Head of Conservatory of New England

BOSTON, June 6.—Wallace Goodrich, eighty-one, director-emeritus of the New England Conservatory of Music and one of the most distinguished musicians of this section, died today at his home, 137 Marlboro St.

As organist, choral, operatic and symphonic conductor, he was with the conservatory for more than forty years until his retirement in 1942. He studied organ with Henry Morton Durham and Charles Marie Widor, the great French virtuoso, and composition with the eminent New England composer George Whitfield Chadwick. He was a student at the Royal Academy of Music in Munich.

Returning to the United States in 1897, he joined the faculty at the Conservatory. Mr. Goodrich was organist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1897 to 1900. In 1901, at the age of thirty, he founded the Boston Choral Art Society, meanwhile serving as organist and choirmaster from Boston's historic Trinity Church. Mr. Goodrich directed the Boston Opera society from 1909 to 1912.

He was a member of the Somerset, St. Botolph and Tavern Clubs of Boston, the Essex County Club, a fellow in the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, secretary of the Joint Commission on Church Music for the Protestant Episcopal Church, a trustee of the Paderewski and Frank Huntington Beebe Scholarship Funds and a director of the Boston Opera Association.

He was married in 1904 to Madeleine Boardman, daughter of a Boston real estate broker, and they had two children, Madeleine B. Goodrich, who died, and John Wallace Goodrich.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 8 - 1952

WALLACE GOODRICH, HEADED MUSIC SCHOOL

BOSTON, June 7 (AP)—Wallace Goodrich, director emeritus of the New England Conservatory of Music, died last night at his home after a long illness. His age was 81.

After forty-five years aiding in the development of the conservatory, Mr. Goodrich retired in 1942 as a trustee and executive committee adviser.

He was born in Newton, and studied here and abroad until 1897 when he joined the faculty of the conservatory. He became dean in 1907 and he was made director in 1931.

Surviving are his widow, the former Madeleine Boardman, and a son, John W.

From 1902 to 1909 Mr. Goodrich was organist of Trinity Church, Boston. In 1901 he had founded the Choral Art Society of Boston, of which he was conductor until 1907. He also had been choral conductor of the Worcester County Musical Association, organist at concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, 1897-1900, conductor of the Cecilia Society of Boston, a conductor for the Boston Opera Company and a trustee of the Paderewski and Frank Huntington Beebe Funds. His clubs included the Somerset, Tavern and Essex County.

'Photograms' by John Brook

Display of Abstractions Made by New Technique

By Dorothy Adlow

Photograms by John Brook will be on view until July 12 at the Courtyard Silversmiths.

A photographer by vocation, John Brook has evolved a technique by which he produces a new manner of abstraction. A photogram, he explains, is a design made directly on photographic paper without the use of a negative previously exposed in a camera.

"The only elements involved are a source of light, an object or objects to interrupt, reflect, or distort the light in such a way as to make a design, and a sheet of photographic paper." Since there is no negative, there can be no duplicates. The photographic paper, after exposure and processing, becomes the photogram.

* * *

A sheet of photographic paper exposed to an unobstructed light source will turn completely black when developed. If an opaque or semiopaque object is placed on the paper during exposure, the shapes of the objects will appear in white against a dark background when developed. If the light source is covered with an irregularly transparent object, the flaws in the glass will distort the light and produce a pattern. Mr. Brook has ingeniously projected light that has been reflected from a smooth metal surface. The resulting design produces an illusion of plastic form.

Some photograms have color, the result of "solarization" or exposure to light during development. The color originates in the process.

* * *

The prints in the exhibition reflect not only conditioned light, but also Mr. Brook's imagination. He is deviceful in producing spirals of shadow, scarves of light, layer upon layer of exiguous essences. Some photograms assume clear definition; some are mottled, marbleized, streaked. They elude description, and Mr. Brook does not affix a title to distinguish one from another.

The process lends itself to infinite variation, and it may through deviceful and patient manipulation produce novel designs. For Mr. Brook it provides a creative diversion from the exactions of portrait photography in which he is expert.

* * *

[247]

This Clipping From
Radio & Television Retailing
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL - 1952

Phono Record News

RCA Victor has a release by opera singer David Poleri. But instead of opera, Poleri's debut disc is One Night of Love, backed by Some Day My Heart Will Awake. His big voice and romantic appeal are obvious in both these popular tunes. A really fine record has been released on the RCA Victor label. Perry Como and Eddie Fisher join talents on that beautiful oldie Maybe and do a really bang-up job. This one is sure-fire. Backing is a new composition by Hoagy Carmichael entitled Watermelon Weather. Of all the interpretations of this tune, the boys have about the best. Great news from RCA is the fact that Barclay Allen, after being laid up due to a serious accident, is again recording. His first offering on the Victor label is After You've Gone, with Cherokee as coupling. Both sides feature a multi-piano arrangement. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its noted French conductor, Charles Munch, has returned from a trip to Europe after taking part in the "Twentieth Century Exposition of the Arts of Democratic Nations." The most recent RCA Victor recordings by the Boston Symphony are the Symphony No. 103 in E Flat by Haydn, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C, Op. 21. Charles Munch Conducts French Music is the title of the latest Boston Symphony album on RCA Red Seal label. The works of Ravel (Rapsodie Espagnole, La Valse), Lalo (Le Roi D'ys: Overture), Berlioz (Beatrice and Benedict: Overture), and Saint-Saens (La Princesse Jaune, Op. 30: Overture) are featured. RCA's album offerings also include the Peer Gynt Suite No. 1, Op. 46, and No. 2, Op. 55 by Grieg, played by the Boston Pops Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler, and Sigmund Romberg Dinner Music played by Romberg and his Orchestra.

CAPITOL Records has completed its production of Jerome Kern's ever-fresh Broadway musical, Roberta. Singing the beloved Kern melodies in the album are stars Gordon MacRae, Lucille Norman and Anne Triola. MacRae's operatic voice (underemphasized because of his "crooner" beginning) comes to light in such tunes as The Touch of Your Hand, Lovely to Look At, and Smoke Gets In Your Eyes. The album, available in all three speeds, was in preparation for six weeks, although actual recording time was seven hours.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JUL 10 1952

Boston Orchestra Wins French Prize

The first prize of the French Academy of Recordings (Academie du Disque Francais) has been awarded to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its permanent conductor, Charles Munch, for their RCA Victor album of Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, Op. 98, it was disclosed in an announcement from Paris.

The awarding of the prize, highest honor conferred by the Academy, will be publicly proclaimed in the French National Assembly.

The Boston Symphony recently concluded its first European engagement, during which it was conducted by both Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux.

This Clipping From TULSA, OKLA.
TRIBUNE
JUL 10 1952

Boston Symphony Captures Prize

The first prize of the French Academy of Recordings (Academie du Disque Francais) has been awarded to the Boston Symphony orchestra and its permanent conductor, Charles Munch, for their album of Brahms' Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Op. 98, it was disclosed in an announcement from Paris.

The awarding of the prize, highest honor conferred by the academy, will be publicly proproclaimed in the French National Assembly.

The Boston Symphony recently concluded its first European engagement, during which it was conducted by both Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux. The orchestra took part in the Paris festival of "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century" and packed concert halls in The Hague, Amsterdam, Brussels, Frankfort, Berlin, Strasbourg, Metz, Lyon, Paris, Bordeaux, and London.

* * *

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
JUL 13 1952

COVETED PRIZE—The first prize of the French Academy of Recordings (Academie du Disque Francais) has been awarded to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its permanent conductor, Charles Munch, for their RCA Victor album of Brahms' "Symphony No. 4 in E Minor," it was disclosed in an announcement from Paris.

* * *

This Clipping From
NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER-DISPATCH
1952

The New Records

Mozart and Modern Works Are Represented on Disks

By CHARLES HOOFNAGLE

Gina Bachauer, pianist from Greece, who was heard in Norfolk last season, is presented by RCA Victor in a recording of Mozart's "Coronation" Concerto, No. 26 in D (K.537) with Alec Sherman conducting the New London Orchestra. This is the next to the last of Mozart's piano concertos. It is played with good style and well recorded. The concerto derives its name from the fact that it was first performed during the coronation of Leopold II in 1790.

BACHAUER

Rachmaninoff Opera

The first recording of the complete second act of Rachmaninoff's opera, "The Miserly Knight," on a 12-inch Columbia LP, features Cesare Siepi, young Italian basso of the Metropolitan Opera, and Thomas Scherman conducting the Little Orchestra Society, which will be heard here next season in the Community Concert Series.

The entire act is a monolog, in which the miser gloats over his gold and extols its power. Siepi sings with a rich and expressive tone, and is given fine support by the orchestra. On the reverse side the Little Orchestra Society plays Arensky's Variations on a theme by Tchaikovsky.

Schoenberg Monodrama

Another Columbia "first" is a recording of Schoenberg's "Erwarttung" with Dorothy Dow as soprano soloist in the only role and the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York playing under Dimitri Mitropoulos in a superb performance. Not everybody wil like this atonal music, but in spite of its difficulties for the unfamiliar listener it has its compensations.

Although composed as far back as 1909, it had its American premiere only last November with the same soloist and orchestra as on the present record. It is a commendable undertaking on Columbia's part, and to make the pioneering aspect complete it is coupled with the first recording of Ernst Krenek's Symphonic Elegy for String Orchestra, also by Mitropoulos and the Philharmonic. Krenek is a Schoenberg disciple.

Two Milhaud Works

A complete recording of all 12 dances in Milhaud's "Saudades do Brasil" Suite for piano features Zadel Skolovsky, young Canadian-American pianist, who is heard on the reverse side of the 12-inch LP Columbia in Milhaud's Concerto No. 4 for Piano and Orchestra with Darius Milhaud himself conducting the Orchestra National de la Radiodiffusion.

The 12 dances are fairly familiar although they probably have not been recorded before on a single disk. They are spicy and enjoyable. The concerto for the most part is fast moving but does not seem particularly inspired upon the first hearings. Skolovsky is an unusually accomplished pianist, however.

French Orchestral Music

Two collections of French orchestral music have been put by RCA Victor and Mercury Classics.

The first features Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Ravel's "La Valse" and "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Lalo's Overture to "Le Roi d'Ys," Saint-Saens' Overture to "La Princess Jaune" and Berlioz' Overture to "Beatrice and Benedict." Most of these have appeared before as singles, but they make a nice combination, beautifully played.

Antal Dorati conducts the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra in the Mercury Olympian release. This includes Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture, Ravel's "Pavane pour une Infante defunte" and "Alborado del Gracioso" and Debussy's Three Nocturnes—"Nuages," "Fetes" and "Sirenes."

The recordings of the Minneapolis Orchestra again is impressive, but Dorati's readings are rather stiff and insensitive for these composers. The recordings may give pleasure to many, however, for their dynamic range and instrumental blending.

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 11 1952

The Record Column

By DONALD STEINFIRST

* * *

Bruch—Concerto No. 1 in G Minor, Op. 26—Yehudi Menuhin, violinist, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch —Victor LM 122.

★★ Excessive vibrato mars the opening movement of the Bruch as played by Menuhin. The slow section is better adapted to the artist, but there is some faulty intonation in the concluding section.

[018]

This Clipping From
Radio & Television Retailing
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL -, 1952

Phono Record News

RCA Victor has a release by opera singer David Poleri. But instead of opera, Poleri's debut disc is One Night of Love, backed by Some Day My Heart Will Awake. His big voice and romantic appeal are obvious in both these popular tunes. A really fine record has been released on the RCA Victor label. Perry Como and Eddie Fisher join talents on that beautiful oldie Maybe and do a really bang-up job. This one is sure-fire. Backing is a new composition by Hoagy Carmichael entitled Watermelon Weather. Of all the interpretations of this tune, the boys have about the best. Great news from RCA is the fact that Barclay Allen, after being laid up due to a serious accident, is again recording. His first offering on the Victor label is After You've Gone, with Cherokee as coupling. Both sides feature a multi-piano arrangement. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its noted French conductor, Charles Munch, has returned from a trip to Europe after taking part in the "Twentieth Century Exposition of the Arts of Democratic Nations." The most recent RCA Victor recordings by the Boston Symphony are the Symphony No. 103 in E Flat by Haydn, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C, Op. 21. Charles Munch Conducts French Music is the title of the latest Boston Symphony album on RCA Red Seal label. The works of Ravel (Rapsodie Espagnole, La Valse), Lalo (Le Roi D'ys: Overture), Berlioz (Beatrice and Benedict: Overture), and Saint-Saens (La Princesse Jaune, Op. 30: Overture) are featured. RCA's album offerings also include the Peer Gynt Suite No. 1, Op. 46, and No. 2, Op. 55 by Grieg, played by the Boston Pops Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler, and Sigmund Romberg Dinner Music played by Romberg and his Orchestra.

CAPITOL Records has completed its production of Jerome Kern's ever-fresh Broadway musical, Roberta. Singing the beloved Kern melodies in the album are stars Gordon MacRae, Lucille Norman and Anne Triola. MacRae's operatic voice (underemphasized because of his "crooner" beginning) comes to light in such tunes as The Touch of Your Hand, Lovely to Look At, and Smoke Gets In Your Eyes. The album, available in all three speeds, was in preparation for six weeks, although actual recording time was seven hours.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
JUL 10 1952

Boston Orchestra Wins French Prize

The first prize of the French Academy of Recordings (Academie du Disque Francais) has been awarded to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its permanent conductor, Charles Munch, for their RCA Victor album of Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, Op. 98, it was disclosed in an announcement from Paris.

The awarding of the prize, highest honor conferred by the Academy, will be publicly proclaimed in the French National Assembly.

The Boston Symphony recently concluded its first European engagement, during which it was conducted by both Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux.

This Clipping From
TULSA, OKLA.
TRIBUNE
JUL 10 1952

Boston Symphony Captures Prize

The first prize of the French Academy of Recordings (Academie du Disque Francais) has been awarded to the Boston Symphony orchestra and its permanent conductor, Charles Munch, for their album of Brahms' Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Op. 98, it was disclosed in an announcement from Paris.

The awarding of the prize, highest honor conferred by the academy, will be publicly proproclaimed in the French National Assembly.

The Boston Symphony recently concluded its first European engagement, during which it was conducted by both Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux. The orchestra took part in the Paris festival of "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century" and packed concert halls in The Hague, Amsterdam, Brussels, Frankfort, Berlin, Strasbourg, Metz, Lyon, Paris, Bordeaux, and London.

* * *

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
JUL 13 1952

COVETED PRIZE—The first prize of the French Academy of Recordings (Academie du Disque Francais) has been awarded to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its permanent conductor, Charles Munch, for their RCA Victor album of Brahms' "Symphony No. 4 in E Minor," it was disclosed in an announcement from Paris.

* * *

This Clipping From
NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER-DISPATCH
JUL 1- 1952

The New Records

Mozart and Modern Works Are Represented on Disks

By CHARLES HOOFNAGLE

Gina Bachauer, pianist from Greece, who was heard in Norfolk last season, is presented by RCA Victor in a recording of Mozart's "Coronation" Concerto, No. 26 in D (K.537) with Alec Sherman conducting the New London Orchestra. This is the next to the last of Mozart's piano concertos. It is played with good style and well recorded. The concerto derives its name from the fact that it was first performed during the coronation of Leopold II in 1790.

BACHAUER

Rachmaninoff Opera

The first recording of the complete second act of Rachmaninoff's opera, "The Miserly Knight," on a 12-inch Columbia LP, features Cesare Siepi, young Italian basso of the Metropolitan Opera, and Thomas Scherman conducting the Little Orchestra Society, which will be heard here next season in the Community Concert Series.

The entire act is a monolog, in which the miser gloats over his gold and extols its power. Siepi sings with a rich and expressive tone, and is given fine support by the orchestra. On the reverse side the Little Orchestra Society plays Arensky's Variations on a theme by Tchaikovsky.

Schoenberg Monodrama

Another Columbia "first" is a recording of Schoenberg's "Erwarttung" with Dorothy Dow as soprano soloist in the only role and the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York playing under Dimitri Mitropoulos in a superb performance. Not everybody wil like this atonal music, but in spite of its difficulties for the unfamiliar listener it has its compensations.

Although composed as far back as 1909, it had its American premiere only last November with the same soloist and orchestra as on the present record. It is a commendable undertaking on Columbia's part, and to make the pioneering aspect complete it is coupled with the first recording of Ernst Krenek's Symphonic Elegy for String Orchestra, also by Mitropoulos and the Philharmonic. Krenek is a Schoenberg disciple.

Two Milhaud Works

A complete recording of all 12 dances in Milhaud's "Saudades do Brasil" Suite for piano features Zadel Skolovsky, young Canadian-American pianist, who is heard on the reverse side of the 12-inch LP Columbia in Milhaud's Concerto No. 4 for Piano and Orchestra with Darius Milhaud himself conducting the Orchestra National de la Radiodiffusion.

The 12 dances are fairly familiar although they probably have not been recorded before on a single disk. They are spicy and enjoyable. The concerto for the most part is fast moving but does not seem particularly inspired upon the first hearings. Skolovsky is an unusually accomplished pianist, however.

French Orchestral Music

Two collections of French orchestral music have been put by RCA Victor and Mercury Classics.

The first features Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Ravel's "La Valse" and "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Lalo's Overture to "Le Roi d'Ys," Saint-Saens' Overture to "La Princess Jaune" and Berlioz' Overture to "Beatrice and Benedict." Most of these have appeared before as singles, but they make a nice combination, beautifully played.

Antal Dorati conducts the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra in the Mercury Olympian release. This includes Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture, Ravel's "Pavane pour une Infante defunte" and "Alborado del Gracioso" and Debussy's Three Nocturnes—"Nuages," "Fetes" and "Sirenes."

The recordings of the Minneapolis Orchestra again is impressive, but Dorati's readings are rather stiff and insensitive for these composers. The recordings may give pleasure to many, however, for their dynamic range and instrumental blending.

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 11 1952

The Record Column

By DONALD STEINFIRST

Bruch—Concerto No. 1 in G Minor, Op. 26—Yehudi Menuhin, violinist, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch —Victor LM 122.

★★ Excessive vibrato mars the opening movement of the Bruch as played by Menuhin. The slow section is better adapted to the artist, but there is some faulty intonation in the concluding section.

This Clipping From
TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
JUL 14 1952

Atlantic Record

At the Skokholm Island Bird Observatory off Britain's Welsh coast, a pigeon-sized male Manx Shearwater (Puffinus puffinus puffinus) was taking his tour of duty on the family nest last week, none the worse for an epic round-trip Atlantic crossing. A month before, Puffinus had been delivered to Rosario Mazzeo, staff manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and an amateur ornithologist, who was flying back to the U.S. from a European visit. Next day, at Boston's Logan International Airport, Mazzeo released Puffinus from his cage, and launched him out over the water for the return flight.

Leo Litwin

PUFFINUS IN HAND*
An epic round trip.

Though Manx Shearwaters usually migrate roughly north-and-south, Puffinus did not hesitate. He turned east over Boston Harbor and headed straight for home and eggs. Ahead, by the shortest route, lay nearly 3,300 miles of the North Atlantic. Puffinus, if he followed the custom of his species, rested occasionally on the water or stopped to refuel with plankton, small water creatures found just below the ocean's surface. But Puffinus wasted no time. He finished the homing trip in 12¾ days, averaging about 250 miles per day.†

Back in his nest Puffinus found that he had made it just in time. One of the three eggs in the nest, watched over by his mate in his absence, had already hatched; the others were on the point of hatching.

* Held by Amateur Ornithologist Rosario Mazzeo.

† Army-trained homing pigeons have been clocked at speeds up to 70 m.p.h. on short flights, have flown 500 miles in one day.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 13 1952

COMMENT IN BRIEF

BRUCKNER: Symphony in D minor (Posth); Henk Spruit and the Concert Hall Symphony Orchestra (Concert Hall). An early work composed in 1869, this Bruckner symphony has been revived sporadically in Germany but has never taken root here. The disk is naturally a "must" for Brucknerites. Others quite possibly can survive without it. Faithful interpretation and clear recording.

CHOPIN: Sonatas Nos. 2 in B flat minor and 3 in B minor; played by Guiomar Novaes, pianist (Vox). Both of these were previously available on separate disks. Vox has brought them together on a single. The Brazilian artist's playing fully deserves all the nice things that have been said about it.

FAURE: Requiem; Les Chanteurs de Lyon, soloists, orchestra conducted by Bourmauck (Columbia). A reissue of the famous 1939 set, and a beautiful, sensitive performance of an equivalently beautiful, sensitive work. The recording still retains life; there is little in the transfer to LP to hint at its age.

HAYDN: Music for Soprano and Orchestra, including Cantilena' pro Adventu in A and Scena di Berenice; Gertraud Hopf, soprano, Vienna Symphony, under Meinhard von Zallinger (Haydn Society). Fine singing which reveals Haydn's gifts as an operatic composer.

MILHAUD: Piano Concerto No. 4; Saudades do Brazil; Zadel Skolovsky and Orchestra National de la Radiodiffusion conducted by Milhaud (Columbia). The concerto has two of the busiest fast movements in the literature; the slow one is a study in dissonance. It's all very facile and rather empty. Skolovsky plays it superbly; he must have wrists of steel. In the solo Brazilian pieces he brings out their frequently charming salon content.

RAVEL: Rapsodie Espagnole and La Valse; SAINT-SAENS: Overture to La Princess Jaune; BERLIOZ: Beatrice and Benedict Overture; LALO: Overture to Le Roi D'Ys; The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Charles Munch (Victor). Mr. Munch in his element, with the Bostonians sounding like a million dollars.

SCARLATTI: Sonatas (L. 10, 142, 223, 292, 294, 315, 325 and 382); Kathleen Long, piano (London, ten-inch). Clear, thoughtful performances in excellent taste.

This Clipping From
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY
JUL 19 1952

DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTION

THÉÂTRE DES CHAMPS-ELYSÉES,
15 AVENUE MONTAIGNE, PARIS
JUNE 23, 1952

To the Editors, The New Yorker,
DEAR SIRS:

IN the Letter from Paris in your issue of May 31, 1952, which dealt with the international exposition here called "Masterpieces of the XXth Century," an unfortunate misstatement of fact occurred at the very end of the article. In speaking of the first performance in Paris of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of the orchestra's permanent musical director, Mr. Charles Münch, there appeared the words "Münch was taken back to the Paris bosom with applause because in 1946 he was harshly treated as a supposed collaborationist."

As chairman of the organizing committee for the exposition, and as Secretary General of the Congress for Cultural Freedom, the agency that put on the exposition, I wish to state that to the certain knowledge of my associates and myself Mr. Münch was never "harshly treated" in France as a "supposed collaborationist," because he never was one. Everyone here knows that Mr. Münch, like many other French musicians, became active in the Front National de la Résistance in 1943; hence the term "supposed collaborationist" cannot under any circumstances be applied to him. In 1948, Mr. Münch toured the United States as conductor of the Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion Française at the express invitation of the French government, and in 1949, he left France to take his present position with the Boston Symphony. Although your correspondent uses the qualification "supposed," my associates and I believe that the sentence may be definitely misleading to the American reader.

Yours very sincerely,
NICOLAS NABOKOV

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST
JUL 17 1952

Paris at Home: Or Do You Have To Get Over To Europe This Year?

By HUBERT ROUSSEL

SEVERAL of us who live in Houston have resisted the temptation to go to Paris this summer—which is very fortunate for the gas company and other organizations that like to have somebody around. It has taken a certain confidence in our own judgment to remain calmly at home, for the rest of our citizens have kept the high seas and the air lanes hot since early June in a mass movement to Europe, with Paris as their ultimate goal. It is strictly the thing this year, if you have a few thousand and a passion to do what everybody does—and of course that classifies just about all of us here.

ROUSSEL

"The City of Light," notwithstanding its somewhat diminished radiance these days, remains the most attractive of European capitals to Americans in pursuit of a cultural patina—and it should. Paris has a magnificent tradition of art. But the clever French, who are masters of tourist propaganda, are never content with the normal appeal of their chief city in these difficult times of reconstructing the national economy, and every summer since the end of the war they have laid themselves out with special zeal to intrigue the imagination of les gens Americain de richesse.

★ ★ ★

THIS year they have been more than ordinarily brilliant in devising elaborate and impressive titles for their cultural fetes and other rallies designed chiefly to fetch trade from abroad. It is a fine exhibit of showmanship. The tourist folders are full of the listings of these fancy affairs, where the Western traveler is invited to look upon art at its highest and perhaps furnish himself with un peu de Francais for the purpose of overwhelming his friends when he gets home.

But the big doings in Paris, the thing that is fetching the American smart set and the one that our local voyagers are all buzzing about as they prepare to depart, is a venture known as the International Exposition of Arts of the Twentieth Century, which is under the auspices of the Congress for the Freedom of Culture. You could hardly get more than that into a title; it is calculated to give any American culture-hunter a touch of the buck ague.

★

THE four big guns in the concert halls are Igor Stravinsky, Bruno Walter, Pierre Monteux and Charles Munch. Stravinsky is conducting his own compositions with exciting results; Monteux and Walter are visiting the Paris symphony organizations as guest-directors, and Munch's appearance with his Boston Symphony Orchestra was apparently one of the festival's most stunning events.

Well, it is rather pleasant to think that within three or four seasons we have entertained all these distinguished musicians in Houston. They have been with our orchestra, or they have appeared in our halls with other units of note. They have played for us many of the compositions they are giving in Paris, and so we have known the same thrills that are causing the Parisians and tourists to leap into the Seine with enthusiasm.

There is a lot of ballet going on—and what are the balletomanes cheering? Among the productions that have stirred up talk I find Antony Tudor's "Pillar of Fire" and "Lilac Garden," together with several of the noted creations of Balanchine which, although they are being offered in Paris by the New York City Center company, we have frequently seen in our own halls, either as staged by Ballet Theatre or the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo.

★ ★ ★

However, since a few of us have elected or been forced to pass up this concentration on art, at the risk of leaving a wide gap in our comprehension of esthetic values in general, let us try as we are able to see just what we are missing. Perhaps when we add it all up we shall find that living in Houston is not too different from living in Paris, in point of what we can see and hear for the good of our spirits.

The International Exposition in the French city consists largely of events that are taking place in its major theatres. They are chiefly of a musical nature, being divided into concerts, opera and ballet, with a good many lectures and other supplementary features thrown in. The dramatic stage seems a little obscured. And the thing that strikes you, in going over the latest reports on the festival, is how familiar we are with the majority of the personalities and a good many of the productions about which all the fuss is being made.

★

Virgil Thomson, another of whose we know very well, has made a little stir on the fringes of the general excitement as conductor of his own opera on Gertrude Stein's text "The Saints in Three Acts." Judging from the comment of the Paris press, we were lucky to have had Mr Thomson present some of his other musical inventions.

Benjamin Britten's opera, "Billy Budd," was a success in the Paris theatre, and we think we need worry a little about missing a production of Alban Berg's "Wozzeck," which seems to have gone down with the dilettantes who think that every atonal work is a masterpiece.

As for the recitalists and symphony soloists active in Paris, it is hard to find one who doesn't visit us here every season or two from Szeryng to Nicole Henriot. They are all longtime friends.

This doesn't pretend to be a story of everything that is currently happening in the Paris theatre. Some elements of the festival over there are definitely of a special variety, and we may envy those lucky enough to be present. But your tired conclusion, on reading the reports, is that it isn't so bad to live in Houston, either. Just about everything comes to this "festival of everything," and we are on our way to getting the best

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
CHRONICLE
JUL 27 1952

Boston Symphony Gets Award Of French Academy

New York, July 26.—The first prize of the French Academy of Recordings (Academie du Disque Francais) has been awarded to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its permanent conductor, Charles Muench, for their R. C. A. Victor album of Brahms' Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Op. 98, it was announced from Paris.

The awarding of the prize, highest honor conferred by the academy, will be publicly proclaimed in the French national assembly.

The Boston Symphony recently concluded its first European engagement, during which it was conducted by both Charles Muench and Pierre Monteaux. The orchestra took part in the Paris festival of "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century" and played to packed concert halls in The Hague, Amsterdam, Brussels, Frankfort, Berlin, Metz, Strasbourg, Lyon, Paris, Bordeaux, and London.

This Clipping From
TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
JUL 14 1952

Atlantic Record

At the Skokholm Island Bird Observatory off Britain's Welsh coast, a pigeon-sized male Manx Shearwater (Puffinus puffinus puffinus) was taking his tour of duty on the family nest last week, none the worse for an epic round-trip Atlantic crossing. A month before, Puffinus had been delivered to Rosario Mazzeo, staff manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and an amateur ornithologist, who was flying back to the U.S. from a European visit. Next day, at Boston's Logan International Airport, Mazzeo released Puffinus from his cage, and launched him out over the water for the return flight.

Leo Litwin

PUFFINUS IN HAND*
An epic round trip.

Though Manx Shearwaters usually migrate roughly north-and-south, Puffinus did not hesitate. He turned east over Boston Harbor and headed straight for home and eggs. Ahead, by the shortest route, lay nearly 3,300 miles of the North Atlantic. Puffinus, if he followed the custom of his species, rested occasionally on the water or stopped to refuel with plankton, small water creatures found just below the ocean's surface. But Puffinus wasted no time. He finished the homing trip in 12¾ days, averaging about 250 miles per day.†

Back in his nest Puffinus found that he had made it just in time. One of the three eggs in the nest, watched over by his mate in his absence, had already hatched; the others were on the point of hatching.

* Held by Amateur Ornithologist Rosario Mazzeo.

† Army-trained homing pigeons have been clocked at speeds up to 70 m.p.h. on short flights, have flown 500 miles in one day.

This Clipping From
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY
JUL 19 1952

DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTION

THÉÂTRE DES CHAMPS-ELYSÉES,
15 AVENUE MONTAIGNE, PARIS
JUNE 23, 1952

To the Editors, The New Yorker,
DEAR SIRS:

IN the Letter from Paris in your issue of May 31, 1952, which dealt with the international exposition here called "Masterpieces of the XXth Century," an unfortunate misstatement of fact occurred at the very end of the article. In speaking of the first performance in Paris of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of the orchestra's permanent musical director, Mr. Charles Münch, there appeared the words "Münch was taken back to the Paris bosom with applause because in 1946 he was harshly treated as a supposed collaborationist."

As chairman of the organizing committee for the exposition, and as Secretary General of the Congress for Cultural Freedom, the agency that put on the exposition, I wish to state that to the certain knowledge of my associates and myself Mr. Münch was never "harshly treated" in France as a "supposed collaborationist," because he never was one. Everyone here knows that Mr. Münch, like many other French musicians, became active in the Front National de la Résistance in 1943; hence the term "supposed collaborationist" cannot under any circumstances be applied to him. In 1948, Mr. Münch toured the United States as conductor of the Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion Française at the express invitation of the French government, and in 1949, he left France to take his present position with the Boston Symphony. Although your correspondent uses the qualification "supposed," my associates and I believe that the sentence may be definitely misleading to the American reader.

Yours very sincerely,
NICOLAS NABOKOV

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 13 1952

COMMENT IN BRIEF

BRUCKNER: Symphony in D minor (Posth); Henk Spruit and the Concert Hall Symphony Orchestra (Concert Hall). An early work composed in 1869, this Bruckner symphony has been revived sporadically in Germany but has never taken root here. The disk is naturally a "must" for Brucknerites. Others quite possibly can survive without it. Faithful interpretation and clear recording.

CHOPIN: Sonatas Nos. 2 in B flat minor and 3 in B minor; played by Guiomar Novaes, pianist (Vox). Both of these were previously available on separate disks. Vox has brought them together on a single. The Brazilian artist's playing fully deserves all the nice things that have been said about it.

FAURE: Requiem; Les Chanteurs de Lyon, soloists, orchestra conducted by Bourmauck (Columbia). A reissue of the famous 1939 set, and a beautiful, sensitive performance of an equivalently beautiful, sensitive work. The recording still retains life; there is little in the transfer to LP to hint at its age.

HAYDN: Music for Soprano and Orchestra, including Cantilena pro Adventu in A and Scena di Berenice; Gertraud Hopf, soprano, Vienna Symphony, under Meinhard von Zallinger (Haydn Society). Fine singing which reveals Haydn's gifts as an operatic composer.

MILHAUD: Piano Concerto No. 4; Saudades do Brazil; Zadel Skolovsky and Orchestra National de la Radiodiffusion conducted by Milhaud (Columbia). The concerto has two of the busiest fast movements in the literature; the slow one is a study in dissonance. It's all very facile and rather empty. Skolovsky plays it superbly; he must have wrists of steel. In the solo Brazilian pieces he brings out their frequently charming salon content.

RAVEL: Rapsodie Espagnole and La Valse; SAINT-SAENS: Overture to La Princess Jaune; BERLIOZ: Beatrice and Benedict Overture; LALO: Overture to Le Roi D'Ys; The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Charles Munch (Victor). Mr. Munch in his element, with the Bostonians sounding like a million dollars.

SCARLATTI: Sonatas (L. 10, 142, 223, 292, 294, 315, 325 and 382); Kathleen Long, piano (London, ten-inch). Clear, thoughtful performances in excellent taste.

[249]

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST
JUL 17 1952

Paris at Home: Or Do You Have To Get Over To Europe This Year?

By HUBERT ROUSSEL

SEVERAL of us who live in Houston have resisted the temptation to go to Paris this summer—which is rather fortunate for the gas company and other organizations that like to have somebody around. It has taken a certain confidence in our own judgment to remain calmly at home, for the rest of our citizens have kept the high seas and the air lanes hot since early June in a mass movement to Europe, with Paris as their ultimate goal. It is strictly the thing this year, if you have a few thousand and a passion to do what everybody does—and of course that classifies just about all of us here.

ROUSSEL

"The City of Light," notwithstanding its somewhat diminished radiance these days, remains the most attractive of European capitals to Americans in pursuit of a cultural patina—and it should. Paris has a magnificent tradition of art. But the clever French, who are masters of tourist propaganda, are never content with the normal appeal of their chief city in these difficult times of reconstructing the national economy, and every summer since the end of the war they have laid themselves out with special zeal to intrigue the imagination of les gens Americain de richesse.

* * *

THIS year they have been more than ordinarily brilliant in devising elaborate and impressive titles for their cultural fetes and other rallies designed chiefly to fetch trade from abroad. It is a fine exhibit of showmanship. The tourist folders are full of the listings of these fancy affairs, where the Western traveler is invited to look upon art at its highest and perhaps furnish himself with un peu de Francais for the purpose of overwhelming his friends when he gets home.

But the big doings in Paris, the thing that is fetching the American smart set and the one that our local voyagers are all buzzing about as they prepare to depart, is a venture known as the International Exposition of Arts of the Twentieth Century, which is under the auspices of the Congress for the Freedom of Culture. You could hardly get more than that into a title; it is calculated to give any American culture-hunter a touch of the buck ague.

* * *

THE four big guns in the concert halls are Igor Stravinsky, Bruno Walter, Pierre Monteux and Charles Munch. Stravinsky is conducting his own compositions with exciting results; Monteux and Walter are visiting the Paris symphony organizations as guest-directors, and Munch's appearance with his Boston Symphony Orchestra was apparently one of the festival's most stunning events.

Well, it is rather pleasant to think that within three or four seasons we have entertained all these distinguished musicians in Houston. They have been with our orchestra, or they have appeared in our halls with other units of note. They have played for us many of the compositions they are giving in Paris, and so we have known the same thrills that are causing the Parisians and tourists to leap into the Seine with enthusiasm.

There is a lot of ballet going on—and what are the balletomanes cheering? Among the productions that have stirred up talk I find Antony Tudor's "Pillar of Fire" and "Lilac Garden," together with several of the noted creations of Balanchine which, although they are being offered in Paris by the New York City Center company, we have frequently seen in our own halls, either as staged by Ballet Theatre or the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo.

* * *

However, since a few of us have elected or been forced to pass up this concentration of art, at the risk of leaving a wide gap in our comprehension of esthetic values in general, let us try as we are able to see just what we are missing. Perhaps when we add it all up we shall find that living in Houston is not too different from living in Paris, in point of what we can see and hear for the good of our spirits.

The International Exposition in the French city consists largely of events that are taking place in its major theatres. They are chiefly of a musical nature, being divided into concerts, opera and ballet, with a good many lectures and other supplementary features thrown in. The dramatic stage seems a little obscured. And the thing that strikes you, in going over the latest reports on the festival, is how familiar we are with the majority of the personalities and a good many of the productions about which all the fuss is being made.

* * *

Virgil Thomson, another fellow we know very well, has made a little stir on the fringes of the general excitement, as conductor of his own opera on Gertrude Stein's text, "Four Saints in Three Acts." Judging from the comment of the Paris press, we were lucky to have had Mr Thomson interpreting some of his other and less striving inventions.

Benjamin Britten's opera, "Billy Budd," was a cold flop in the Paris theatre, and I don't think we need worry too much about missing a production of Alban Berg's "Wozzeck," which seems to have gone down only with the dilettantes who insist that every atonal work is a masterpiece.

As for the recitalists and symphony soloists active in Paris, it is hard to find one who doesn't visit us here every season or two—from Szigeti to Nicole Henriot. They are all our longtime friends.

This doesn't pretend to be the story of everything that is currently happening in the Paris theatre. Some elements of the festival over there are indeed of a special variety, and we may envy those lucky enough to be present. But your final conclusion, on reading the reports, is that it isn't so bad to live in Houston, either. Just about everything comes to this "center of everything," and we are on our way to getting the rest.

This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEXAS
CHRONICLE
JUL 27 1952

Boston Symphony Gets Award Of French Academy

New York, July 26.—The first prize of the French Academy of Recordings (Academie du Disque Francais) has been awarded to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its permanent conductor, Charles Muench, for their R. C. A. Victor album of Brahms' Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Op. 98, it was announced from Paris.

The awarding of the prize, highest honor conferred by the academy, will be publicly proclaimed in the French national assembly.

The Boston Symphony recently concluded its first European engagement, during which it was conducted by both Charles Muench and Pierre Monteaux. The orchestra took part in the Paris festival of "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century" and played to packed concert halls in The Hague, Amsterdam, Brussels, Frankfort, Berlin, Metz, Strasbourg, Lyon, Paris, Bordeaux, and London.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
JUL 13 1952

OVERSEAS:

Neoteric Was Word For Paris

By VIRGIL THOMSON

PARIS, July 12—The month-long festival, that ran in Paris, entitled "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century," has left behind it lots of talk. Unquestionably it furnished the largest selection of distinguished performances and rare modern works that has been heard together anywhere since the war.

Its musical events alone made up the kind of international season that used to be an annual glory of Paris and that everybody, I am sure, was glad to see return. Night after night the Champs-Elysees Theater was filled, and everybody, for once, paid for his ticket.

Applause ran high; curtain calls were counted into the thirties; both artists and audiences outdid themselves to give each other pleasure and to express thanks.

THE FESTIVAL proved, if nothing else, that the music of our century can be thoroughly self-sufficient and thoroughly successful. Even so recondite a work as the "Socrate" of Erik Satie, rarely heard and never popular, received a full-dress ovation for its performance by Suzanne Danco under the orchestral direction of Darius Milhaud.

Schoenberg's "Erwartung," sung by Irma Kolassi and led by Hans Rosbaud, is still being praised. And Alban Berg's "Wozzeck" seems to have been France's major post-war musical experience. Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde" did not go down so well, I must admit.

William Walton's "Facade," on the other hand, was mightily enjoyed all round. And my own "Four Saints in Three Acts" received a great deal of attention in the press.

THE MUSIC events offered by the festival comprised twenty concert programs, four operas and two ballet troupes.

Other works of the century, presented by arrangement with the festival committee, included De-

George Jean Nathan, whose drama letter usually occupies this space, is now on vacation.

bussy's "Pelleas et Melisande" at the Opera-Comique, Strauss' "Salome" at the Opera, a concert of music by Arthur Honegger (also at the Opera) and an evening at the Old (the Napoleonic) Conservatory of "musique concrete."

This last, the newest of the novelties in Paris, though we have had it at home for some time, is music produced by the manipulation of magnetized tapes and other recording devices, the free composition and distortion of mechanized sounds.

THIRTEEN OF the concerts were orchestral; seven were devoted to smaller scorings. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the orchestra and chorus of the Saint Cecilia Academy in Rome, the Orchestra de la Suisse Romande (Ansermet's orchestra from Geneve and Lausanne) and the R. I. A. S., a radio orchestra from West Berlin, were the massive concert groups imported.

For the lyric stage the Vienna Opera Company, the Royal Opera from Covent Garden and an ANTA production from New York were brought on complete. Vittorio Rieti's "Don Perlimplin" (on a text of Garcia Lorca) was prepared in Paris with Spanish-language singers.

THE SAINT-GUILLAUME chorus from Strasbourg and a smaller singing society from Holland made fine impressions. And along with all these excellent out-of-town units, the chief Paris orchestras and choral groups took part in performing some of the chief works of our century, known and unknown.

(Copyright, 1952, by The New York Herald-Tribune.)

MEET THE CONDUCTOR

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of articles about great conductors to be published in GOOD LISTENING. Next Month — Pierre Monteux.

The Finest AM and FM Radio Programs Scheduled Four Weeks in Advance

JUNE 1952 Single Copy 35c One Year Subscription $3.00

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

When the greatest orchestra in the world and that is what the Boston Orchestra's reputation has been for many years comes to play in London for the first time (on 26 May), then it seems too much like a critic's carping to find the concert on several counts disappointing. But it was not simply that expectation had been keyed too high. Misfortunes in transport delayed the starting time of the concert by an hour, and though the evening papers gave warning of this, many people had an impatient hour's wait; more important, it meant that the orchestra had no opportunity of rehearsing in the Festival Hall, and this, for the first half of the concert, affected their balance and dynamics disastrously. And misfortunes apart the concert was badly planned. The orchestra was coming straight from France, from the 'Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century' celebrations in Paris. The masterpieces they chose to play here were four large, richly-scored French works, and two shorter, but no less richly-scored American pieces. Roussel's 'Bacchus et Ariane' followed hard on Honegger's fifth symphony, and the second suite from 'Daphnis and Chloe' on Debussy's 'La Mer'. Even if the orchestra had played throughout with exquisite delicacy this programme would have become wearisome. They did not until the end play with exquisite delicacy at all, but very noisily indeed. The chief culprit was the leading trumpeter, who, unchecked by Charles Münch, the conductor, upped with his bell whenever he had the chance, and launched a deafening assault on his hearers a quivering, ear-splitting salvo that obliterated the fine playing of his colleagues in the wood-wind and string sections. This was in the first half of the concert: in the second the balance was better adjusted. But it is impossible, after a single hearing in these circumstances, to particularize on the individual timbres of the players: it became plain only that they were brilliant. The actual sum of sound in the Festival Hall was often appalling, and one dreaded the approach of the blood-curdling climaxes. If only the orchestra could have had a rehearsal: for the last item, the 'Daphnis and Chloe' suite, was played most wonderfully. Daybreak was ravishing, the flute solo was played with breath-taking beauty, and the final dance was dazzling. 'Daphnis and Chloe' saved the reputation of the orchestra. From the first strains of the National Anthem they had been exciting: now they were also making beautiful music.

[a55

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
JUL 13 1952

OVERSEAS:

Neoteric Was Word For Paris

By VIRGIL THOMSON

PARIS, July 12—The month-long festival, that ran in Paris, entitled "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century," has left behind it lots of talk. Unquestionably it furnished the largest selection of distinguished performances and rare modern works that has been heard together anywhere since the war.

Its musical events alone made up the kind of international season that used to be an annual glory of Paris and that everybody, I am sure, was glad to see return. Night after night the Champs-Elysees Theater was filled, and everybody, for once, paid for his ticket.

Applause ran high; curtain calls were counted into the thirties; both artists and audiences outdid themselves to give each other pleasure and to express thanks.

THE FESTIVAL proved, if nothing else, that the music of our century can be thoroughly self-sufficient and thoroughly successful. Even so recondite a work as the "Socrate" of Erik Satie, rarely heard and never popular, received a full-dress ovation for its performance by Suzanne Danco under the orchestral direction of Darius Milhaud.

Schoenberg's "Erwartung," sung by Irma Kolassi and led by Hans Rosbaud, is still being praised. And Alban Berg's "Wozzeck" seems to have been France's major post-war musical experience. Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde" did not go down so well, I must admit.

William Walton's "Facade," on the other hand, was mightily enjoyed all round. And my own "Four Saints in Three Acts" received a great deal of attention in the press.

THE MUSIC events offered by the festival comprised twenty concert programs, four operas and two ballet troupes.

Other works of the century, presented by arrangement with the festival committee, included De-

George Jean Nathan, whose drama letter usually occupies this space, is now on vacation.

bussy's "Pelleas et Melisande" at the Opera-Comique, Strauss' "Salome" at the Opera, a concert of music by Arthur Honegger (also at the Opera) and an evening at the Old (the Napoleonic) Conservatory of "musique concrete."

This last, the newest of the novelties in Paris, though we have had it at home for some time, is music produced by the manipulation of magnetized tapes and other recording devices, the free composition and distortion of mechanized sounds.

THIRTEEN OF the concerts were orchestral; seven were devoted to smaller scorings. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the orchestra and chorus of the Saint Cecilia Academy in Rome, the Orchestra de la Suisse Romande (Ansermet's orchestra from Geneve and Lausanne) and the R. I. A. S., a radio orchestra from West Berlin, were the massive concert groups imported.

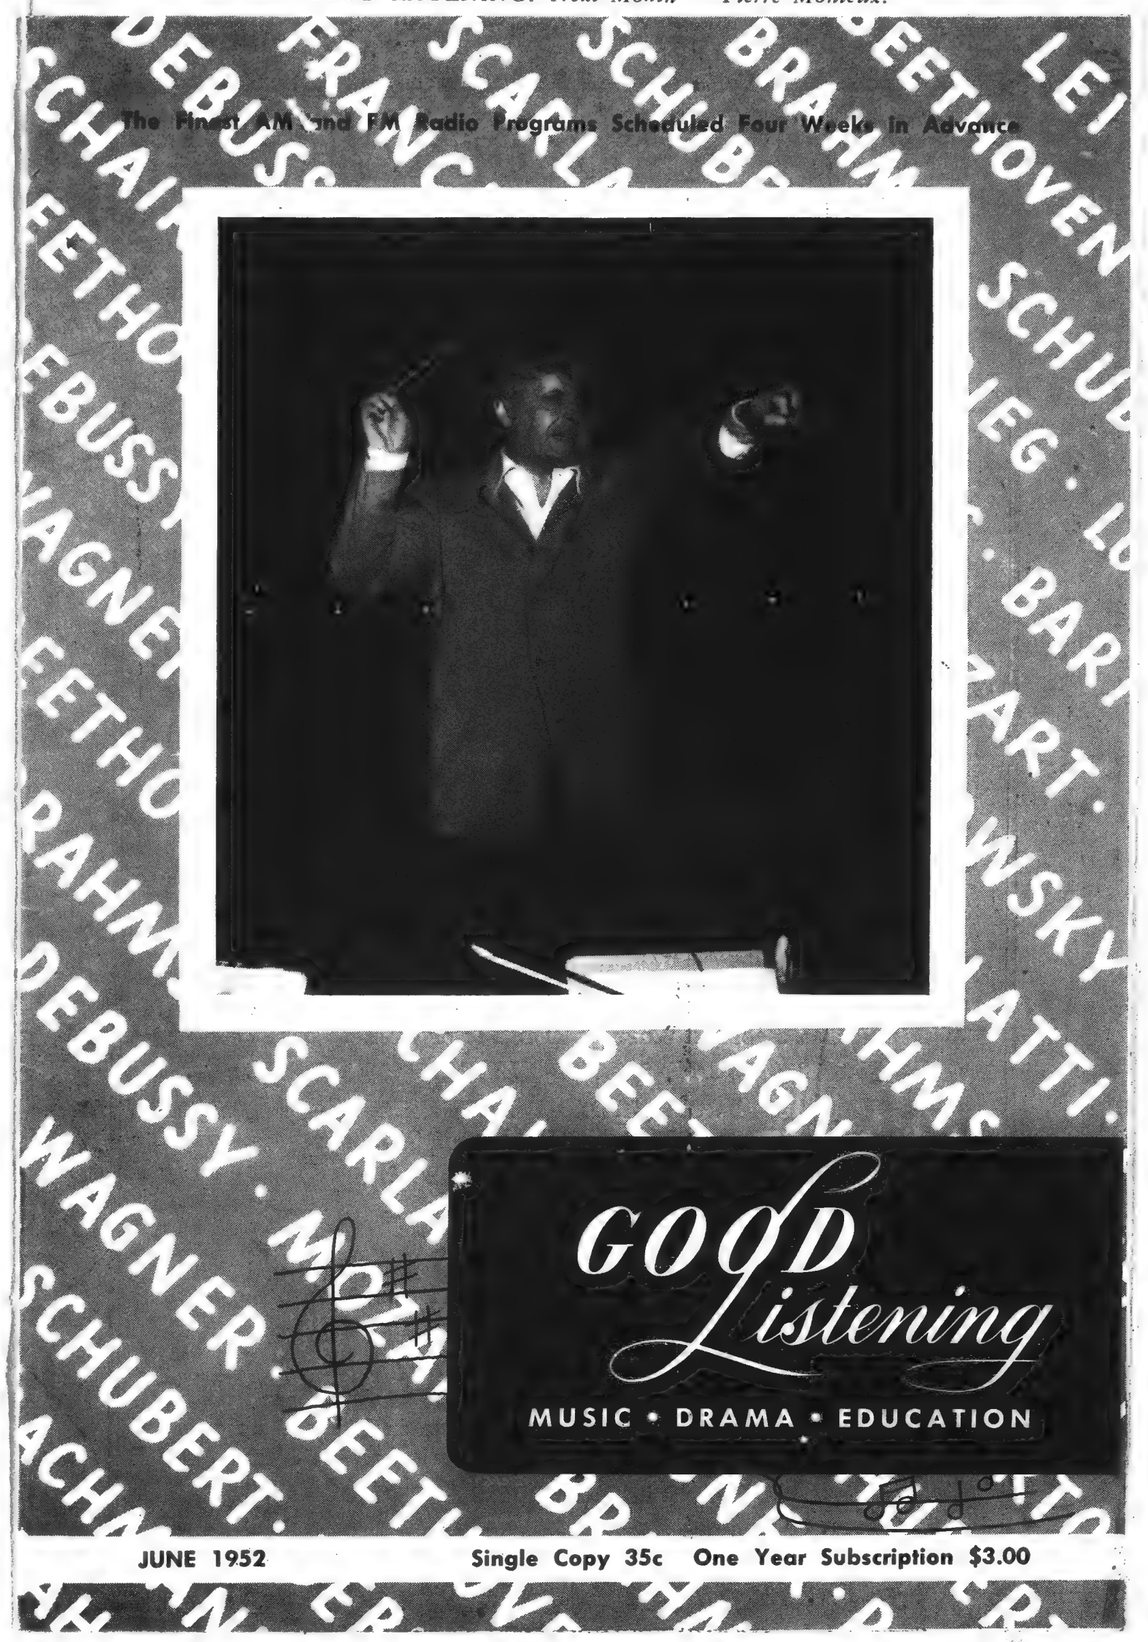
For the lyric stage the Vienna Opera Company, the Royal Opera from Covent Garden and an ANTA production from New York were brought on complete. Vittorio Rieti's "Don Perlimplin" (on a text of Garcia Lorca) was prepared in Paris with Spanish-language singers.

THE SAINT-GUILLAUME chorus from Strasbourg and a smaller singing society from Holland made fine impressions. And along with all these excellent out-of-town units, the chief Paris orchestras and choral groups took part in performing some of the chief works of our century, known and unknown.

(Copyright, 1952, by The New York Herald-Tribune.)

MEET THE CONDUCTOR

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of articles about great conductors to be published in GOOD LISTENING. Next Month — Pierre Monteux.



The Boston Symphony Orchestra

When the greatest orchestra in the world—and that is what the Boston Orchestra's reputation has been for many years—comes to play in London for the first time (on 26 May), then it seems too much like a critic's carping to find the concert on several counts disappointing. But it was not simply that expectation had been keyed too high. Misfortunes in transport delayed the starting time of the concert by an hour, and though the evening papers gave warning of this, many people had an impatient hour's wait; more important, it meant that the orchestra had no opportunity of rehearsing in the Festival Hall, and this, for the first half of the concert, affected their balance and dynamics disastrously. And—misfortunes apart—the concert was badly planned. The orchestra was coming straight from France, from the 'Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century' celebrations in Paris. The masterpieces they chose to play here were four large, richly-scored French works, and two shorter, but no less richly-scored American pieces. Roussel's 'Bacchus et Ariane' followed hard on Honegger's fifth symphony, and the second suite from 'Daphnis and Chloe' on Debussy's 'La Mer'. Even if the orchestra had played throughout with exquisite delicacy this programme would have become wearisome. They did not—until the end—play with exquisite delicacy at all, but very noisily indeed. The chief culprit was the leading trumpeter, who, unchecked by Charles Münch, the conductor, upped with his bell whenever he had the chance, and launched a deafening assault on his hearers—a quivering, ear-splitting salvo that obliterated the fine playing of his colleagues in the wood-wind and string sections. This was in the first half of the concert; in the second the balance was better adjusted. But it is impossible, after a single hearing in these circumstances, to particularize on the individual timbres of the players; it became plain only that they were brilliant. The actual sum of sound in the Festival Hall was often appalling, and one dreaded the approach of the blood-curdling climaxes. If only the orchestra could have had a rehearsal: for the last item, the 'Daphnis and Chloe' suite, was played most wonderfully. Daybreak was ravishing, the flute solo was played with breath-taking beauty, and the final dance was dazzling. 'Daphnis and Chloe' saved the reputation of the orchestra. From the first strains of the National Anthem they had been exciting: now they were also making beautiful music.

[a50]

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
JUL 13 1952
OVERSEAS:

OWN and ENJOY

These RCA Victor

OPERA MASTERPIECES

- AIDA — Verdi. (Complete Set). Famous Artists with Orchestra and Chorus of the Opera House, Rome. Tullio Serafin, Conductor.
  WCTC-1 (45 RPM) $24.68 LCT-6400 (33 1/3 RPM) $22.88
- CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA — Mascagni. (Complete Set). Pietro Mascagni conducting. Famous Artists and Members of La Scala Orchestra and Chorus, Milan.
  WCT-33 (45 RPM) $13.76 LCT-6000 (33 1/3 RPM) $11.44
- RIGOLETTO — Verdi. (Complete Set). Jan Peerce, Leonard Warren, Italo Tajo, Nan Merriman, Erner Berger, and Shaw Chorale. Robert Shaw, Conductor.
  WDMC-125 (45 RPM) $17.75 LM-6101 (33 1/3 RPM) $17.16
- CARMEN — Bizet. (Excerpts). Swarthout, Albanese, Merrill, etc., with RCA Victor Chorale and Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, Conductor and Robert Shaw, Choral Director.
  WDM-1078 (45 RPM) $7.46 LM-1007 (33 1/3 RPM) $5.72
- HIGHLIGHTS FROM DIE FLEDERMAUS — J. Strauss, Jr. Jan Peerce, Patrice Munsel, James Melton, Robert Merrill, Robert Shaw Chorale, Robert Shaw, Conductor.
  WDM-1457 (45 RPM) $7.46 LM-1114 (33 1/3 RPM) $5.72
- HIGHLIGHTS FROM LA TRAVIATA — Verdi, Licia Albanese, Jan Peerce, Leonard Warren, RCA Victor Orchestra.
  WDM-1473 (45 RPM) $6.29 LM-1115 (33 1/3 RPM) $5.72
- HIGHLIGHTS FROM MADAME BUTTERFLY — Puccini. Licia Albanese, James Melton, RCA Victor Orchestra.
  WDM-1068 (45 RPM) $3.99 LM-2 (33 1/3 RPM) $4.67

ORDER FROM

BOSTON MUSIC COMPANY
116 Boylston Street, Boston 16
HAncock 6-5100

PHONOGRAPH & RECORD SHOP
159 Devonshire Street, Boston
HUbbard 2-2296

CHAS. W. HOMEYER CO. INC.
498 Boylston Street, Boston
KEnmore 6-3510

WINCHESTER APPLIANCE
15 Thompson Street, Winchester
WInchester 6-3328

MAIL AND PHONE ORDERS ACCEPTED

MEET THE CONDUCTOR

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of articles about great conductors to be published in GOOD LISTENING. Next Month — Pierre Monteux.

By Cyrus Durgin
Drama and Music Critic, The Boston Globe

When in October of 1949, Charles Munch assumed leadership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he took over a fabulously great musical organization. Just the Spring before this orchestra had ended a Golden Age of 25 years under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Immediately, a new Golden Age began, for Mr. Munch is one of the world's truly great conductors, a man of profound musicianship and a formidable technician. Like his predecessor, Mr. Munch also is one of music's most forceful personalities. Where Koussevitzky heard sonorities in terms of purple richness, the Munch ear runs to Gallic sweetness and clarity. But one over-mastering quality characterizes the work of both men: an unceasing quest for perfection.

Perhaps the next most powerful attribute of Munch's musical personality is its passion. This is not a matter of playing loud and fast, nor of squeezing the last drop of emotional juice. Munch is too good a musician and too cultivated a man for that. Nor is that passion expressed in the same way or to the same degree in, say, Bach and Debussy. But that passion is there, human, fundamental and life-giving.

Although it is easily recognizable, it is not easy to define. You find it in the intense effort toward absolutely correct style in Bach. In Tchaikovsky it is almost raw emotion; in Beethoven it is a sense of Promethean spark, as music which so often depends on variational unfolding, seems to grow into huge and flaming artistic expression. With Ravel and Debussy and Roussel, this passion appears to be concentrated upon tonal colors and complexity of rhythms.

As an Alsatian, born in Strasbourg, Mr. Munch may be considered figuratively a musical Janus. One of his artistic faces looks toward the high seriousness of German art, something to be noted especially in his superlative performances of such towering masterpieces as the Missa Solemnis of Beethoven, the "St. John" and "St. Matthew" Passions of Bach. The other face inclines westward toward the Gallic manner, which is equally an important aspect of his conducting.

This situation is no indication of esthetic weakness. If anything, it is a proof of extraordinary strength, for its gives Munch's work a great depth and a broader range than would be expected from the fact that a man is purely a Frenchman, or a German, or a Russian, or an Italian, or an American, or an Englishman.

Great art, at least in the field of conducting, is rightly esteemed not by its national limitations, but by the degree to which a great conductor transcends national limitations. With Charles Munch they scarcely can be said to exist. He passes from one school of music to another with the same ease that he boards an airplane in Paris and leaves it at New York.

This musical and personal urbanity makes for an easy and attractive stage presence. There is something urgently contemporary in his manner. It is all simplicity and amiability, there is nothing of the egoist or the grand seigneur, none of the outward artificialities of manner which you could find in some conductors of the past.

Although his hair is gray and his age 61, the Munch step was brisk and quick until his recent unfortunate illness suggested un poco andante for a time. His figure is good, his smile ready and beaming, if a little shy. The French have a reason for everything they do. With reason they long since called Charles Munch "Le beau Charles".

Thanks to candid photographs of conductors at work, it is now possible, given a good camera and an alert photographer

(Continued on Page 17)

Name .....

Address .....

the Old (the Napoleonic) Conservatory of "musique concrete."

This last, the newest of the novelties in Paris, though we have had it at home for some time, is music produced by the manipulation of magnetized tapes and other recording devices, the free composition and distortion of mechanized sounds.

THIRTEEN OF the concerts were orchestral; seven were devoted to smaller scorings. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the orchestra and chorus of the Saint Cecilia Academy in Rome, the Orchestra de la Suisse Romande (Ansermet's orchestra from Geneve and Lausanne) and the R. I. A. S., a radio orchestra from West Berlin, were the massive concert groups imported.

For the lyric stage the Vienna Opera Company, the Royal Opera from Covent Garden and an ANTA production from New York were brought on complete. Vittorio Rieti's "Don Perlimplin" (on a text of Garcia Lorca) was prepared in Paris with Spanish-language singers.

THE SAINT-GUILLAUME chorus from Strasbourg and a smaller singing society from Holland made fine impressions. And along with all these excellent out-of-town units, the chief Paris orchestras and choral groups took part in performing some of the chief works of our century, known and unknown.

(Copyright, 1952, by The New York Herald-Tribune.)

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

When the greatest orchestra in the world—and that is what the Boston Orchestra's reputation has been for many years—comes to play in London for the first time (on 26 May), then it seems too much like a critic's carping to find the concert on several counts disappointing. But it was not simply that expectation had been keyed too high. Misfortunes in transport delayed the starting time of the concert by an hour, and though the evening papers gave warning of this, many people had an impatient hour's wait; more important, it meant that the orchestra had no opportunity of rehearsing in the Festival Hall, and this, for the first half of the concert, affected their balance and dynamics disastrously. And—misfortunes apart—the concert was badly planned. The orchestra was coming straight from France, from the 'Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century' celebrations in Paris. The masterpieces they chose to play here were four large, richly-scored French works, and two shorter, but no less richly-scored American pieces. Roussel's 'Bacchus et Ariane' followed hard on Honegger's fifth symphony, and the second suite from 'Daphnis and Chloe' on Debussy's 'La Mer'. Even if the orchestra had played throughout with exquisite delicacy this programme would have become wearisome. They did not—until the end—play with exquisite delicacy at all, but very noisily indeed. The chief culprit was the leading trumpeter, who, unchecked by Charles Münch, the conductor, upped with his bell whenever he had the chance, and launched a deafening assault on his hearers—a quivering, ear-splitting salvo that obliterated the fine playing of his colleagues in the wood-wind and string sections. This was in the first half of the concert: in the second the balance was better adjusted. But it is impossible, after a single hearing in these circumstances, to particularize on the individual timbres of the players; it became plain only that they were brilliant. The actual sum of sound in the Festival Hall was often appalling, and one dreaded the approach of the blood-curdling climaxes. If only the orchestra could have had a rehearsal: for the last item, the 'Daphnis and Chloe' suite, was played most wonderfully. Daybreak was ravishing, the flute solo was played with breath-taking beauty, and the final dance was dazzling. 'Daphnis and Chloe' saved the reputation of the orchestra. From the first strains of the National Anthem they had been exciting: now they were also making beautiful music.

[a50]

AND YOU NEED IT...

. . . to hear the Boston Symphony over station WGBH exclusively on FM, great classical music over stations WXHR and WBUR exclusively on FM. You save $46 on this remarkable Pilot FM-AM tuner, available ONLY at Radio Shack in New England. Attaches to any amplifier, TV set, recorder, or existing radio! 10 tubes, built-in FM and AM antennas, FM-AM-PHONO-TV selector switch, high-fidelity AC operation. 20-15,000 cycle response! We tell you exactly how to attach it.

RADIO SHACK CORPORATION
167 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON 8

For Excellence in Reviews of
• Music • The Stage
• Classical Recordings
Read
CYRUS W. DURGIN
The Boston Globe MORNING EVENING
SUNDAY

KEnmore 6-3510 WInchester 6-3328
MAIL AND PHONE ORDERS ACCEPTED

This Clipping From

Calender of MUSICAL EVENTS

Listed below you will find some of the outstanding musical events which will take place during the month of June. This column, however, by no means represents a complete list.

* * *

Festival of Creative Arts, Brandeis University: Thursday, June 12 at 8:30 P.M., Adolph Ullman Amphitheatre — World premiere of one-act opera "Trouble in Tahiti" by Leonard Bernstein.

Saturday, June 14 at 8:30 PM., Adolph Ullman Amphitheatre — "Threepenny Opera" (Dreigroschenoper) by Kurt Weill, adapted and translated by Marc Blitzstein.

* * *

Boston Art Festival: Friday, June 13 at 8:30 P.M., Hatch Shell, Esplanade — Symphonic Psalm "King David" by Arthur Honegger. Chorus and Orchestra of the New England Conservatory of Music will be conducted by Malcolm Holmes.

BOSTON ART FESTIVAL

Boston's first Art Festival, June 12 to 15, one of the most elaborate ever held in the United States, is still another manifestation of the cultural heritage of New England. Staged in the city's famous Public Garden, and exhibiting paintings and sculpture by artists from Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont, the Festival will attract more than 100,000 visitors. A proud city welcomes back its Symphony Orchestra after its first trip abroad where it was tremendously successful, then proceeds to put on the most colorful and ambitious out-door Art Festival ever attempted in the Country.

"Good Listening" is proud to salute the many civic and art leaders, who have worked together to make the Festival possible. Headed by General Chairman Nelson W. Aldrich, President of the Institute of Contemporary Art, the committee has done such a magnificent job that the Festival is attracting national interest.

Meet the Conductor

(Continued from Page 5)

(like Gil Friedberg of the Boston Globe) for the public to see what a conductor looks like on the stand. A conductor's back, with the set of his head, the gestures of his arms, is a good index of his re-creative mood at the moment. But a candid picture shows you all.

Sometimes it shows a fierce intensity of expression, a commanding summons to perfection, an insatiable desire for greater emotional feeling from the musicians, and sometimes a triumphant, smiling pleasure with what is being accomplished. All these moods and expressions, and many more, have been caught from the Munch face as he works. About most of them there is a demonic passion that might be frightening did you not know the object toward which it was generated: the making of good music.

But when he is off the stand, in casual conversation, Charles Munch is the most gentle and friendly of men. He is probably shy, at least with strangers, and it has been observed that he does not enjoy going to parties or receptions, or being lionized.

The essential, relaxed, Munch is a courteous and very human man, with a sense of humor that sets off his serious mind. That, I think, apart from his musical mastery, is why musicians like him so much. He may drive them hard, and they respond, never from fear, always from affectionate willingness to join him in a common quest for musical beauty.

Recordings are costly...
Before you buy—consult High-Fidelity
The Magazine about Records, Tape, and Hi-Fi Equipment for your home.

BEFORE YOU BUY RECORDS: There are more reviews of LP records in HIGH-FIDELITY than in any other magazine — each planned to help you find those you want for your collection. If a record is worth buying, you'll find it reviewed by one of the leading critics, and compared with other releases of the same composition. Price and playing time are shown also.

SPECIAL FEATURE: In the new issue, just out, C. G. Burke reviews all LP's of Verdi's music, totaling 80 records of 40 compositions. This is an invaluable reference work.

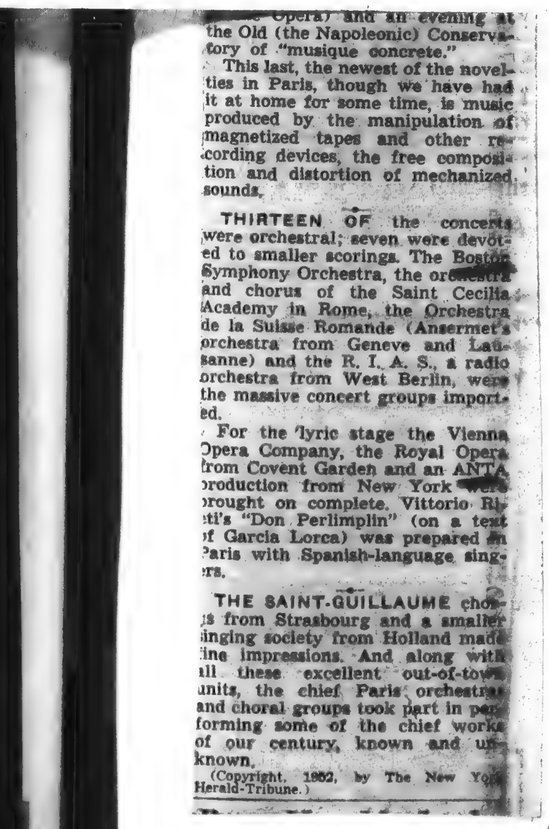
CHOOSING HI-FI EQUIPMENT: HIGH-FIDELITY is also the most complete source of information on new FM and TV tuners, record-players, tape recorders, amplifiers, speakers, and hi-fi installations. Articles are written for non-technical people who enjoy fine music at home.

HIGH-FIDELITY is a large-size quarterly magazine, beautifully illustrated and handsomely printed on fine paper.
Published by
MILTON B. SLEEPER

MAIL COUPON TODAY! New issue just out.
Mr. Charles Fowler, Editor, High Fidelity Magazine
212 Audio Building, Great Barrington, Mass.
Please enter my subscription to High Fidelity Magazine:
☐$6.00 for three years (SAVE $6) ☐$3.00 for one year (SAVE $1)
Name_____
Address_____
Add 50¢ per year for Canada, $1.00 foreign countries

Name .....

Address .....



the Old (the Napoleonic) Conservatory of "musique concrete."

This last, the newest of the novelties in Paris, though we have had it at home for some time, is music produced by the manipulation of magnetized tapes and other recording devices, the free composition and distortion of mechanized sounds.

THIRTEEN OF the concerts were orchestral; seven were devoted to smaller scorings. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the orchestra and chorus of the Saint Cecilia Academy in Rome, the Orchestra de la Suisse Romande (Ansermet's orchestra from Geneve and Lausanne) and the R. I. A. S., a radio orchestra from West Berlin, were the massive concert groups imported.

For the lyric stage the Vienna Opera Company, the Royal Opera from Covent Garden and an ANTA production from New York were brought on complete. Vittorio Rieti's "Don Perlimplin" (on a text of Garcia Lorca) was prepared in Paris with Spanish-language singers.

THE SAINT-GUILLAUME chorus from Strasbourg and a smaller singing society from Holland made fine impressions. And along with all these excellent out-of-town units, the chief Paris orchestras and choral groups took part in performing some of the chief works of our century, known and unknown.

(Copyright, 1952, by The New York Herald-Tribune.)

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

When the greatest orchestra in the world—and that is what the Boston Orchestra's reputation has been for many years—comes to play in London for the first time (on 26 May), then it seems too much like a critic's carping to find the concert on several counts disappointing. But it was not simply that expectation had been keyed too high. Misfortunes in transport delayed the starting time of the concert by an hour, and though the evening papers gave warning of this, many people had an impatient hour's wait; more important, it meant that the orchestra had no opportunity of rehearsing in the Festival Hall, and this, for the first half of the concert, affected their balance and dynamics disastrously. And—misfortunes apart—the concert was badly planned. The orchestra was coming straight from France, from the 'Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century' celebrations in Paris. The masterpieces they chose to play here were four large, richly-scored French works, and two shorter, but no less richly-scored American pieces. Roussel's 'Bacchus et Ariane' followed hard on Honegger's fifth symphony, and the second suite from 'Daphnis and Chloe' on Debussy's 'La Mer'. Even if the orchestra had played throughout with exquisite delicacy this programme would have become wearisome. They did not—until the end—play with exquisite delicacy at all, but very noisily indeed. The chief culprit was the leading trumpeter, who, unchecked by Charles Münch, the conductor, upped with his bell whenever he had the chance, and launched a deafening assault on his hearers—a quivering, ear-splitting salvo that obliterated the fine playing of his colleagues in the wood-wind and string sections. This was in the first half of the concert: in the second the balance was better adjusted. But it is impossible, after a single hearing in these circumstances, to particularize on the individual timbres of the players; it became plain only that they were brilliant. The actual sum of sound in the Festival Hall was often appalling, and one dreaded the approach of the blood-curdling climaxes. If only the orchestra could have had a rehearsal: for the last item, the 'Daphnis and Chloe' suite, was played most wonderfully. Daybreak was ravishing, the flute solo was played with breath-taking beauty, and the final dance was dazzling. 'Daphnis and Chloe' saved the reputation of the orchestra. From the first strains of the National Anthem they had been exciting: now they were also making beautiful music.

[a50]

This Clipping From

4:45 Cooper Union Forum. United We Stand (NAEB Tape Network). Educating for Intergroup Relations. Algernon D. Black, Ethical Culture Society

5:45 Sleepytime Storyteller (CBC)

6:00 News, Weather, Highlights

6:10 Glad To Meet You — In Canterbury (BBC)

6:25 East Side, West Side

7:00 Report from Europe (Mutual Security Agency — NAEB)

7:15 Invitation to Read (NAEB Tape Network). Professor Alburey Castell, University of Oregon

7:30 International Politics. Commission on Extension Courses. Professor Leo Gross, Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, Tufts college

8:25 Boston Pops Orchestra. Arthur Fiedler, conductor

SUNDAY, JUNE 15

3:30 University of Chicago Round Table (NBC-WNYC)

4:00 Guest Collector

5:00 M.I.T. English and History Department Lecture. What Does It Mean to be Free? Professor Ralph Barton Perry, Harvard University and M. I. T.

6:00 Faculty Report

7:00 Old Books: Old Friends. Benjamin Franklin's Autobiography. Professor I. Bernard Cohen, Harvard University

7:30 Music of the Baroque. French Orchestral Music. Allen Sapp, Harvard University

8:30 "Harvard Symposium"

MONDAY, JUNE 16

3:30 News, Weather, Highlights

3:35 Masters of Modern Drama. Commission on Extension on Courses. Dr. William B. Van Lennep, Harvard University

4:30 Music for the Connisseur (NAEB Tape Network). David Randolph

5:30 Children's Circle. Nancy Harper, Nursery Training School of Boston, Tufts College

6:00 News, Louis M. Lyons, Harvard University

6:15 Faculty Report

6:25 U. S. Weather Bureau Report and Forecast (from Logan International Airport)

6:30 Why the Weather? (from Blue Hill Observatory) Professor Charles F. Brooks, Harvard University

6:35 Buon Appetito

7:00 Say It In French. Professor Robert K. Craven, Tufts College

7:30 How Others Live. Professor Frederick R. Wulsin, Tufts College

8:30 Harvard Phi Beta Kappa

W G B H — Continued

Literary Exercises. Poet: Professor John A. Ciardi; Orator: Wilmarth S. Lewis

News, Louis M. Lyons, (rebroadcast), Weather, Highlights

TUESDAY, JUNE 17

3:30 News, Weather, Highlights

3:35 Introduction to Psychology. Commission on Extension Courses. Dr. Edwin B. Newman, Harvard University

4:30 New England Conservatory of Music. Lecture—Concert on Contemporary Music. Francis Judd Cooke and assisting artists

5:30 Children's Circle. Nancy Harper, Nursery Training School of Boston, Tufts College

6:00 News. Louis M. Lyons, Harvard University

6:15 Faculty Report

6:25 U. S. Weather Bureau and Forecast (from Logan International Airport)

6:30 Why the Weather? (from Blue Hill Observatory) Professor Charles F. Brooks, Harvard University

6:35 Bohemian Village

7:00 Masterworks from France (Radiodiffusion Francaise)

7:30 Greek Political Theory. Professor Joseph P. Maguire, Boston College

8:30 Highlights from New England Conservatory Commencement

News (Louis Lyons rebroadcast), Weather, Highlights

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 18

3:30 News, Weather, Highlights

3:35 Masters of Modern Drama. Commission on Extension Courses. Dr. William B. Van Lennep, Harvard University

4:30 Music of the Ballet. Sleeping Beauty

5:30 Children's Circle. Nancy Harper, Nursery Training School of Boston. Tufts College

6:00 News, Louis M. Lyons, Harvard University

6:15 Faculty Report

6:25 U. S. Weather Bureau Report and Forecast (from Logan International Airport)

6:30 Why the Weather? (from Blue Hill Observatory). Professor Charles F. Brooks, Harvard University

6:35 At Acapulco

7:05 Letter from Italy

7:15 Roundup of the London Weeklies

7:30 International Politics. Commission on Extension Courses. Professor Leo Gross, Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, Tufts College

8:30 Harvard Symposium, "The Goals of General Education"

News, Louis M. Lyons, (rebroadcast), Weather, Highlights

THURSDAY, JUNE 19

3:30 News, Weather, Highlights

3:35 Introduction to Psychology. Commission on Extension Courses. Dr. Edwin B. Newman, Harvard University

4:30 The Voice and the Orchestra. Bach, Cantata No 51; Wagner, Immolation Scene; Sauguet, La Voyante

5:30 Children's Circle. Nancy Harper, Nursery Training School of Boston, Tufts College

6:00 News. Louis M. Lyons, Harvard University

6:15 Faculty Report

6:25 U. S. Weather Bureau Report and Forecast (from Logan International Airport)

6:30 Why the Weather? (from Blue Hill Observatory) Professor Charles F. Brooks, Harvard University

6:35 Hao Chyn Fann

7:00 Say It In French. Professor Robert K. Craven, Tufts College

7:30 How Others Live. Professor Frederick R. Wulsin, Tufts College

8:30 Highlights from Harvard Commencement and Alumni Meeting

News (Louis Lyons rebroadcast), Weather, Highlights

FRIDAY, JUNE 20

3:30 News, Weather, Highlights

3:35 Masters of Modern Drama. Commission on Extension Courses. Dr. William B. Van Lennep, Harvard University

4:30 BBC World Theatre (NAEB) Tape Network "The Tomb of Tutankhamen"

5:30 Children's Circle. Nancy Harper, Nursery Training School of Boston, Tufts College

6:00 News. Louis M. Lyons, Harvard University

6:15 Faculty Report

6:25 U.S. Weather Bureau Report and Forecast (from Logan International Airport)

6:30 Why the Weather? (from Blue Hill Observatory) Professor Charles F. Brooks, Harvard University

6:35 Goeie Appetit

7:00 Tell You A Story. Professor Donald Born, Boston University

7:15 Let's See New England. Museum of Fine Arts staff

7:30 Greek Political Theory. Professor Joseph P. Maguire, Boston College

8:30 National Gallery Concert (Continental FM Network)

News (Louis Lyons rebroadcast) Weather, Highlights

SATURDAY, JUNE 21

3:30 News, Weather, Highlights

3:35 Introduction to Psychology. Commission on Extension Courses. Dr. Edwin B. Newman, Harvard University

KEnmore 6-3510 WInchester 6-3328
MAIL AND PHONE ORDERS ACCEPTED

MONDAY, JUNE 30

5:00-6:00 Preludes for Piano-Orchestral Transcription (Rachmaninoff) (C), Concertino for Piano and Orchestra (Honegger) (C), Wozek-Excerpts (Berg) (C), Song of the Wood Dove from Gurrelieder (Schoenberg)

6:00-7:00 Nutcracker Suite No 1 Opus 71a (Tschaikowsky) (L), The Wonderful One

W X H R — Continued

"Hoss" Shay (Brand), Ballet Suite "Billy the Kid" (Copland) (V), Overture: Le Roi d'Ys (Lalo) (L)

7:00-8:00 Sonata in G Opus 79 (Beethoven) (L), Sonata No 29 Opus 106 in B flat Beethoven) (D)

8:00-9:00 This hour reserved for new RCA Victor records

9:00-10:00 Sacred Service (Bloch) (L), Motet for Double Choir, Komm, Jesu, Komm (Bach) (L)

10:00-11:00 Sonata for Cello and Piano No 1 in B Flat Opus 45 (Mendelssohn) (Vx) Sonata for Cello and Piano "Arpeggionne" Opus Posthumous (Schubert) (Vx) Lyrikstueck for Piano (Grieg) (Vx)

Subscription Blank

"Good Listening"

TEAR OFF AND MAIL TODAY

Good Listening, 49 Portland St., Boston, Mass.

Gentlemen:

Kindly enter my subscription for 12 issues of "Good Listening" starting with the July issue.

Enclosed find my check or money order for $3.00 which is the total subscription price for the entire 12 months.

Name .....

Address .....

...Opera) and an evening at the Old (the Napoleonic) Conservatory of "musique concrete."

This last, the newest of the novelties in Paris, though we have had it at home for some time, is music produced by the manipulation of magnetized tapes and other recording devices, the free composition and distortion of mechanized sounds.

THIRTEEN OF the concerts were orchestral; seven were devoted to smaller scorings. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the orchestra and chorus of the Saint Cecilia Academy in Rome, the Orchestra de la Suisse Romande (Ansermet's orchestra from Geneve and Lausanne) and the R. I. A. S., a radio orchestra from West Berlin, were the massive concert groups imported.

For the lyric stage the Vienna Opera Company, the Royal Opera from Covent Garden and an ANTA production from New York were brought on complete. Vittorio Rieti's "Don Perlimplin" (on a text of Garcia Lorca) was prepared in Paris with Spanish-language singers.

THE SAINT-GUILLAUME chorus from Strasbourg and a smaller singing society from Holland made fine impressions. And along with all these excellent out-of-town units, the chief Paris orchestras and choral groups took part in performing some of the chief works of our century, known and unknown.

(Copyright, 1952, by The New York Herald-Tribune.)

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

When the greatest orchestra in the world—and that is what the Boston Orchestra's reputation has been for many years—comes to play in London for the first time (on 26 May), then it seems too much like a critic's carping to find the concert on several counts disappointing. But it was not simply that expectation had been keyed too high. Misfortunes in transport delayed the starting time of the concert by an hour, and though the evening papers gave warning of this, many people had an impatient hour's wait; more important, it meant that the orchestra had no opportunity of rehearsing in the Festival Hall, and this, for the first half of the concert, affected their balance and dynamics disastrously. And—misfortunes apart—the concert was badly planned. The orchestra was coming straight from France, from the 'Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century' celebrations in Paris. The masterpieces they chose to play here were four large, richly-scored French works, and two shorter, but no less richly-scored American pieces. Roussel's 'Bacchus et Ariane' followed hard on Honegger's fifth symphony, and the second suite from 'Daphnis and Chloe' on Debussy's 'La Mer'. Even if the orchestra had played throughout with exquisite delicacy this programme would have become wearisome. They did not—until the end—play with exquisite delicacy at all, but very noisily indeed. The chief culprit was the leading trumpeter, who, unchecked by Charles Münch, the conductor, upped with his bell whenever he had the chance, and launched a deafening assault on his hearers—a quivering, ear-splitting salvo that obliterated the fine playing of his colleagues in the wood-wind and string sections. This was in the first half of the concert; in the second the balance was better adjusted. But it is impossible, after a single hearing in these circumstances, to particularize on the individual timbres of the players; it became plain only that they were brilliant. The actual sum of sound in the Festival Hall was often appalling, and one dreaded the approach of the blood-curdling climaxes. If only the orchestra could have had a rehearsal: for the last item, the 'Daphnis and Chloe' suite, was played most wonderfully. Daybreak was ravishing, the flute solo was played with breath-taking beauty, and the final dance was dazzling. 'Daphnis and Chloe' saved the reputation of the orchestra. From the first strains of the National Anthem they had been exciting: now they were also making beautiful music.

[a50]

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
AUG 8 - 1952

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO TOUR U. S. IN '53

Plans have been completed for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which made its first European trip last spring, to make its first transcontinental tour next spring.

Beginning April 20, 1953, the tour will be for five weeks and will include 30 concerts on a route taking in Atlanta and New Orleans in the South, Los Angeles and San Francisco in the west and Denver, Chicago and Toronto in the north.

It will be the first time in its 70 odd years that the orchestra has played south of Richmond, Va. The only time it has gone west of the Mississippi was in 1915 when Karl Muck led the ensemble at the exposition in San Francisco.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will alternate on the tour with Pierre Monteux, who shared the podium with him on the European tour.

An extensive [illegible] is be outlined for the 1952-1953 season, commitments [illegible] Orchestra under [illegible] and the annual festival prog[illegible] at Tanglewood, the Boston [illegible] will play a grand total of about [illegible] concerts.

In addition to the above tour, the Boston Pops Orchestra will go on a ten-week tour under the management of Columbia Artists in January, February and March.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER
AUG 8 - 1952

Displaying Our Talents

The best music in the world is the music that originates in Symphony Hall in Boston, and we are well pleased to be able to share this talent abroad.

That's why it brings a sense of pleasure and pride to hear that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its first transcontinental tour next spring. Meanwhile the Boston Pops Orchestra will move out in January for a 10-week tour of the South, Midwest and Southwest.

Earlier this year, the Symphony Orchestra's journey through Europe was one of the greatest artistic triumphs ever witnessed on the continent. With Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux again alternating on the podium, the trip to the West Coast in April is certain to be every bit as successful.

Arthur Fiedler's unique and gifted way with the Pops ensemble is equally certain to bring fame to Boston's name in his swing through the South.

We are greatly privileged to have such talent here in Boston. It is a privilege also to share it.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1952

Aspen, Colo., Hotbed Of Musical Activity

By IRVING KOLODIN

ASPEN, COLO. — If you can imagine a hotbed of anything at an altitude of 7,850 feet, then you can properly describe this idyllic place in the heart of the Colorado peaks as a hotbed of music-making, music-thinking and music-being. The three facets of the matter need to be emphasized for it is just this diversity that makes Aspen different from the other centers of comparable activity in these broad United States.

Of course, if you don't relish having your bag carried by a Ph.D., or the soup served in the Hotel Jerome dining room by a budding rival Erica Morini, don't come to Aspen. That introduction serves to put you in the mood of a place where everybody seems to have come for some purpose (above and beyond the call of the beautiful scenery, the light, bracing air or a stimulating swim in the inviting pool). Hence there is a sense of unanimity and fellowship quite lacking in the average resort.

* * *

THOUGHTS about Aspen tend to become inextricably tangled with thoughts about Tanglewood, in the Berkshire Hills, if only for the physical link they share in the family of Finnish architects named Saarinen. Father Eilel built the famous fan-shaped shed in which Serge Koussevitzky began a notable tradition with the Boston Symphony.

Son Eero designed the good-looking, functional amphitheater here in Aspen, which is sizable enough to accommodate a symphony orchestra and chorus on its cleverly-tiered stage, yet intimate enough to be a perfect setting for the chamber-music performances which predominate in Aspen.

The sloping bowl was scooped out of the earth by bulldozers personally supervised by Dimitri Mitropoulos (who presided at the first festival here in 1949), surfaced with cement and crowned with a gay brown and white tent, which serves equally well to fend off the elements and reflect the sound from the stage.

To one who remembers the tent phase of Tanglewood, Aspen now has the same kind of purposeful informality that prevailed in the Berkshires before it became a tourist's haven with audiences of 10 or 12 thousand in attendance and a commercial pattern to match. The students come and go from their classes in slacks or bobby socks. Such "professors" as violinist Szymon Goldberg, pianist Victor Babin or clarinetist Reginald Kell are equally unostentatious about their work. When they get together for the weekend concerts it hardly need be guaranteed that the music-making would be worth an ocean crossing, not a mere train or auto journey, to hear.

* * *

TO GIVE a properly rounded view of Aspen, it should be mentioned that while music is a considerable part of the activity here, it is by no means the only or the overpowering one. The Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, which struck fire with a resounding Goethe Bicentennial observance in 1949 (to the extent that the eminent philosopher-musician Albert Schweitzer journeyed here from his post in South Africa) has a complementary pattern of activity which is this Summer considering the large subject of "Human Freedom."

Under the leadership of provocative speakers (Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black was a recent visitor) groups of businessmen as well as educators have had their say on all sides of the subject, bringing divergent viewpoints to bear on a subject which is as close to everybody's concern as a subject can be.

If this sounds formidable, don't think for a moment that it is in any way stuffy. The fish bite like mad before and after the discussions, there are fine trails for an early-morning horseback ride and if all else fails, there is always the harmony of music to soothe the ruffled spirits.

* * *

SPEAKING of altitude (in relation to the recent performance of the Ballet Theater at Denver's Red Rock Park and the difficulties the dancers experienced in getting off the ground), violinist Szymon Goldberg was apologizing for the sound of his Strad after a recent master class. By my ear it gave out luxurious sounds even before being identifed as a product of the Cremona master, but Goldberg swears it doesn't give back in Aspen as much as he puts into it. Thin air, apparently, does things to the vibrations.

(Copyright, SR)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 8 - 1952

30-Concert Tour Set for Boston

Boston — (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra plans its first transcontinental tour next Spring with 30 concerts scheduled in a five-week period beginning Apr. 20.

The route will include performances in Atlanta and New Orleans, in the South, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Denver, in the West and Chicago and Toronto in the North.

It will be the first time in the orchestra's more than 70-year history that it has played south of Richmond, and only the second time it has crossed the Mississippi. The first Western trip was in 1915 when conductor Karl Muck took the group to the San Francisco Exposition.

This Clipping From
PASSAIC, N. J.
HERALD-NEWS
AUG 8 - 1952

Boston Symphony Plans First Nationwide Tour

BOSTON (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra plans its first transcontinental tour next spring with 30 concerts scheduled in a five-week period beginning April 20. The route will include performances in Atlanta, Ga. and New Orleans, La., in the South, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Denver, Colo., in the west and Chicago and Toronto, Ont., in the north.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
AUG 10 1952

Bostonians on Tour

AMERICA at large will finally have a chance to see and hear the orchestra that drew frantic bravos in its first European tour last Spring. The Boston Symphony is now announced to be planning for next Spring a tour of the United States that will take it—and its vast musical experience—west to the Coast, through the Rocky Mountain area and south as far as New Orleans.

This will be the first American tour of the orchestra, barring a series of 12 concerts conducted by Karl Muck at the San Francisco Exposition in 1915. The enterprise will be undertaken in addition to the orchestra's regular appearances at Symphony Hall, Boston, and its customary visits to other Eastern centers. In all, the season's performances will number 300, an amazing total.

By happy circumstance, the Bostonians may be a brand-new experience to many Americans, but to Newarkers the group is like a valued old friend. For the last decade, the Boston's great musical accomplishments have been performed here seasonally, and one visit is scheduled for the coming season. It is likely that Denver, Los Angeles, Richmond, Atlanta and points North and South will come to share Newark's pleasure in the existence of such a highly developed and expressive musical entity.

This Clipping From
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Oct 8 - 52

First Femme Player Joins Boston Symph

Boston, Oct. 7.

For the first time in its 72 years existence, the Boston Symphony has inked a femme principal instrumentalist, Miss Doriot Anthony, who takes over as first flutist in place of Georges Laurent, who recently resigned following a 31-year stint with the organization.

Miss Anthony spent the past seven years with the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 8 - 1952

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO TOUR

Boston—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra plans its first transcontinental tour next spring with 30 concerts scheduled in a five-week period beginning Apr. 20. The route will include performances in Atlanta and New Orleans in the South, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Denver in the West, and Chicago and Toronto in the North.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1952

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the third symphony orchestra to be founded in the United States, will embark in October on the most extensive concert series ever planned by such a musical organization. During the 1952-53 season, the Boston Symphony is scheduled to give 300 concerts, including those in its first nation-wide tour. Few orchestras in the United States and none in Europe have ever presented as many as 200 concerts during one year. One of these 300 concerts will be given in the Auditorium for the Civic Music series.

New Englanders should be proud of the Boston Symphony. Since 1881 it has become one of the region's finest cultural institutions. Those within frequency modulation broadcast range from Boston, incidentally, can hear all the programs in its regular season over a radio station one of whose sponsors is the orchestra itself.

We are glad that more persons than ever will be able to attend concerts by the Boston Symphony next year. And we are happy that the number of persons who like serious music has become so large that an orchestra can plan to give 300 concerts in a single year.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
AUG 8 - 1952

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO TOUR U. S. IN '53

Plans have been completed for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which made its first European trip last spring, to make its first transcontinental tour next spring.

Beginning April 20, 1953, the tour will be for five weeks and will include 30 concerts on a route taking in Atlanta and New Orleans in the South, Los Angeles and San Francisco in the west and Denver, Chicago and Toronto in the north.

It will be the first time in its 70 odd years that the orchestra has played south of Richmond, Va. The only time it has gone west of the Mississippi was in 1915 when Karl Muck led the ensemble at the 1915 exposition in San Francisco.

An extensive [illegible] outlined for the 1952-1953 season.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will alternate [illegible] commitments on the tour with Pierre Monteux, [illegible] orchestra until [illegible] who shared the podium with him [illegible] and the annual [illegible] at Tanglewood, the Boston [illegible] will play a grand total of about 300 concerts.

In addition to the above tour the Boston Pops Orchestra will go on a ten-week tour under the management of Columbia Artists in January, February and March.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER
AUG 8 - 1952

Displaying Our Talents

The best music in the world is the music that originates in Symphony Hall in Boston, and we are well pleased to be able to share this talent abroad.

That's why it brings a sense of pleasure and pride to hear that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its first transcontinental tour next spring. Meanwhile the Boston Pops Orchestra will move out in January for a 10-week tour of the South, Midwest and Southwest.

Earlier this year, the Symphony Orchestra's journey through Europe was one of the greatest artistic triumphs ever witnessed on the continent. With Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux again alternating on the podium, the trip to the West Coast in April is certain to be every bit as successful.

Arthur Fiedler's unique and gifted way with the Pops ensemble is equally certain to bring fame to Boston's name in his swing through the South.

We are greatly privileged to have such talent here in Boston. It is a privilege also to share it.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 8 - 1952

30-Concert Tour Set for Boston

Boston — (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra plans its first transcontinental tour next Spring with 30 concerts scheduled in a five-week period beginning Apr. 20.

The route will include performances in Atlanta and New Orleans, in the South, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Denver, in the West and Chicago and Toronto in the North.

It will be the first time in the orchestra's more than 70-year history that it has played south of Richmond, and only the second time it has crossed the Mississippi. The first Western trip was in 1915 when conductor Karl Muck took the group to the San Francisco Exposition.

This Clipping From
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
OCT 8 - 1952

First Femme Player Joins Boston Symph

Boston, Oct. 7.

For the first time in its 72 years existence, the Boston Symphony has inked a femme principal instrumentalist, Miss Doriot Anthony, who takes over as first flutist in place of Georges Laurent, who recently resigned following a 31-year stint with the organization.

Miss Anthony spent the past seven years with the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 8 - 1952

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO TOUR

Boston—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra plans its first transcontinental tour next spring with 30 concerts scheduled in a five-week period beginning Apr. 20. The route will include performances in Atlanta and New Orleans in the South, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Denver in the West, and Chicago and Toronto in the North.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1952

Aspen, Colo., Hotbed Of Musical Activity

By IRVING KOLODIN

ASPEN, COLO. — If you can imagine a hotbed of anything at an altitude of 7,850 feet, then you can properly describe this idyllic place in the heart of the Colorado peaks as a hotbed of music-making, music-thinking and music-being. The three facets of the matter need to be emphasized for it is just this diversity that makes Aspen different from the other centers of comparable activity in these broad United States.

Of course, if you don't relish having your bag carried by a Ph.D., or the soup served in the Hotel Jerome dining room by a budding rival Erica Morini, don't come to Aspen. That introduction serves to put you in the mood of a place where everybody seems to have come for some purpose (above and beyond the call of the beautiful scenery, the light, bracing air or a stimulating swim in the inviting pool). Hence there is a sense of unanimity and fellowship quite lacking in the average resort.

* * *

THOUGHTS about Aspen tend to become inextricably tangled with thoughts about Tanglewood, in the Berkshire Hills, if only for the physical link they share in the family of Finnish architects named Saarinen. Father Eilel built the famous fan-shaped shed in which Serge Koussevitzky began a notable tradition with the Boston Symphony.

Son Eero designed the good-looking, functional amphitheater here in Aspen, which is sizable enough to accommodate a symphony orchestra and chorus on its cleverly-tiered stage, yet intimate enough to be a perfect setting for the chamber-music performances which predominate in Aspen.

The sloping bowl was scooped out of the earth by bulldozers personally supervised by Dimitri Mitropoulos (who presided at the first festival here in 1949), surfaced with cement and crowned with a gay brown and white tent, which serves equally well to fend off the elements and reflect the sound from the stage.

To one who remembers the tent phase of Tanglewood, Aspen now has the same kind of purposeful informality that prevailed in the Berkshires before it became a tourist's haven with audiences of 10 or 12 thousand in attendance and a commercial pattern to match. The students come and go from their classes in slacks or bobby socks. Such "professors" as violinist Szymon Goldberg, pianist Victor Babin or clarinetist Reginald Kell are equally unostentatious about their work. When they get together for the weekend concerts it hardly need be guaranteed that the music-making would be worth an ocean crossing, not a mere train or auto journey, to hear.

* * *

TO GIVE a properly rounded view of Aspen, it should be mentioned that while music is a considerable part of the activity here, it is by no means the only or the overpowering one. The Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, which struck fire with a resounding Goethe Bicentennial observance in 1949 (to the extent that the eminent philosopher-musician Albert Schweitzer journeyed here from his post in South Africa) has a complementary pattern of activity which is this Summer considering the large subject of "Human Freedom."

Under the leadership of provocative speakers (Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black was a recent visitor) groups of businessmen as well as educators have had their say on all sides of the subject, bringing divergent viewpoints to bear on a subject which is as close to everybody's concern as a subject can be.

If this sounds formidable, don't think for a moment that it is in any way stuffy. The fish bite like mad before and after the discussions, there are fine trails for an early-morning horseback ride and if all else fails, there is always the harmony of music to soothe the ruffled spirits.

* * *

SPEAKING of altitude (in relation to the recent performance of the Ballet Theater at Denver's Red Rock Park and the difficulties the dancers experienced in getting off the ground), violinist Szymon Goldberg was apologizing for the sound of his Strad after a recent master class. By my ear it gave out luxurious sounds even before being identifed as a product of the Cremona master, but Goldberg swears it doesn't give back in Aspen as much as he puts into it. Thin air, apparently, does things to the vibrations.

(Copyright, 8R)

This Clipping From
PASSAIC, N. J.
HERALD-NEWS
AUG 8 - 1952

Boston Symphony Plans First Nationwide Tour

BOSTON (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra plans its first transcontinental tour next spring with 30 concerts scheduled in a five-week period beginning April 20. The route will include performances in Atlanta, Ga. and New Orleans, La., in the South, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Denver, Colo., in the west and Chicago and Toronto, Ont., in the north.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
AUG 10 1952

Bostonians on Tour

AMERICA at large will finally have a chance to see and hear the orchestra that drew frantic bravos in its first European tour last Spring. The Boston Symphony is now announced to be planning for next Spring a tour of the United States that will take it—and its vast musical experience—west to the Coast, through the Rocky Mountain area and south as far as New Orleans.

This will be the first American tour of the orchestra, barring a series of 12 concerts conducted by Karl Muck at the San Francisco Exposition in 1915. The enterprise will be undertaken in addition to the orchestra's regular appearances at Symphony Hall, Boston, and its customary visits to other Eastern centers. In all, the season's performances will number 300, an amazing total.

By happy circumstance, the Bostonians may be a brand-new experience to many Americans, but to Newarkers the group is like a valued old friend. For the last decade, the Boston's great musical accomplishments have been performed here seasonally, and one visit is scheduled for the coming season. It is likely that Denver, Los Angeles, Richmond, Atlanta and points North and South will come to share Newark's pleasure in the existence of such a highly developed and expressive musical entity.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1952

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the third symphony orchestra to be founded in the United States, will embark in October on the most extensive concert series ever planned by such a musical organization. During the 1952-53 season, the Boston Symphony is scheduled to give 300 concerts, including those in its first nation-wide tour. Few orchestras in the United States and none in Europe have ever presented as many as 200 concerts during one year. One of these 300 concerts will be given in the Auditorium for the Civic Music series.

New Englanders should be proud of the Boston Symphony. Since 1881 it has become one of the region's finest cultural institutions. Those within frequency modulation broadcast range from Boston, incidentally, can hear all the programs in its regular season over a radio station one of whose sponsors is the orchestra itself.

We are glad that more persons than ever will be able to attend concerts by the Boston Symphony next year. And we are happy that the number of persons who like serious music has become so large that an orchestra can plan to give 300 concerts in a single year.

This Clipping From
Saturday Review of Literature
NEW YORK, N. Y.
1952

...ers to the RECORDINGS Editor

...re for George Byron

...the LETTERS TO THE RECORD-...SR July 26 appears a letter ...nson of Baltimore, Mary-...ks if the Desto people who ...orded a Kern album featur-Byron can be persuaded to ...inger's Gershwin album re-...time ago under another

...ke to inform Mr. Samson ...Byron has re-recorded his ...win album under the Desto ...one change in it—the sub-...the suggestion of Ira Gersh-...Bay Polka" for "The Jolly ...Milkmaid."

...of further interest to add ...as just completed a Rogers ...um and will be in the East ...s to record a Cole Porter ...s selected by the composer. ...ted for a total of six albums. ...ot decided upon the com-...the last two, I am sure he ...me suggestions re well-...posers whose lesser-known ...blic wants to hear.

WALTER R. PICK.
...k, N. Y.

NOTE: Any suggestions which ...wish to make will be duly ... to Mr. Pick, who is George ...sonal representative.

Recordings Wanted

When is RCA Victor going to ...LP recitals by Maggie Teyte, ...Onegin, Tiana Lemnitz, and Elisa-...chumann?

FRANKLIN A. WILLER.
...caster, Pa.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This suggestion would ...fit in well with RCA's new series of ... Master's Voice releases. Doubtless ...tial HMV issues are a commer-...cess. RCA will pursue this source of ...corded material further.

SIR: Never have I heard more beautiful playing than is to be found in the record-...by Karl Haas and the London Bar-oque Ensemble of Bach's "Brandenburg" Concertos 2 and 4 (Westminster). After the cold meat and soggy potatoes dished up by Casals, Klemperer, Koussevitzky, et al, it is a pleasure to hear these two magnificent works played with the proper instrumentation. After hearing these two wonderful works played with the clarity and precision that the London Baroque Ensemble bestows upon them, I am even more convinced that a hearty dislike for all types of music manifested by the bride of Prince Leopold of Cöthen and Bach's subsequent removal to the ecclesi-tical drudgery of Leipzig deprived those of us with a more worldly trend of mind of a vast treasury of the sort of secular music that had its highest flowering at the time the "Brandenburg" Concertos were composed. Now to the point of all this: When are we to have the other four concertos recorded by the same group? And are there plans afoot at Westminster to bring out any other eighteenth-century music by the same ensemble. I already have Symphonies 1, 4, 6, and 8 of Dr. Boyce by them, and would like to own the other four.

GEORGE HOLBERT TUCKER.
Norfolk, Va.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Since the "ecclesiastical drudgery" resulted in the B minor Mass, the "Matthew Passion," and several score sacred and secular cantatas, we cannot take the deprivation of which Mr. Tucker complains too hard. As for future Haas-Baroque issues, Westminster reports that the remaining "Brandenburgs" and Boyce symphonies have already been recorded and are scheduled for release in 1953. Also on the way are some Haydn divertimenti by this group.

Pro Munch

SIR: I have attended the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for several years and in that time I have come to feel a considerable pride in the wonderful music-making of that great orchestra. I have read with interest your comments on the various records made by that orchestra under its conductor, Charles Munch. As I remember, there was no performance among these various recordings of Mr. Munch which you liked.

Now, Mr. Munch may not be the best hand at the works of German composers, but most people will at least agree that he is very highly thought of as a conductor of French music. But your recent review of his new recording of "La Valse" indicates that you dislike his readings of this sort of music also. . . . I suppose that I should not challenge your opinions, but I should like to say that I disagree with your very extreme appraisal of Mr. Munch's work. And I am certain that there is a legion of music-lovers who share my sentiments.

GILBERT R. CHERRICK.
Boston, Mass.

SIR: May I ask without implying undue disrespect what exactly is your attitude toward Charles Munch and the BSO? If I recall correctly, you have never admitted that Mr. Munch has waxed anything except a mediocre performance since his advent in Boston.

DAVID H. FLIGHT.
Fort Benning, Ga.

EDITOR'S NOTE: There is a fine distinction, but an important one nonetheless, between the standards applied in judging a concert performance and those used in evaluating a recorded interpretation. We have found Mr. Munch more than satisfactory as conductor of the Boston Symphony concerts—and have said so in print. But there is a difference between a single performance of the Beethoven Seventh in Carnegie Hall as part of a varied orchestral program and a record of the Seventh that must stand comparison with the recordings of Toscanini, Weingartner, Walter, et al. In this company, and in the Germanic repertoire, Mr. Munch as yet appears at a disadvantage. We have been very appreciative of this conductor's "Ibéria," "Daphnis et Chloe," and "Festin de l'Araignée"—to name a few items from the French repertoire he has recorded—and we hope that RCA will concentrate on exposing this side of his interpretative personality.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
RECORD
AUG 15 1952

Around Boston

Bernstein's Boogie Beat Bewitches Big Benefit

—By GEORGE CLARKE—

YOUNG MR. LEONARD BERNSTEIN, darling of the Boston Symphony and one of the country's most distinguished composers, conductors and pianists, literally tote Storyville to bits Wednesday night at a musical clam-bake put together for the benefit of the musicians who recently lost most of their all in a fire which destroyed their Summer cottage at Pigeon Cove in Rockport.

Forsaking Bach for boogie, Leonard—and he would be the first to insist on the dropping of formalities—gave out with jazz such as has never been heard in Storyville before, and Storyville, in case you didn't know, is Boston's temple of jazz.

He played blues like Ethel Waters used to sing 'em, tragic as a widow's wail, cynical as an oboe in a lullaby, lonely as a train whistle at midnight, resigned as a bell buoy in a fog . . . and bugged the eyes of "PeeWee" Russell, the jazz great, who couldn't believe his own ears.

Audience Left Limp

Then, with the blues over, he went into a boogie beat which set every head to nodding, shoulders to swaying, feet to shuffling and glasses to bouncing, finishing off with "How High the Moon," "Lady Be Good" and other jazz standards, leaving the audience as limp as square dancers at a fiddlers' picnic.

It was a fabulous, a wonderful performance, and all there now know that when Mozart claimed Leonard's talents W. C. Handy lost a friend!

It could not have been so good, however, without the marvelous support given to him by the before-mentioned "PeeWee" Russell and his clarinet; J. C. Higginbotham and his trombone; the fine trumpet of Ruby Braff and the rhythms of Marcus Foster on the drums, and Jimmy Wood on the bass fiddle. He played one whole set with them, and returned later to join "PeeWee" in an improvised blues duet which, alone, would have made the evening a momentous occasion.

Leonard, incidentally, drove in all the way from Tanglewood to take part in the affair, which, after all, was staged for the same youngsters who, last Spring, helped him during the Festival of Arts he produced at Brandeis University.

"I had to come," he told the audience, "I owed it to these boys"—and the audience cheered.

Also on the show, and they, too, were sensational, were Sabby Lewis and the band from the Mayfair-Sugar Hill, while all during the evening other musicians gave out for the cause. J. C. Higginbotham, for instance, came over from the Brown Derby on Boylston st. to contribute his share, and a mighty share it was.

Hoped To Raise $1500

Major credits go to George Wein, the Storyville entrepreneur, who not only arranged the event in town, and got Leonard to take part in it, but also held a twin show at his Summer Storyville at the Hawthorne Inn in Gloucester, where Johnny Windhurst and his band held forth. George hoped to raise $1500 with the two events, and Your Reporter sincerely hopes he attained that objective.

Joe Nardone and the others at the Buckminster helped mightly, opening the room especially for the occasion, and donating all receipts to the fund. George and his staff return to the Bucwminster on Sept. 4, opening the Fall season with Billie Halliday, the great singer.

Leonard, incidentally, gave Your Reporter his version of that now-famous incident when Arki-Yavensonne, then managing the Satire room in the Fensgate, refused to hire him for $50-a-week.

"He offered me $45 and I held out for $50," says Leonard, "it was that simple..

"And am I glad I didn't take it!"

[250]

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
AUG 17 1952

The Gate Receipts for Baseball Lower Than Music?

By RUDOLPH ELIE

There was a little piece the other day in a popular weekly, I forget which one, that made the triumphant assertion "that nowadays the gate for concert music is bigger than the gate for baseball." By "gate," of course, the author means the box office receipts. He does not append the box office figures either for concert music or for baseball, and I have no idea what they could possibly be though certainly they are multi-million dollar enterprises.

Stimulated by this assertion, however, which seemed at first overly enthusiastic, I have been engaged in a little arithmetic to see how the Boston Symphony, from the point of view of gate receipts, stands up against the Braves and the Red Sox. The results seem to show pretty clearly that it is not so extravagant as it may sound: even in Boston alone the Boston Symphony's gate is within a respectable distance of those of the Braves and Sox combined.

The figures I have used are, I must confess, my own. I have not checked them against those of either the Boston Symphony or the two baseball teams; I propose to do this as soon as the information is available, if it ever is.

LOCAL OPERATIONS ONLY

First of all let us look at the indicated gate receipts of the Boston Symphony in its purely local operations. These local operations are the 24 regular concerts in Symphony Hall, the Sunday afternoon series, the Tuesday evening series, the Cambridge series, the rehearsal series and the 60-day Pops series. (The Esplanade series attracts an annual audience approaching 200,000 but there are no paid admissions.)

For a guess, based on averaging the ticket prices for these series at $8.00 top, I am reasonably certain that the total local gate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra just exceeds $800,000. (Its overall receipts from all sources, including Tanglewood with an annual audience close to 100,000, record royalties, broadcasting fees, etc., is well over a million dollars annually.)

I am less familiar with the operations of the Red Sox and the Braves, but simple calculations based on the fact that each team plays 77 home games in Boston each season, that the average of admissions is around $1.75, that the Red Sox attendance might average 10,000 (I think this might be high this season) while the Braves average considerably less it all comes out to a total gate receipt not much above $1,500,000.

Thus, in Boston alone, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's gate seems to be more than half of the combined gate of Boston's two major league teams in Boston. Save for New York and Philadelphia, I doubt that the local symphony orchestra's income approaches this mark. But it must not be forgotten that we are referring to the gate for concert music, which includes all forms of concert activities, and in Boston alone there are, in addition to the high-gate events of Aaron Richmond's various recital series, any number of smaller events whose gate, though relatively small, must swell the total well above the gate of the major league teams in the city.

MUSIC EVERYWHERE

Cast on a national scale, it is now easy to see that the claim that concert music commands a larger gate than baseball is true. High-grossing baseball games are confined to perhaps a dozen large cities—and usually big gates are confined to the league-leading teams or to games of a special interest. But live music concerts these days are everywhere; there is hardly a city in the United States with a population above 10,000 that does not have its own little orchestra with a respectable income (though perhaps not enough to make it a paying or self-supporting orchestra), its concert and recital series.

And all this is to forget the tremendous gate for concert music as represented by the sales of recorded classical music. Here again I can cite no exact figures, but considering the gigantic operations of RCA Victor, Columbia and, more recently, of Westminster, Concert Hall, Urania, Vox, Mercury, Cetra-Soria, Vanguard, London, and a dozen other recording firms, the total gate, at about $4 a disc, runs into untold millions.

I would not be prepared to hazard the guess that the total gate for concert music exceeds the total gate for all sports—though, excepting racing, it might come surprisingly close—but the assertion that it exceeds the gate for baseball is undeniable.

And what does all this prove? Well, at the moment nothing, save that American musical culture is progressing most satisfactorily and that the time has come for a much wider and a more serious coverage of the musical scene by press, radio and television, all of which now appear to operate on the assumption that for everybody who likes concert music, 100 like baseball. It is closer to the truth to assume that today many who like baseball like concert music, too.

This Clipping From
Saturday Review of Literature
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 30 1952

Letters to the RECORDINGS Editor

Repertoire for George Byron

SIR: Among the LETTERS TO THE RECORDINGS EDITOR in SR July 26 appears a letter from Hugh Samson of Baltimore, Maryland, which asks if the Desto people who have just recorded a Kern album featuring George Byron can be persuaded to record the singer's Gershwin album recorded some time ago under another label.

I would like to inform Mr. Samson that George Byron has re-recorded his old Gershwin album under the Desto label. There is one change in it—the substitution, at the suggestion of Ira Gershwin, of "Back Bay Polka" for "The Jolly Tune and the Milkmaid."

It might be of further interest to add that Byron has just completed a Rogers and Hart album and will be in the East in a few days to record a Cole Porter album of songs selected by the composer. He is contracted for a total of six albums. As he has not decided upon the composers for the last two, I am sure he would welcome suggestions re well-known composers whose lesser-known works the public wants to hear.

WALTER R. PICK.

New York, N. Y.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Any suggestions which readers may wish to make will be duly forwarded to Mr. Pick, who is George Byron's personal representative.

Recordings Wanted

SIR: . . . When is RCA Victor going to give us some LP recitals by Maggie Teyte, Sigrid Onegin, Tiana Lemnitz, and Elisabeth Schumann?

FRANKLIN A. WILLER.

Lancaster, Pa.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This suggestion would seem to fit in well with RCA's new series of His Master's Voice releases. Doubtless if the initial HMV issues are a commercial success, RCA will pursue this source of recorded material further.

SIR: Never have I heard more beautiful playing than is to be found in the recording by Karl Haas and the London Baroque Ensemble of Bach's "Brandenburg" Concertos 2 and 4 (Westminster). After the cold meat and soggy potatoes dished up by Casals, Klemperer, Koussevitzky, et al, it is a pleasure to hear these two magnificent works played with the proper instrumentation. After hearing these two wonderful works played with the clarity and precision that the London Baroque Ensemble bestows upon them, I am even more convinced that a hearty dislike for all types of music manifested by the bride of Prince Leopold of Cöthen and Bach's subsequent removal to the ecclesiastical drudgery of Leipzig deprived those of us with a more worldly trend of mind of a vast treasury of the sort of secular music that had its highest flowering at the time the "Brandenburg" Concertos were composed. Now to the point of all this: When are we to have the other four concertos recorded by the same group? And are there plans afoot at Westminster to bring out any other eighteenth-century music by the same ensemble. I already have Symphonies 1, 4, 6, and 8 of Dr. Boyce by them, and would like to own the other four.

GEORGE HOLBERT TUCKER.

Norfolk, Va.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Since the "ecclesiastical drudgery" resulted in the B minor Mass, the "Matthew Passion," and several score sacred and secular cantatas, we cannot take the deprivation of which Mr. Tucker complains too hard. As for future Haas-Baroque issues, Westminster reports that the remaining "Brandenburgs" and Boyce symphonies have already been recorded and are scheduled for release in 1953. Also on the way are some Haydn divertimenti by this group.

Pro Munch

SIR: I have attended the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for several years and in that time I have come to feel a considerable pride in the wonderful music-making of that great orchestra. I have read with interest your comments on the various records made by that orchestra under its conductor, Charles Munch. As I remember, there was no performance among these various recordings of Mr. Munch which you liked.

Now, Mr. Munch may not be the best hand at the works of German composers, but most people will at least agree that he is very highly thought of as a conductor of French music. But your recent review of his new recording of "La Valse" indicates that you dislike his readings of this sort of music also. . . . I suppose that I should not challenge your opinions, but I should like to say that I disagree with your very extreme appraisal of Mr. Munch's work. And I am certain that there is a legion of music-lovers who share my sentiments.

GILBERT R. CHERRICK.

Boston, Mass.

SIR: May I ask without implying undue disrespect what exactly is your attitude toward Charles Munch and the BSO? If I recall correctly, you have never admitted that Mr. Munch has waxed anything except a mediocre performance since his advent in Boston.

DAVID H. FLIGHT.

Fort Benning, Ga.

EDITOR'S NOTE: There is a fine distinction, but an important one nonetheless, between the standards applied in judging a concert performance and those used in evaluating a recorded interpretation. We have found Mr. Munch more than satisfactory as conductor of the Boston Symphony concerts—and have said so in print. But there is a difference between a single performance of the Beethoven Seventh in Carnegie Hall as part of a varied orchestral program and a record of the Seventh that must stand comparison with the recordings of Toscanini, Weingartner, Walter, et al. In this company, and in the Germanic repertoire, Mr. Munch as yet appears at a disadvantage. We have been very appreciative of this conductor's "Ibéria," "Daphnis et Chloe," and "Festin de l'Araignée"—to name a few items from the French repertoire he has recorded—and we hope that RCA will concentrate on exposing this side of his interpretative personality.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
RECORD
AUG 15 1952

Around Boston

Bernstein's Boogie Beat Bewitches Big Benefit

—By GEORGE CLARKE—

YOUNG MR. LEONARD BERNSTEIN, darling of the Boston Symphony and one of the country's most distinguished composers, conductors and pianists, literally tore Storyville to bits Wednesday night at a musical clam-bake put together for the benefit of the musicians who recently lost most of their all in a fire which destroyed their Summer cottage at Pigeon Cove in Rockport.

Forsaking Bach for boogie, Leonard—and he would be the first to insist on the dropping of formalities—gave out with jazz such as has never been heard in Storyville before, and Storyville, in case you didn't know, is Boston's temple of jazz.

He played blues like Ethel Waters used to sing 'em, tragic as a widow's wail, cynical as an oboe in a lullaby, lonely as a train whistle at midnight, resigned as a bell buoy in a fog . . . and bugged the eyes of "PeeWee" Russell, the jazz great, who couldn't believe his own ears.

Audience Left Limp

Then, with the blues over, he went into a boogie beat which set every head to nodding, shoulders to swaying, feet to shuffling and glasses to bouncing, finishing off with "How High the Moon," "Lady Be Good" and other jazz standards, leaving the audience as limp as square dancers at a fiddlers' picnic.

It was a fabulous, a wonderful performance, and all there now know that when Mozart claimed Leonard's talents W. C. Handy lost a friend!

It could not have been so good, however, without the marvelous support given to him by the before-mentioned "PeeWee" Russell and his clarinet; J. C. Higginbotham and his trombone; the fine trumpet of Ruby Braff and the rhythms of Marcus Foster on the drums, and Jimmy Wood on the bass fiddle. He played one whole set with them, and returned later to join "PeeWee" in an improvised blues duet which, alone, would have made the evening a momentous occasion.

Leonard, incidentally, drove in all the way from Tanglewood to take part in the affair, which, after all, was staged for the same youngsters who, last Spring, helped him during the Festival of Arts he produced at Brandeis University.

"I had to come," he told the audience, "I owed it to these boys"—and the audience cheered.

Also on the show, and they, too, were sensational, were Sabby Lewis and the band from the Mayfair-Sugar Hill, while all during the evening other musicians gave out for the cause. J. C. Higginbotham, for instance, came over from the Brown Derby on Boylston st. to contribute his share, and a mighty share it was.

Hoped To Raise $1500

Major credits go to George Wein, the Storyville entrepreneur, who not only arranged the event in town, and got Leonard to take part in it, but also held a twin show at his Summer Storyville at the Hawthorne Inn in Gloucester, where Johnny Windhurst and his band held forth. George hoped to raise $1500 with the two events, and Your Reporter sincerely hopes he attained that objective.

Joe Nardone and the others at the Buckminster helped mightily, opening the room especially for the occasion, and donating all receipts to the fund. George and his staff return to the Bucwminster on Sept. 4, opening the Fall season with Billie Halliday, the great singer.

Leonard, incidentally, gave Your Reporter his version of that now-famous incident when Arki-Yavensonne, then managing the Satire room in the Fensgate, refused to hire him for $50-a-week.

"He offered me $45 and I held out for $50," says Leonard, "it was that simple.

"And am I glad I didn't take it!"

[252]

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
AUG 17 1952

The Gate Receipts for Baseball Lower Than Music?

By RUDOLPH ELIE

There was a little piece the other day in a popular weekly, I forget which one, that made the triumphant assertion "that nowadays the gate for concert music is bigger than the gate for baseball." By "gate," of course, the author means the box office receipts. He does not append the box office figures either for concert music or for baseball, and I have no idea what they could possibly be, though certainly they are multi-million dollar enterprises.

Stimulated by this assertion, however, which seemed at first overly enthusiastic, I have been engaged in a little arithmetic to see how the Boston Symphony, from the point of view of gate receipts, stands up against the Braves and the Red Sox. The results seem to show pretty clearly that it is not so extravagant as it may sound: even in Boston alone the Boston Symphony's gate is within a respectable distance of those of the Braves and Sox combined.

The figures I have used are, I must confess, my own. I have not checked them against those of either the Boston Symphony or the two baseball teams; I propose to do this as soon as the information is available, if it ever is.

LOCAL OPERATIONS ONLY

First of all let us look at the indicated gate receipts of the Boston Symphony in its purely local operations. These local operations are the 24 regular concerts in Symphony Hall, the Sunday afternoon series, the Tuesday evening series, the Cambridge series, the rehearsal series and the 60-day Pops series. (The Esplanade series attracts an annual audience approaching 200,000 but there are no paid admissions.)

For a guess, based on averaging the ticket prices for these series at $8.00 top, I am reasonably certain that the total local gate of the Boston Symphony Orchestra just exceeds $800,000. (Its overall receipts from all sources, including Tanglewood with an annual audience close to 100,000, record royalties, broadcasting fees, etc., is well over a million dollars annually.)

I am less familiar with the operations of the Red Sox and the Braves, but simple calculations based on the fact that each team plays 77 home games in Boston each season, that the average of admissions is around $1.75, that the Red Sox attendance might average 10,000 (I think this might be high this season) while the Braves average considerably less it all comes out to a total gate receipt not much above $1,500,000.

Thus, in Boston alone, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's gate seems to be more than half of the combined gate of Boston's two major league teams in Boston. Save for New York and Philadelphia, I doubt that the local symphony orchestra's income approaches this mark. But it must not be forgotten that we are referring to the gate for concert music, which includes all forms of concert activities, and in Boston alone there are, in addition to the high-gate events of Aaron Richmond's various recital series, any number of smaller events whose gate, though relatively small, must swell the total well above the gate of the major league teams in the city.

MUSIC EVERYWHERE

Cast on a national scale, it is now easy to see that the claim that concert music commands a larger gate than baseball is true. High-grossing baseball games are confined to perhaps a dozen large cities—and usually big gates are confined to the league-leading teams or to games of a special interest. But live music concerts these days are everywhere; there is hardly a city in the United States with a population above 10,000 that does not have its own little orchestra with a respectable income (though perhaps not enough to make it a paying or self-supporting orchestra), its concert and recital series.

And all this is to forget the tremendous gate for concert music as represented by the sales of recorded classical music. Here again I can cite no exact figures, but considering the gigantic operations of RCA Victor, Columbia and, more recently, of Westminster, Concert Hall, Urania, Vox, Mercury, Cetra-Soria, Vanguard, London, and a dozen other recording firms, the total gate, at about $4 a disc, runs into untold millions.

I would not be prepared to hazard the guess that the total gate for concert music exceeds the total gate for all sports—though, excepting racing, it might come surprisingly close—but the assertion that it exceeds the gate for baseball is undeniable.

And what does all this prove? Well, at the moment nothing, save that American musical culture is progressing most satisfactorily and that the time has come for a much wider and a more serious coverage of the musical scene by press, radio and television, all of which now appear to operate on the assumption that for everybody who likes concert music, 100 like baseball. It is closer to the truth to assume that today many who like baseball like concert music, too.

BLANK PAGE

[253]

BLANK PAGE

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL HERALD
AUG 16 1952

"Possibility" Exists Of Boston Symphony Visit

Prohibitive Guarantee Now Stands In Way, But Future Talks On Subject Are Slated

It is news when only so much as a "possibility" exists that Dayton may be visited by the famous Boston Symphony orchestra the coming season.

The facts are that the orchestra will make its first transcontinental tour next spring and representatives of the orchestra already have explored the local situation, with a view toward booking a concert here.

Miriam Rosenthal, with whom contacts have been made, says a prohibitive guarantee now stands in the way of booking.

"I don't care if I don't make any money on it but I'd like at least to come out even," she says.

The matter is now in abeyance, with promise that the orchestra representative will be back in September to talk further on the subject—and possibly reduce the tariff to within reasonable limits.

The tour will be for five weeks, starting April 20, with about 30 concerts to play. The orchestra will travel south to Atlanta and New Orleans, west to Los Angeles and San Francisco and return to its home base along a route that will include Denver, Chicago and Toronto. Charles Munch, permanent conductor, will alternate on the tour with Pierre Monteux.

In addition to the Boston Symphony tour, there will be a 10-week tour by the Boston Pops orchestra with Arthur Fiedler leading this junket through the Middle West, South and Southeast during January, February and March!

Music Club Calendar

With a "grass roots" operetta by a former Daytonian as its major effort, the Dayton Music club has outlined an attractive program of visiting artists for the coming season.

The opera, called "Smoky Mountain," using Appalachian tunes as a basis, is the work of Eusebia Simpson (Hunkins), a native of Troy, who lived in Dayton quite a number of years.

She now resides in Athens,O., where her husband is dean of men in the university. The opera has been done a number of times there and has just recently been released for public performance.

Mrs. Hunkins will be invited to attend the local showing, to be held on the night of May 5 in the Art institute. Miss Esther I. Seaver, institute director, is co-operating in its presentation.

Among the artists booked is James Friskin, head teacher of piano at Juilliard, who will give a recital Oct. 14 in the Art institute.

Another will be PhyllisCurtin, one of the country's younger sopranos who has been making a big hit in her concerts in the East. She will sing Nov. 25 at a meeting of the club in the Biltmore hotel.

The La Pasquer trio, three brothers forming a French stringed instrument unit, now touring for the seventh year, will appear March 24 at the Engineers club.

The club will hold a Beethoven program Nov. 11 in the Art institute in commemoration of the 125th anniversary of the death of the composer. Then on Jan. 20 it will get in step with the Ohio Sesquicentennial celebration through a program by Ohio composers. This will be at the YWCA.

The Dayton Music club's own chorus concert is set for May 12 at the Biltmore, with Jaroslav Holesovsky, concertmeister of the Dayton Philharmonic orchestra as soloist.

Daytonian Graduates

Remember Ted Eichelberger, of 686 Far Hills avenue, who several years ago was rated as something of a "boy wonder" on the piano?

Haven't heard much from Ted lately but Monday at 8:15 p.m. in Hughes hall auditorium, Columbus, he will be presented by Ohio State university School of Music in a graduating recital.

Ted will play "Prelude and Fugue in B Flat Major," by Bach; "Intermezzo, Op. 18, No. 2, by Brahms, and "Prelude in A Minor," by Debussy. Then will come two Chopin numbers, "Nocturne in B Flat Minor" and "Polonaise in C Sharp Minor." Second half of the program will reveal his interpretation of Grieg's "Concerto in A Minor."

Heard In Europe

Returning recently from a trip abroad, Mr. and Mrs. J. Kirby Mayse, of 105 Oxford avenue, were enthusiastic over the concerts they had heard, especially in Oxford, England.

There they heard the Oxford Orchestral society, made up of more than 100 amateurs, in a jubilee concert. Their performance was considerably above amateur level, they said.

Then in the Sheldonian theater, built by Sir Christopher Wren and seating about 4,000, they heard another amateur group of 150 sing a fine Bach program under the baton of professional conductors.

One of the fine things they heard was "Serenade to Music," by Ralph Vaughan Williams, now 80 years old, which is based on the verse from "The Merchant of Venice" reading "How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank."

The high spot was reached when in the Exeter Cathedral they heard the united choirs of the archdiocese of Exeter, 1,000 voices strong, singing a program of the sacred music of the Church of England. This was a most impressive occasion, they said.

Library Music

Noontime disc concerts by the Dayton Public Library will continue next week with Bach and Beethoven selections Monday and Thursday; Prokofieff, Liszt and Ravel's "Bolero" and "Mother Goose Suite" Tuesday and Friday, and three more popular selections for Wednesday and Saturday. They are listed as selections from "Finian's Rainbow," folk songs by Burl Ives and a Strauss concert waltz.

This Clipping From
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 20 1952

5 Longtimers Retire From Boston Symph

Boston, Aug. 19.

An RCA Victor recording sesh at Symphony Hall by Boston Symphony Orch today (Tues.), marks the bowout of five veteran members who have been with the organization for periods ranging from 1916. Oldest, in point of service, is Boaz Piller, contra-bassoonist. Others are George Laurent, first flutist since 1921; Max Polster, member of percussion section since 1918; Lucien Hansotte, trombonist since 1925, and violinist Gaston Elcus, member since 1926.

Retiring musicians were feted by maestro Charles Munch and other members of orchestra at party held at Tanglewood last week, with each presented an inscribed watch.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 25 1952

5 WIN FRENCH TRIBUTE

Munch, Kennedy, Schoenbrun Picked by Legion of Honor

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 24—Several Americans are on the list of those of honors announced today by the French Legion of Honor.

Horton Parmalee Kennedy, who for the last three years has been president of the American Club of Paris, has been made a commander in the Legion of Honor, as has Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who participated in the international festival of twentieth-century masterpieces in Paris this year.

David Schoenbrun, representing the Columbia Broadcasting Company in Paris, was made a chevalier.

This Clipping From
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

Boston Symph's Big Tour

Boston, Aug. 19.

Final plans for a five-week transcontinental tour by Boston Symphony Orch next spring are being completed by [illegible] Charles Munch and [illegible] George Judd.

Contemplated tour, slated to get underway next April 20, will include 30 concerts covering as far south as Atlanta and New Orleans, west to Los Angeles and San Francisco. A concert in Toronto is also planned.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
POST

So popular has been the second summer concert series at Castle Hill on the Crane Memorial Foundation in Ipswich, which ended last Saturday, that the memorial foundation has added two pairs of extra concerts, scheduled for Friday and Saturday evenings, this and the following week end. The Zimbler String Sinfonietta, 16 leading players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Josef Zimbler—will be featured in a program of chamber music for the first week end. Proceeds will again be devoted to the foundation's goal of making the beautiful reservation one of the foremost cultural centres in the East.

Clr. (D 362,193)
This Clipping From TORONTO, CANADA
STAR 3
AUG 9 - 1952

By HUGH THOMSON

Wish I could have been present at events leading up to and during the session in Victor's Manhattan Centre studio which produced the recording of Stokowski and his orchestra playing "Percy Grainger Favorites," with the composer at the piano. Contents: Country Gardens, Shepherd's Hey, Mock Morris, Handel in the Strand, Danny Boy, Molly on the Shore, Early One Morning.

It would be hard to imagine a meeting of two more dissimilar personalities and musical artists.

Stokowski is the idealist who would exclude everything unpleasant from his world and music-making. He has burned incense at rehearsal to induce some exotic mood in the orchestra and at concerts had a concealed spotlight pick off his gracefully sweeping hands. Ebullient Percy loves the outdoors, hiking and especially folk music; loathes anything pretentious. His appearance off stage, and sometimes on, has been compared to an unmade bed.

"Village Green" Percy

Stoky's sartorial splendor is renowned. He has a lease on a string of ivory towers that never seems to expire.

Hearing his "schmaltzy" conducting here of Percy's "Danny Boy," you wonder how Grainger took to it with his allergy to hothouse sentiment being applied to simple, folksy emotion. Can't help feeling some of Stoky the sophisticate rubbed off on Percy of the village green, and vice versa, at this session. You will detect no uncharacteristic cynicism nor modernity of style in Percy's arrangement of the familiar "Country Gardens." This program, then, is one you'll have to judge for yourself.

Same advice applies to Columbia's super-brilliant L.P. (long-play), "Curtain Time," with Morton Gould arranger and pianist-conductor in it. Contents: Old Devil Moon, Bewitched, Poor Pierrot, Mine, September Song, Bad Timing, So In Love, What is There to Say?

Confetti Kid

Who doesn't like good show tunes such as many of these, but you may feel when Gould gets through with them, dressing some in the high style of a Rachmaninoff piano concerto, throwing orchestral effects at others like one of these eager beavers at a wedding armed with bags of confetti, their simple appeal and melodies are lost. But, then, you may be one who prefers Niagara Falls illuminated to the daytime view. It's entirely a matter of taste.

Those with an aversion to such slick commercialism may feel the same way about Kostelanetz's (Columbia) Gershwin L.P. program consisting of "Cuban Overture"; "Porgy and Bess" highlights, same as appeared on his big-selling single disc several years ago; "Love Walked In"; "Mine." After Kosty's recent Columbia long-plays of Swan Lake extracts and standard pop-concert items played "straight," the genial maestro goes back here to the old Kostelanetz sound on which he built his vast following.

Complete "Pal Joey" Score

For my part I found greater enjoyment in the Columbia L.P. of the Hart-Rodgers "Pal Joey," starring Vivienne Segal of the original cast and Harold Lang. It must be a delightful musical comedy of some originality, judged by this recording of the complete score which has been capitally produced and reproduced.

Highspots for our family were the haunting "Bewitched," the blues number "That Terrific Rainbow" and love song "I Could Write a Book." The fellows in charge of Melody Fair at Dufferin Park tell me it's an outstanding show to see, and I wouldn't doubt it from this disc which is highly recommended for summer listening and, especially, those who have written or called asking for good summer-cottage records.

Aged Boston Brahms' Brew

Victor reissues on L.P. the 1939 recording of Brahms' Violin Concerto by Heifetz and Boston Symphony orchestra under the late Koussevitzky. This was a landmark in recording and remains an impressive job of engineering.

This corner's favorite version of the concerto happens to be the London L.P. by Renardy, violinist, and Concertgebouw orchestra under Munch. It is a surprisingly lyrical treatment, with rapport between soloist and conductor about the whole conception of the work and fairly close microphone pick-up which doesn't diffuse the sound too much. It's highly "phonogenic." Sound is diffused in Victor's 1939 Boston Symphony hall recording, but the relatively distant pick-up accords with the performance which stresses the grandiose in a compelling, brilliant fashion. But don't overlook the London Renardy-Munch L.P.

Blend Four Keyboards

Victor releases an L.P. program by the First Piano Quartet of Mozart's Air and Variations, Turkish March; Schubert's "Trout" Variations; Schumann's "Traumerei" and "Traumeswirren"; Wagner's "Liebestod"; Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre," The Swan; Rimsky-Korsakoff's Spanish Caprice. This popular radio ensemble plays with precision. Their four-keyboard arrangements of works written for other media may have the element of novelty but do little to enhance pure musical values. The four pianos have been placed in such a way and the artists have so developed their ensemble playing that there's good blend and unanimity of expression. You're not aware of four keyboards going at it together, every man for himself. Why not for the cottage?

Been asked about the lower-priced Remington L.P. of Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto by Wuhrer, pianist, and Austrian Symphony under Randolf. I'd say it's a bargain at the price asked.

I've never heard of the pianist, but he plays with feeling and style and his piano is well recorded. The orchestra doesn't sound like a polished group, too well rehearsed with the soloist, and comes rather harshly off my review copy.

This corner still backs the London version by Backhaus, pianist, and Vienna Philharmonic under Krauss on L.P. and the last Schnabel recording on (HMV) 78 rpm discs, made shortly before his death.

[a55]

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL HERALD
AUG 16 1952

"Possibility" Exists Of Boston Symphony Visit

Prohibitive Guarantee Now Stands In Way, But Future Talks On Subject Are Slated

It is news when only so much as a "possibility" exists that Dayton may be visited by the famous Boston Symphony orchestra the coming season.

The facts are that the orchestra will make its first transcontinental tour next spring and representatives of the orchestra already have explored the local situation, with a view toward booking a concert here.

Miriam Rosenthal, with whom contacts have been made, says a prohibitive guarantee now stands in the way of booking.

"I don't care if I don't make any money on it but I'd like at least to come out even," she says.

The matter is now in abeyance, with promise that the orchestra representative will be back in September to talk further on the subject—and possibly reduce the tariff to within reasonable limits.

The tour will be for five weeks, starting April 20, with about 30 concerts to play. The orchestra will travel south to Atlanta and New Orleans, west to Los Angeles and San Francisco and return to its home base along a route that will include Denver, Chicago and Toronto. Charles Munch, permanent conductor, will alternate on the tour with Pierre Monteux.

In addition to the Boston Symphony tour, there will be a 10-week tour by the Boston Pops orchestra with Arthur Fiedler leading this junket through the Middle West, South and Southeast during January, February and March!

Music Club Calendar

With a "grass roots" operetta by a former Daytonian as its major effort, the Dayton Music club has outlined an attractive program of visiting artists for the coming season.

The opera, called "Smoky Mountain," using Appalachian tunes as a basis, is the work of Eusebia Simpson (Hunkins), a native of Troy, who lived in Dayton quite a number of years.

She now resides in Athens,O., where her husband is dean of men in the university. The opera has been done a number of times there and has just recently been released for public performance.

Mrs. Hunkins will be invited to attend the local showing, to be held on the night of May 5 in the Art institute. Miss Esther I. Seaver, institute director, is co-operating in its presentation.

Among the artists booked is James Friskin, head teacher of piano at Juilliard, who will give a recital Oct. 14 in the Art institute.

Another will be PhyllisCurtin, one of the country's younger sopranos who has been making a big hit in her concerts in the East. She will sing Nov. 25 at a meeting of the club in the Biltmore hotel.

The La Pasquer trio, three brothers forming a French stringed instrument unit, now touring for the seventh year, will appear March 24 at the Engineers club.

The club will hold a Beethoven program Nov. 11 in the Art institute in commemoration of the 125th anniversary of the death of the composer. Then on Jan. 20 it will get in step with the Ohio Sesquicentennial celebration through a program by Ohio composers. This will be at the YWCA.

The Dayton Music club's own chorus concert is set for May 12 at the Biltmore, with Jaroslav Holesovsky, concertmeister of the Dayton Philharmonic orchestra as soloist.

Daytonian Graduates

Remember Ted Eichelberger, of 686 Far Hills avenue, who several years ago was rated as something of a "boy wonder" on the piano?

Haven't heard much from Ted lately but Monday at 8:15 p.m. in Hughes hall auditorium, Columbus, he will be presented by Ohio State university School of Music in a graduating recital.

Ted will play "Prelude and Fugue in B Flat Major," by Bach; "Intermezzo, Op. 18, No. 2, by Brahms, and "Prelude in A Minor," by Debussy. Then will come two Chopin numbers, "Nocturne in B Flat Minor" and "Polonaise in C Sharp Minor." Second half of the program will reveal his interpretation of Grieg's "Concerto in A Minor."

Heard In Europe

Returning recently from a trip abroad, Mr. and Mrs. J. Kirby Mayse, of 105 Oxford avenue, were enthusiastic over the concerts they had heard, especially in Oxford, England.

There they heard the Oxford Orchestral society, made up of more than 100 amateurs, in a jubilee concert. Their performance was considerably above amateur level, they said.

Then in the Sheldonian theater, built by Sir Christopher Wren and seating about 4,000, they heard another amateur group of 150 sing a fine Bach program under the baton of professional conductors.

One of the fine things they heard was "Serenade to Music," by Ralph Vaughan Williams, now 80 years old, which is based on the verse from "The Merchant of Venice" reading "How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank."

The high spot was reached when in the Exeter Cathedral they heard the united choirs of the archdiocese of Exeter, 1,000 voices strong, singing a program of the sacred music of the Church of England. This was a most impressive occasion, they said.

Library Music

Noontime disc concerts by the Dayton Public Library will continue next week with Bach and Beethoven selections Monday and Thursday; Prokofieff, Liszt and Ravel's "Bolero" and "Mother Goose Suite" Tuesday and Friday, and three more popular selections for Wednesday and Saturday. They are listed as selections from "Finian's Rainbow," folk songs by Burl Ives and a Strauss concert waltz.

This Clipping From
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 20 1952

5 Longtimers Retire From Boston Symph

Boston, Aug. 19.

An RCA Victor recording sesh at Symphony Hall by Boston Symphony Orch today (Tues.), marks the bowout of five veteran members who have been with the organization for periods ranging from 1916. Oldest, in point of service, is Boaz Piller, contra-bassoonist. Others are George Laurent, first flutist since 1921; Max Polster, member of percussion section since 1918; Lucien Hansotte, trombonist since 1925, and violinist Gaston Elcus, member since 1926.

Retiring musicians were feted by maestro Charles Munch and other members of orchestra at party held at Tanglewood last week, with each presented an inscribed watch.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 25 1952

5 WIN FRENCH TRIBUTE

Munch, Kennedy, Schoenbrun Picked by Legion of Honor

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 24—Several Americans are on the list of those of honors announced today by the French Legion of Honor.

Horton Parmalee Kennedy, who for the last three years has been president of the American Club of Paris, has been made a commander in the Legion of Honor, as has Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who participated in the international festival of twentieth-century masterpieces in Paris this year.

David Schoenbrun, representing the Columbia Broadcasting Company in Paris, was made a chevalier.

This Clipping From
VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
1952

Boston Symph's Big Tour

Boston, Aug. 19.

Final plans for a five-week transcontinental tour by Boston Symphony Orch next spring are being completed by maestro Charles Munch and manager George Judd.

Contemplated tour, slated to get underway next April 20, will include 30 concerts covering as far south as Atlanta and New Orleans, west to Los Angeles and San Francisco. A concert in Toronto is also planned.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
POST

So popular has been the second summer concert series at Castle Hill on the Crane Memorial Reservation in Ipswich, which ended last Saturday, that the memorial foundation has added two pairs of extra concerts, scheduled for Friday and Saturday evenings, this and the following week end. The Zimbler String Sinfonietta—16 leading players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Josef Zimbler—will be featured in a program of chamber music for the first week end. Proceeds will again be devoted to the foundation's goal of making the beautiful reservation one of the foremost cultural centres in the East.

Cir. (D 362,193)
This Clipping From TORONTO, CANADA
STAR 3
AUG 9 - 1952

By HUGH THOMSON

Wish I could have been present at events leading up to and during the session in Victor's Manhattan Centre studio which produced the recording of Stokowski and his orchestra playing "Percy Grainger Favorites," with the composer at the piano. Contents: Country Gardens, Shepherd's Hey, Mock Morris, Handel in the Strand, Danny Boy, Molly on the Shore, Early One Morning.

It would be hard to imagine a meeting of two more dissimilar personalities and musical artists.

Stokowski is the idealist who would exclude everything unpleasant from his world and music-making. He has burned incense at rehearsal to induce some exotic mood in the orchestra and at concerts had a concealed spotlight pick off his gracefully sweeping hands. Ebullient Percy loves the outdoors, hiking and especially folk music; loathes anything pretentious. His appearance off stage, and sometimes on, has been compared to an unmade bed.

"Village Green" Percy

Stoky's sartorial splendor is renowned. He has a lease on a string of ivory towers that never seems to expire.

Hearing his "schmaltzy" conducting here of Percy's "Danny Boy," you wonder how Grainger took to it with his allergy to hothouse sentiment being applied to simple, folksy emotion. Can't help feeling some of Stoky the sophisticate rubbed off on Percy of the village green, and vice versa, at this session. You will detect the uncharacteristic cynicism and modernity of style in Percy's arrangement of the familiar "Country Gardens." This program, then, is one you'll have to judge for yourself.

Same advice applies to Columbia's super-brilliant L.P. (long-play), "Curtain Time," with Morton Gould arranger and pianist-conductor in it. Contents: Old Devil Moon, Bewitched, Poor Pierrot, Mine, September Song, Bad Timing, So In Love, What is There to Say?

Confetti Kid

Who doesn't like good show tunes such as many of these, but you may feel when Gould gets through with them, dressing some in the high style of a Rachmaninoff piano concerto, throwing orchestral effects at others like one of those eager beavers at a wedding armed with bags of confetti, their simple appeal and melodies are lost. But, then, you may be one who prefers Niagara Falls illuminated to the daytime view. It's entirely a matter of taste.

Those with an aversion to such slick commercialism may feel the same way about Kostelanetz's (Columbia) Gershwin L.P. program consisting of "Cuban Overture"; "Porgy and Bess" highlights, same as appeared on his big-selling single disk several years ago; "Love Walked In"; "Mine." After Kosty's recent Columbia long-plays of Swan Lake extracts and standard pop-concert items played "straight," the genial maestro goes back here to the old Kostelanetz sound on which he built his vast following.

Complete "Pal Joey" Score

For my part I found greater enjoyment in the Columbia L.P. of the Hart-Rodgers "Pal Joey," starring Vivienne Segal of the original cast and Harold Lang. It must be a delightful musical comedy of some originality, judged by this recording of the complete score which has been capitally produced and reproduced.

Highspots for our family were the haunting "Bewitched," the blues number "That Terrific Rainbow" and love song "I Could Write a Book." The fellows in charge of Melody Fair at Dufferin Park tell me it's an outstanding show to see, and I wouldn't doubt it from this disc which is highly recommended for summer listening and, especially, those who have written or called asking for good summer-cottage records.

Aged Boston Brahms' Brew

Victor reissues on L.P. the 1939 recording of Brahms' Violin Concerto by Heifetz and Boston Symphony orchestra under the late Koussevitzky. This was a landmark in recording and remains an impressive job of engineering.

This corner's favorite version of the concerto happens to be the London L.P. by Renardy, violinist, and Concertgebouw orchestra under Munch. It is a surprisingly lyrical treatment, with rapport between soloist and conductor about the whole conception of the work and fairly close microphone pick-up which doesn't diffuse the sound too much. It's highly "phonogenic." Sound is diffused in Victor's 1939 Boston Symphony hall recording, but the relatively distant pick-up accords with the performance which stresses the grandiose in a compelling, brilliant fashion. But don't overlook the London Renardy-Munch L.P.

Blend Four Keyboards

Victor releases an L.P. program by the First Piano Quartet of Mozart's Air and Variations, Turkish March; Schubert's "Trout" Variations; Schumann's "Traumerei" and "Traumeswirren"; Wagner's "Liebestod"; Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre," The Swan; Rimsky-Korsakoff's Spanish Caprice. This popular radio ensemble plays with precision. Their four-keyboard arrangements of works written for other media may have the element of novelty but do little to enhance pure musical values. The four pianos have been placed in such a way and the artists have so developed their ensemble playing that there's good blend and unanimity of expression. You're not aware of four keyboards going at it together, every man for himself. Why not for the cottage?

Been asked about the lower-priced Remington L.P. of Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto by Wuhrer, pianist, and Austrian Symphony under Randolf. I'd say it's a bargain at the price asked.

I've never heard of the pianist, but he plays with feeling and style and his piano is well recorded. The orchestra doesn't sound like a polished group, too well rehearsed with the soloist, and comes rather harshly off my review copy.

This corner still backs the London version by Backhaus, pianist, and Vienna Philharmonic under Krauss on L.P. and the last Schnabel recording on (HMV) 78 rpm discs, made shortly before his death.

BOSTON.

AN ENGLISHWOMAN'S IMPRESSIONS.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

... the hub of creation: ... baked bean and cod; ... not speaks only to Lowell ... speaks only—to God.

... rhyme I heard, long ago, ... poem who gave it as ... idea of Boston held by ... his own countrymen. ... would suggest that, like ... its basis was wofully ... knowledge acquired from the ... links, for instance, that ... critical; and of herself. She ... travelled, world-widely ... languages, receptive of ... et, while jealously retentive ... ancient classicism. She is ... art, in every form.

... course, a rich city; but ... you see less flaunting of ... perhaps, less apparent ... among the possessors of it. ... love everything of the ... mind: as witness their Sargent-... library, their expenditure on ... which cannot, to please them, be ... exquisitely "presented," their ... symphony orchestra. In the ... of a vast oblong hall, ... built for acoustics and of ... and dignified a decoration, you ... see, musically "at home" and ... more of anything but the music. ... make it, is the "note" of Boston—... and quietness.

... mans, who are in the habit of ... yearly, such centres of music as ... London, Vienna, and Leipzig, ... convinced, though they make no ... claim to it, that Serge Kous-... has made of their orchestra the ... in the world. Having heard ... orchestras in Buenos Aires, where, ... financially, nothing is allowed to stand ... the way of perfection; knowing our ... London and other English orchestras ... remembering them with men like ... and Goossens wielding the baton, ... was sceptical. To any music lover ... doubts the genuineness of one's ... conversion one would say, take the next ... across and hear for yourself!

... is it done? Frankly, by money; ... one would like to have it done in our ... music-loving England. Every year ... seat of the afternoon recitals is ... subscribed for the entire season. ... so, and with the addition of the ... and week-end programmes, the ... out-distance income and the ... is always met by subscription. ... you not be able on any occasion ... your ticket you return it to the box-... and it is re-sold to aid the funds. ... are the comments made should ... be, as rarely happens, an empty ... Every one, naturally, knows every-... else, and your lack of decency in ... a seat and, at the same time, ... the funds of increment is ... a crime.

... ways the city reminds one of ... a vastly smaller but no less ... London. There is the city ... with its flocks of tame ... and its friendly squirrels; its ... House with gilded dome and ... steps; its Chestnut-street, ... Georgian-fronted houses smack, ... of an age of crinolines and ... chairs.

... worth while crossing the Atlantic ... Chestnut-street on Christmas ... is it, by the way, that no one ... us, save casually, of their Christ-... eggs? All New England is ... tree'd. Salem, of witches' ... every, every little township ... lit up electrically with reds ... and blues and yellows of the ... richness one gets in old church-... glass and stuck in specially-... holes in the pavements of all ... Hundreds of them, one for ... yards or so. No house in all ... you traversed to the Midnight ... to a non-Catholic, was the ... of musical loveliness, but was ... window of it, with a green ... with red—the Christ colour—... to its lower ledges, with a ... candles varying, crescent-wise, ... from something above nothing-... a foot. No one, on that night, ... blinds. Every one, however poor, ... splurge" of electric or candle ... till long after midnight. ... country they bank chiefly on ... Christmas trees, toy-strewn, ... living-room window and dis-... passers-by in a mystery of red ... shops? Blasphemy, perhaps, to a ...; but I have found no Bond-... one did in Buenos Aires, whose ... is but a smaller replica of ... Nash of streets. But Paris, ... and New York are as accessible ... Bostonian as London to the ... Bradford. Which may explain ... smartness" of the womenfolk; ... smartness, of the obvious sort, ... thing a Bostonian desires.

The men, as a rule, are too busy to worry overmuch about dress; the women, you are delighted to find, are largely concerned to be natural. It is, definitely, not "the thing" to be bobbed, shingled, or Eton-cropped. In an entire and packed concert audience of fashionable folk one saw not a single short-haired girl or woman; and every head was displayed, Boston's characteristic by-law banning headgear in concert-hall or theatre. Grey hair was as prevalent as gold or black or brown, dyeing being, one finds, the other unthinkable feminine sin.

The men? Sit in your car, at luncheon time, in one of the business quarters, State-street for instance, and there streams by you as cosmopolitan a crowd as you will see in far vaster cities; go within the doors of any great business concern, bank, law offices, or what-not, and you find just plain Bostonians. This being America one had expected a sort of breathless hustle. The atmosphere of a great law firm, one discovered, was not greatly dissimilar from that of a smaller cathedral! Dignity, restraint. Women clerks certainly, but no chewing-gum; the talk just one degree above a whisper. Boston may be cosmopolitan but its strings, surely, are pulled by New England.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR TO-DAY.

Amalgamated Union of Operative Bakers, Confectioners, and Allied Workers of Great Britain and Ireland: Annual conference, Cardiff.

1912 Club: Mr. W. Stutters on "Equal Franchise and Political Parties," 36, Bucklersbury, 8.

Lyric Theatre: Her Cardboard Lover, 8.30.

Funeral: The Dean of Salisbury, Farnham Royal, 2.30.

Marriage: Major J. D. Bibby and Miss J. D. Carnegie, St. Bartholomew's, Rogate, 2.15.

CHURCH BROTHERHOOD.

The rector of Wheathampstead, Herts, the Rev. A. M. Baird-Smith, dedicated on Sunday a stained-glass window in the Wesleyan Church at The Folly, an adjoining hamlet, commemorating its members who fell in the War. He said that he performed the ceremony with the full approval of the Bishop of St. Albans, and, personally, he was out to promote anything which tended towards brotherhood and kindness in the district, for they all saw eye to eye in the object of their worship.

[250]

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

New York HERALD TRIBUNE

New York — 28 DÉC 1951

Boston Symphony, City Ballet Going to Paris Festival in May

By Paul V. Beckley

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its first European appearance with three concerts at the Festival of the Arts at Paris in May, it was disclosed yesterday ina joint announcement by Nicolas Nabokov, secretary-general of the Congress for Cultural Freedom, and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston orchestra.

As the major American representative at the festival, which is sponsored by the Congress, the Boston Symphony will stay in Europe two weeks and also play in Belgium, Holland, Austria, Switzerland and other Fernch communities. The cost of this overseas trip for the 104-member orchestra is estimated from $150,000 to $175,000.

It was also disclosed that plans have been completed for the New York City Ballet Company to give six performances at the festival, including an all-Stravinsky program conducted by the composer.

Negro Opera Company Listed

In addition, an all-Negro company recruited in this country is to perform the opera, "Four Saints in Three Acts," composed by Virgil Thomson, with Gertrude Stein's libretto. This opera, which ran for forty-eight performances in 1934 at the former Forty-fourth Street Theater, will be staged for its Paris performance by John Houseman and Frederick Ashton. Mr. Thomson, who is music critic of the New York Herald Tribune, will conduct the first performance.

The American cultural invasion of Paris will be further abetted by the inclusion of a number of American paintings in an exhibition of 200 contemporary works representative of Western culture assembled by James Johnson Sweeney, a former director of the Museum of Modern Art. A number of American poets and writers are also scheduled to address literary forums during the festival.

This will be the second year in a row that European audiences will hear concerts by a major American symphony orchestra. The New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra played a series of concerts at the Edinburgh Festival last September.

It was understood the Boston organization will play at the Paris Opera House, and the New York City Ballet and the Thompson opera will perform at the Theater Des Champs Elysees. Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony, is scheduled to conduct the first and third concerts at Paris and Pierre Monteux the second. Mr. Munch, it was explained, is still suffering from an illness that began last October. He conducted the orchestra the first ten days of November but then suffered a relapse of what was described as a virus infection. He has not conducted since.

One of the principal motives of the Congress in sponsoring the spring festival, it was said, is to combat the current Communist party line in Europe which has been insulting Western art and culture as "decadent."

Mr. Nabokov is director of the exposition committee of the Congress and Julius Fleischmann, of Cincinnati, its American chairman. Sidney Hook is chairman of the American committee of the Congress and has conducted negotiations with the American participants.

Will Cover Any Deficit

It was explained that the cost of the Boston Symphony's trip will be covered by admission fees to concerts, radio broadcast fees and sales of recordings. The American committee of the Congress will make up any deficit.

European musical organizations to participate in the festival include the Vienna State Opera, which is to present the Alban Berg opera, "Wozzeck"; the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra; the chorus and orchestra of the Academy of St. Cecilia at Rome; the R. I. A. S. Orchestra from West Berlin which will play "Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk" by the Soviet composer, Dmitri Shostakovitch, forbidden in Russia as "bourgeois"; the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande from Geneva, Switzerland; and the Orchestre du Conservatoire and Orchestre National, both from Paris.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Paris Presse

Paris 29 DEC 1951

L'orchestre symphonique de Boston à Paris en mai

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston viendra, pour la première fois, en Europe au printemps prochain.

M. Nicolas Nabokov, secrétaire général du Congrès, et M. Judd, directeur de l'orchestre, ont fait savoir que l'orchestre donnera trois concerts à Paris au mois de mai et jouera ensuite à Bordeaux, Strasbourg et Zurich, puis visitera la Hollande et la Belgique.

En même temps que l'Orchestre de Boston, Paris recevra en mai l'Opéra de Vienne, l'Orchestre philharmonique de Vienne, les chœurs et l'orchestre de Sainte-Cécile à Rome, l'orchestre de la Radio de Berlin-Ouest, l'orchestre de la Suisse romande de Genève

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

L'AURORE, PARIS

29NOV1951

MAI 1952
grand mois artistique DE PARIS
Après 13 ans d'absence retour de Strawinsky

En mai 1952, Paris accueillera une série de manifestations culturelles et artistiques de grande classe organisées par le congrès pour la Liberté de la culture à la gloire du XXe siècle.

L'Opéra et l'Orchestre philharmonique de Vienne, les chœurs et l'orchestre de l'Académie Sainte-Cécile de Rome, l'orchestre de la Radio de Berlin, celui de la Suisse romande et celui du Conservatoire de Paris viendront tour à tour au théâtre des Champs-Elysées. Bruno Walter, Ansermet, Charles Munch dirigeront ces formations au cours de concerts où l'on pourra entendre notamment la 6e Symphonie de Prokofieff et Lady Macbeth, de Chostakovitch, deux morceaux interdits en U.R.S.S. Darius Milhau, lui-même, viendra prendre la tête de l'Orchestre national pour l'interprétation du Socrate d'Erik Satie.

Le New-York City Ballet, que dirige Georges Balanchine viendra danser L'Oiseau de feu de Stravinsky (le compositeur étant lui-même au pupitre après 13 ans d'absence de Paris) dans un décor de Chagall et Le Fils prodigue de Prokofieff, décor de Rouault.

Seraient encore créés à Paris l'opéra d'Alban Berg : Woszek, une œuvre de Benjamin Britten et l'Oedipus Rex, de Stravinsky.

La peinture sera représentée par cent cinquante chefs-d'œuvre réunis à travers les musées et collections privées européennes.

Une dizaine d'œuvres dramatiques comptant parmi les plus importantes de ce siècle et quelques films sélectionnés sont aussi prévus au programme de ce mois faste qui entend démontrer à quelles perfections artistique et littéraire peut accéder une civilisation de liberté.

JACQUES AUBRY.

Ausgabe vom

Pariser Festspiele ... turelle Freiheit. ... riser Festspielen ... Freiheit", die ... neben dem Boston ...

Charles Munch ... harmoniker, die Wi... chester von RIAS ... Orchester wird eine ... Schostakowitsch „Lady ... Gehör bringen, die in ... „bourgeoiser Tendenzen ... Yorker Städtische Ba... des Komponisten, einen ... Igor Strawinsky gestalten ... spiele wird ferner eine Aus... ken der zeitgenössischen M...

Der Kurier, Berlin

Nr.

Dat. 29. Dez. 1951

167/604

Festival der Freiheit

Die erste öffentliche Mitteilung des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit veröffentlichen wir im folgenden in ihren wesentlichsten Teilen:

„Nicolas Nabokov, der Generalsekretär des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit, gab jetzt in Paris die Pläne für eine außerordentliche Darbietung der Künste bekannt, die ein Bild von den kulturellen und künstlerischen Leistungen der freien Welt in der ersten Hälfte des 20. Jahrhunderts geben soll. Diese Veranstaltungen werden vom Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit gefördert und sollen im Mai 1952 in Paris unter dem Namen ‚Meisterwerke des 20. Jahrhunderts' stattfinden; sie fassen symphonische Musik, Oper, Ballett, Drama, bildende Kunst, Literatur und Philosophie zu einer gewaltigen Uebersicht zusammen, die einige der hervorragendsten Künstler und Intellektuellen der Welt nach Paris bringen wird.

‚Wir glauben', sagte Nabokov bei dieser Gelegenheit, ‚daß nie zuvor ein kühnerer Versuch unternommen worden ist, ein so weites Panorama unserer Kultur zu geben, wie sie sich in den Werken frei schaffender Künstler des 20. Jahrhunderts manifestiert. Wir glauben, daß diese Darbietungen auch auf unsere jüngeren Künstler, denen hier erstmalig eine Uebersicht über die bedeutendsten künstlerischen Leistungen des vergangenen halben Jahrhunderts gegeben wird, von starker Wirkung sein wird.'

In seinen Ausführungen umriß Nabokov als der Leiter des bevorstehenden Festival die Entwicklung der einzelnen Künste im 20. Jahrhundert, in dem die frei wirkende Phantasie der Dichter, Maler und Komponisten eine Fülle von Meisterwerken auf allen Gebieten der Kunst hervorgebracht hat. Gleichzeitig hat dieses halbe Jahrhundert, als Folge politischer Umwälzungen, eine heftige Reaktion gegen den frei schaffenden Geist erlebt. Mächtige Staaten sind entstanden, deren Regierungen versucht haben, das freie Wirken ihrer besten Köpfe zu verhindern. Engstirnige Maßnahmen haben den Künstler zu einem Werkzeug des Staates machen wollen, dessen ‚Produktion' einzig auf die Bedürfnisse der totalitären Regime abgestimmt ist. Diese Staaten haben sich zum Teil mit Erfolg darum bemüht, in uns Zweifel über die Allgemeingültigkeit, Kraft und Vitalität der westlichen Kultur zu erwecken.

Um eben diese Zweifel zu beseitigen und dieser Propaganda eine überzeugende Antwort entgegenzustellen, hat sich der Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit zu diesem Festival entschlossen.

Es ist dafür unter anderem die Beteiligung international bekannter Ensembles und Orchester vorgesehen, unter ihnen die Wiener Staatsoper mit dem Wiener Philharmonischen Orchester, Chor und Orchester der St. Cecilia-Akademie in Rom, das Sinfonie-Orchester des Berliner RIAS, das Orchestre de la Suisse Romande; und außerdem wird das Pariser Orchestre du Conservatoire und das Orchestre National mitwirken. Es sind ferner Verhandlungen im Gange, auch eines der großen amerikanischen Symphonie-Orchester nach Paris einzuladen. Vorbereitungen für ein Gastspiel des New York City Ballet unter George Balanchine werden getroffen; viele bedeutende Dirigenten haben ihre Mitwirkung zugesichert.

Geplant ist weiterhin eine große Ausstellung zeitgenössischer Malerei.

Mehrere Reihen von Vorträgen führender Philosophen und Schriftsteller der freien Welt sollen diese Veranstaltungen begleiten; eine davon wird dem Thema der Pressefreiheit gewidmet sein, die bei einer Bedrohung des kulturellen Lebens der freien Welt vermutlich das erste Opfer sein würde.

Zu den Höhepunkten des musikalischen Programms gehört ein Konzert Igor Stravinskys.

Der in Berlin im Juni 1950 zum erstenmal zusammengetretene Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit ist eine internationale Organisation von Schriftstellern, Philosophen, Künstlern und Wissenschaftlern, die sich der Sache der Freiheit des Schaffens der Forschung und der Meinungsäußerung angenommen haben. Jacques Maritain, Bertrand Russell, Benedetto Croce, Karl Jaspers, John Dewey und Salvador de Madariaga sind die Ehrenvorsitzenden; Denis de Rougemont fungiert als Leiter des Internationalen Sekretariats."

THE SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

December 30, 1951

Cultural Congress
Monteux to Conduct Performance By Boston Symphony in Paris

By ALFRED FRANKENSTEIN

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Congress of Cultural Freedom next May in Paris, according to an announcement made yesterday by Nicholas Nabokoff, secretary of the festival, and George C. Judd, manager of the orchestra.

After the congress is over, Monteux and Charles Munch, its regular conductor, will take the Boston Symphony on the first European tour of its long history, visiting principal music centers in Holland, Belgium, France, Australia and Switzerland.

The Congress of Cultural Freedom is planned to display the cultural achievement of the free world in the first half of the Twentieth Century, according to the an-nouncem... ...ive all the arts, litera... ...philosophy in concerts, ...and dramatic perform... ...es and forums.

Besides ... Symphony Orchestra ... organizations invited ... ...e the New York C... ...Vienna State Opera, ...philharmonic Orchest... ...a of the Accaca... ...Cecilia in Rome, ...a of West Berlin, ...atory Orchestra ... Orchestre National.

Among ... ...s planned are a se... ...es of ballets by ... ...the composer ... ...perform- ances of ... ...s opera "Four ... ...s." ... ...former Janes ...

THE NEW YO...

months from now the Congress of Cultural Freedom is planning a festival of which the theme will be the intellectual and artistic achievements of the free world in the twentieth century. The festival will embrace music, the drama, the dance, painting, and various other art forms, as conceived not by an all-powerful state which tells its artistic servants what they can and cannot do but by individual creators exercising the priceless gifts of freedom and self-expression.

The United States will be represented in the Paris festival, but—thus far at least—only by virtue of private philanthropy. The American committee for the festival, a private group, is now raising funds to make sure that our country is properly represented. Present plans are to send to Paris the New York City Ballet, and possibly the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, and to arrange for the temporary "export" of modern masterpieces from public and private collections. It is a fine thing that some private individuals and foundations have been willing to meet the expenditures involved, but obviously more examples of America's impressive cultural life could be brought to Europe if more funds were available.

EXPORT OF CULTURE

The men in the Kremlin ceaselessly expound the propaganda theme of Russia's cultural superiority over the rest of the world. We in the United States do not usually think of culture as playing any part in the propaganda war. And yet when the Russians are represented in European festivals and the United States is not, the loss is ours. We can be proud of a vibrant and flourishing culture. But because of our foolish disregard of the immense importance of the "cultural offensive" we have, as Assistant Secretary Barrett said the other day, lost many an intellectual battle throughout the civilized world without a struggle. Now we have a golden opportunity to recoup some of this loss if we will only take full advantage of it. In Paris five [257]

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

New York HERALD TRIBUNE

New York — 28 DEC 1951

Boston Symphony, City Ballet Going to Paris Festival in May

By Paul V. Beckley

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its first European appearance with three concerts at the Festival of the Arts at Paris in May, it was [illegible] yesterday in a joint announcement by Nicolas Nabokov, secretary-general of the Congress for Cultural Freedom, and George E. Judd, [illegible] of the Boston Orchestra.

As the major American representative at the festival, which is sponsored by the Congress, the Boston Symphony will stay in Europe two weeks and also play in Belgium, Holland, Austria, Switzerland and other Fernch communities. The cost of this overseas trip for the 104-member orchestra is estimated from $150,000 to $175,000.

It was also disclosed that plans have been completed for the New York City Ballet Company to give six performances at the festival, including an all-Stravinsky program conducted by the composer.

Negro Opera Company Listed

In addition, an all-Negro company recruited in this country is to perform the opera, "Four Saints in Three Acts," composed by Virgil Thomson, with Gertrude Stein's libretto. This opera, which ran for forty-eight performances in 1934 at the former Forty-fourth Street Theater, will be staged for its Paris performance by John Houseman and Frederick Ashton. Mr. Thomson, who is music critic of the New York Herald Tribune, will conduct the first performance.

The American cultural invasion of Paris will be further abetted by the inclusion of a number of American paintings in an exhibition of 200 contemporary works representative of Western culture assembled by James Johnson Sweeney, a former director of the Museum of Modern Art. A number of American poets and writers are also scheduled to address literary forums during the festival.

This will be the second year in a row that European audiences will hear concerts by a major American symphony orchestra. The New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra played a series of concerts at the Edinburgh Festival last September.

It was understood the Boston organization will play at the Paris Opera House, and the New York City Ballet and the Thompson opera will perform at the Theater Des Champs Elysees. Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony, is scheduled to conduct the first and third concerts at Paris and Pierre Monteux the second. Mr. Munch, it was explained, is still suffering from an illness that began last October. He conducted the orchestra the first ten days of November but then suffered a relapse of what was described as a virus infection. He has not conducted since.

One of the principal motives of the Congress in sponsoring the spring festival, it was said, is to combat the current Communist party line in Europe which has been insulting Western art and culture as "decadent."

Mr. Nabokov is director of the exposition committee of the Congress and Julius Fleischmann, of Cincinnati, its American chairman. Sidney Hook is chairman of the American committee of the Congress and has conducted negotiations with the American participants.

Will Cover Any Deficit

It was explained that the cost of the Boston Symphony's trip will be covered by admission fees to concerts, radio broadcast fees and sales of recordings. The American committee of the Congress will make up any deficit.

European musical organizations to participate in the festival include the Vienna State Opera, which is to present the Alban Berg opera, "Wozzeck"; the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra; the chorus and orchestra of the Academy of St. Cecilia at Rome; the R. I. A. S. Orchestra from West Berlin which will play "Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk" by the Soviet composer, Dmitri Shostakovitch, forbidden in Russia as "bourgeois"; the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande from Geneva, Switzerland; and the Orchestre du Conservatoire and Orchestre National, both from Paris.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Paris Presse

Paris 29 DEC 1951

L'orchestre symphonique de Boston à Paris en mai

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston viendra, pour la première fois, en Europe au printemps prochain.

M. Nicolas Nabokov, secrétaire général du Congrès, et M. Judd, directeur de l'orchestre, ont fait savoir que l'orchestre donnera trois concerts à Paris au mois de mai et jouera ensuite à Bordeaux, Strasbourg et Zurich, puis visitera la Hollande et la Belgique.

En même temps que l'Orchestre de Boston, Paris recevra en mai l'Opéra de Vienne, l'Orchestre philharmonique de Vienne, les chœurs et l'orchestre de Sainte-Cécile à Rome, l'orchestre de la Radio de Berlin-Ouest, l'orchestre de la Suisse-romande de Genève

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

L'AURORE, PARIS

29 NOV 1951

161

MAI 1952 grand mois artistique DE PARIS

Après 13 ans d'absence retour de Strawinsky

En mai 1952, Paris accueillera une série de manifestations culturelles et artistiques de grande classe organisées par le congrès pour la Liberté de la culture à la gloire du XXe siècle.

L'Opéra et l'Orchestre philarmonique de Vienne, les chœurs et l'orchestre de l'Académie Sainte-Cécile de Rome, l'orchestre de la Radio de Berlin, celui de la Suisse romande et celui du Conservatoire de Paris viendront tour à tour au théâtre des Champs-Elysées. Bruno Walter, Ansermet, Charles Munch dirigeront ces formations au cours de concerts où l'on pourra entendre notamment la 6e Symphonie de Prokofieff et Lady Macbeth, de Chostakovitch, deux morceaux interdits en U.R.S.S. Darius Milhaud, lui-même, viendra prendre la tête de l'Orchestre national pour l'interprétation du Socrate d'Erik Satie.

Le New-York City Ballet, que dirige Georges Balanchine viendra danser L'Oiseau de feu de Stravinsky (le compositeur étant lui-même au pupitre après 13 ans d'absence de Paris) dans un décor de Chagall et Le Fils prodigue de Prokofieff, décor de Rouault.

Seraient encore créés à Paris l'opéra d'Alban Berg : Wozzek, une œuvre de Benjamin Britten et l'Oedipus Rex, de Stravinsky.

La peinture sera représentée par cent cinquante chefs-d'œuvre réunis à travers les musées et collections privées européennes.

Une dizaine d'œuvres dramatiques comptant parmi les plus importantes de ce siècle et quelques films sélectionnés sont aussi prévus au programme de ce mois faste qui entend démontrer à quelles perfections artistique et littéraire peut accéder une civilisation de liberté.

JACQUES AUBRY.

Neue Zeitung

Ausgabe vom: 31 Dez 1951

Pariser Festspiele des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit. New York (USIS) — An den Pariser Festspielen des „Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit", die am 28. April beginnen, werden neben dem Bostoner Symphonieorchester unter Charles Munch — das Orchester gastiert zum erstenmal in Europa — auch die Wiener Philharmoniker, die Wiener Staatsoper und das Orchester von RIAS Berlin teilnehmen. Das RIAS-Orchester wird eine Komposition von Dimitri Schostakowitsch „Lady Macbeth von Mtsensk" zu Gehör bringen, die in der Sowjetunion wegen „bourgeoiser Tendenzen" verboten ist. Das New Yorker Städtische Ballett wird, unter Leitung des Komponisten, einen Abend nach Musik von Igor Strawinsky gestalten. Im Rahmen der Festspiele wird ferner eine Ausstellung von 200 Werken der zeitgenössischen Malerei gezeigt werden.

Der Kurier, Berlin

Nr.

Dat. 29. Dez. 1951

167/604

Festival der Freiheit

Die erste öffentliche Mitteilung des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit veröffentlichen wir im folgenden in ihren wesentlichsten Teilen:

„Nicolas Nabokov, der Generalsekretär des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit, gab jetzt in Paris die Pläne für eine außerordentliche Darbietung der Künste bekannt, die ein Bild von den kulturellen und künstlerischen Leistungen der freien Welt in der ersten Hälfte des 20. Jahrhunderts geben soll. Diese Veranstaltungen werden vom Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit gefördert und sollen im Mai 1952 in Paris unter dem Namen ‚Meisterwerke des 20. Jahrhunderts' stattfinden; sie fassen symphonische Musik, Oper, Ballett, Drama, bildende Kunst, Literatur und Philosophie zu einer gewaltigen Uebersicht zusammen, die einige der hervorragendsten Künstler und Intellektuellen der Welt nach Paris bringen wird.

‚Wir glauben', sagte Nabokov bei dieser Gelegenheit, ‚daß nie zuvor ein kühnerer Versuch unternommen worden ist, ein so weites Panorama unserer Kultur zu geben, wie sie sich in den Werken frei schaffender Künstler des 20. Jahrhunderts manifestiert. Wir glauben, daß diese Darbietungen auch auf unsere jüngeren Künstler, denen hier erstmalig eine Uebersicht über die bedeutendsten künstlerischen Leistungen des vergangenen halben Jahrhunderts gegeben wird, von starker Wirkung sein wird."

In seinen Ausführungen umriß Nabokov als der Leiter des bevorstehenden Festival die Entwicklung der einzelnen Künste im 20. Jahrhundert, in dem die frei wirkende Phantasie der Dichter, Maler und Komponisten eine Fülle von Meisterwerken auf allen Gebieten der Kunst hervorgebracht hat. Gleichzeitig hat dieses halbe Jahrhundert, als Folge politischer Umwälzungen, eine heftige Reaktion gegen den frei schaffenden Geist erlebt. Mächtige Staaten sind entstanden, deren Regierungen versucht haben, das freie Wirken ihrer besten Köpfe zu verhindern. Engstirnige Maßnahmen haben den Künstler zu einem Werkzeug des Staates machen wollen, dessen ‚Produktion' einzig auf die Bedürfnisse der totalitären Regime abgestimmt ist. Diese Staaten haben sich zum Teil mit Erfolg darum bemüht, in uns Zweifel über die Allgemeingültigkeit, Kraft und Vitalität der westlichen Kultur zu erwecken.

Um eben diese Zweifel zu beseitigen und dieser Propaganda eine überzeugende Antwort entgegenzustellen, hat sich der Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit zu diesem Festival entschlossen.

Es ist dafür unter anderem die Beteiligung international bekannter Ensembles und Orchester vorgesehen, unter ihnen die Wiener Staatsoper mit dem Wiener Philharmonischen Orchester, Chor und Sinfonie-Orchester des Berliner RIAS, das außerdem wird das Pariser Orchestre de la Suisse Romande; und Conservatoire und das Orchestre du National mitwirken. Es sind ferner Verhandlungen im Gange, auch eines der großen amerikanischen Symphonie-Orchester nach Paris einzuladen. Vorbereitungen für ein Gastspiel des New York City Ballet unter George Balanchine werden getroffen; viele bedeutende Dirigenten haben ihre Mitwirkung zugesichert.

Geplant ist weiterhin eine große Ausstellung zeitgenössischer Malerei.

Mehrere Reihen von Vorträgen führender Philosophen und Schriftsteller der freien Welt sollen diese Veranstaltungen begleiten; eine davon wird dem Thema der Pressefreiheit gewidmet sein, die bei einer Bedrohung des kulturellen Lebens der freien Welt vermutlich das erste Opfer sein würde.

Zu den Höhepunkten des musikalischen Programms gehört ein Konzert Igor Strawinskys.

Der in Berlin im Juni 1950 zum erstenmal zusammengetretene Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit ist eine internationale Organisation von Schriftstellern, Philosophen, Künstlern und Wissenschaftlern, die sich der Sache der Freiheit des Schaffens, der Forschung und der Meinungsäußerung angenommen haben. Jacques Maritain, Bertrand Russell, Benedetto Croce, Karl Jaspers, John Dewey und Salvador de Madariaga sind die Ehrenvorsitzenden; Denis de Rougemont fungiert als Leiter des Internationalen Sekretariats."

THE SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

December 30, 1951

Cultural Congress

Monteux to Conduct Performance By Boston Symphony in Paris

By ALFRED FRANKENSTEIN

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Congress of Cultural Freedom next May in Paris, according to an announcement made yesterday by Nicholas Nabokoff, secretary of the festival, and George C. Judd, manager of the orchestra.

After the congress is over, Monteux and Charles Munch, its regular conductor, will take the Boston Symphony on the first European tour of its long history, visiting principal music centers in Holland, Belgium, France, Australia and Switzerland.

The Congress of Cultural Freedom is planned to display the cultural achievement of the free world in the first half of the Twentieth Century, according to the announcement. It will involve all the arts, literature and philosophy, in concerts, operatic and dramatic performances, lectures and forums.

Besides the Boston Symphony Orchestra, musical organizations invited to participate are the New York City Ballet, the Vienna State Opera, the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, the orchestra of the Accademia di Santa Cecilia in Rome, the Radio Orchestra of West Berlin, the Paris Conservatory Orchestra and the French Orchestre Nationale.

Among the special events planned are a series of performances of ballets by Stravinsky, with the composer conducting, and performances of Virgil Thomson's opera, "Four Saints in Three Acts."

James Johnson Sweeney, former

Dec 4 - 51

THE NEW YO

months from now the Congress of Cultural Freedom is planning a festival, of which the theme will be the intellectual and artistic achievements of the free world in the twentieth century. The festival will embrace music, the drama, the dance, painting, and various other art forms, as conceived not by an all-powerful state which tells its artists-servants what they can and cannot do but by individual creators exercising the priceless gifts of freedom and self-expression.

The United States will be represented in the Paris festival, but—thus far at least—only by virtue of private philanthropy. The American committee for the festival, a private group, is now raising funds to make sure that our country is properly represented. Present plans are to send to Paris the New York City Ballet, and possibly the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, and to arrange for the temporary "export" of modern masterpieces from public and private collections. It is a fine thing that some private individuals and foundations have been willing to meet the expenditures involved, but obviously more examples of America's impressive cultural life could be brought to Europe if more funds were available.

EXPORT OF CULTURE

The men in the Kremlin ceaselessly expound the propaganda theme of Russia's cultural superiority over the rest of the world. We in the United States do not usually think of culture as playing any part in the propaganda war. And yet when the Russians are represented in European festivals and the United States is not, the loss is ours. We can be proud of a vibrant and flourishing culture. But because of our foolish disregard of the immense importance of the "cultural offensive" we have, as Assistant Secretary Barrett said the other day, lost many an intellectual battle throughout the civilized world without a struggle. Now we have a golden opportunity to recoup some of this loss if we will only take full advantage of it. In Paris five [257]

J Jones

DURRANT'S PRESS CUTTINGS
29-39, Mount Pleasant, London, W.C.1.
Telephone: CENTRAL 3149 (Two Lines).

The Times
Printing House Square, E.C.4.
(...rom issue dated 31 DEC 1951

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to take part in the festival of the arts to be held in Paris throughout May. This, it is stated, will be the first time that this orchestra has played in Europe, and during its stay in Europe it will also perform at Bordeaux, Strasbourg, and Zürich, as well as in Belgium, Holland, and Austria. The Boston Symphony Orchestra was formed in 1881 and now has 104 players. Other orchestras to take part in the festival of "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century" will be the Vienna Philharmonic, the Chorus and Orchestra of the Academy of St. Cecilia in Rome, the Radio Orchestra of West Berlin, the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, from Geneva, the Orchestre du Conservatoire, Paris, and the Orchestre Nationale. The New York City Ballet will give six performances, at one of which Mr. Igor Stravinsky will conduct several of his own works; and there is also likely to be a performance by a Negro company of Four Saints in Three Acts, an opera by Virgil Thompson and Gertrude Stein. Mr. J. J. Sweeney has been commissioned by the organizers of the festival to assemble an exhibition of French, Dutch, and American paintings.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Cour de Paris janvier 1952

On sait que le grand orchestre symphonique de Boston sera présenté à Paris, en mai. M. Charles Munch et M. Pierre Monteux tiendront tour à tour la baguette.

A la suite de l'orchestre de Boston seront présentés à Paris l'Opéra de Vienne, les chœurs et l'orchestre de l'Académie Ste-Cécile de Rome, ainsi que le New-York City Ballet qui donnera six spectacles.

LEONBERGER KREISZEITUNG
Leonberg, 4 Janvier, 1952

Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester hat eine Einladung angenommen, im Frühjahr zum Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit nach Paris zu kommen. Es wird der erste Auftritt des berühmten Orchesters in Europa sein. Auf dem Kongreß werden auch einige der bekanntesten europäischen Orchester, darunter die Wiener Philharmoniker, das Genfer „Orchestre de La Suisse Romande", das Pariser „Orchestre du Conservatoire" und „Orchestre National" sowie die Wiener Staatsoper, teilnehmen. Das New Yorker Staatsballett unter der Leitung von Georges Balanchine wird Tanzstücke von Igor Strawinsky aufführen, die vom Komponisten selbst dirigiert werden.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
33, Rue de l'Amiral-Mouchez, PARIS-13e
CHÈQUES POSTAUX
PARIS C. 2107-84
TÉL. : GOB. 00-32
R. C. SEINE 674-072

OPÉRA PARIS 2 JANV 1952

L'Orchestre de Boston se fera entendre à Paris

EN mai prochain, grâce au congrès pour la liberté de la Culture, nous reverrons, à Paris, Charles Münch et Pierre Monteux qui dirigeront à tour de rôle les 104 musiciens de l'orchestre symphonie de Boston.

L'orchestre de Boston s'embarquera à destination de l'Europe immédiatement après sa saison de printemps au Symphony Hall, soit le 26 avril. Il restera une quinzaine de jours en Europe et projette après ses trois concerts au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, d'aller jouer à Bordeaux, à Strasbourg, à Zurich et sans doute en Belgique, en Hollande et en Autriche. Rappelons que c'est en 1949 que Charles Münch, succédant à Koussevitsky, fut nommé directeur musical de cet orchestre.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Die Neue Zeitung, München
Berliner Ausgabe

vom: 4. Jan. 1952

Auf Einladung des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit wird das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester unter Charles Munch im Mai an den Pariser Festspielen teilnehmen. Ferner werden sich an den Festspielen beteiligen: das Ballett der New-Yorker Städtischen Oper, die Wiener Philharmoniker, die Wiener Staatsoper und das RIAS-Symphonie-Orchester. (NZ)

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Leonberger Kreiszeitung 4 JANV 1952

Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester hat eine Einladung angenommen, im Frühjahr zum Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit nach Paris zu kommen. Es wird der erste Auftritt des berühmten Orchesters in Europa sein. Auf dem Kongreß werden auch einige der bekanntesten europäischen Orchester, darunter die Wiener Philharmoniker, das Genfer „Orchestre de La Suisse Romande", das Pariser „Orchestre du Conservatoire" und „Orchestre National" sowie die Wiener Staatsoper, teilnehmen. Das New Yorker Staatsballett unter der Leitung von Georges Balanchine wird Tanzstücke von Igor Strawinsky aufführen, die vom Komponisten selbst dirigiert werden.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

PARIS, LE MONDE 2 JAN 1952

Avec Charles Münch

directeur musical de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston

(Correspondance spéciale du Monde.)

Boston, fin décembre. — L'orchestre symphonique de Boston, l'une des plus célèbres formations musicales d'Amérique, devant venir donner une série de concerts à Paris au mois de mai, il nous a paru intéressant d'aller nous entretenir à Boston même avec Charles Münch, son directeur musical depuis deux ans.

Le Français d'honnête culture sait un certain nombre de choses sur Boston : que c'est une des plus anciennes grandes agglomérations des U.S.A., que l'indépendance américaine a commencé lorsque les Bostoniens ont jeté à la mer toutes les caisses d'un thé taxé par les Anglais et que les fondateurs de la cité furent des puritains, les rigoristes émigrants débarqués du Mayflower. On imagine donc des squares calmes, une atmosphère vieillotte des sentiments antibritanniques et énormément de protestants. On trouve un port très actif, une banlieue très industrielle, deux ou trois gratte-ciel, et même des rues larges, résultats des constructions du siècle dernier : ce temps où l'on sut conquérir les marais en y jetant la terre de deux collines. Sur la seule éminence qui reste, Beacon Hill, les familles de la bonne société se doivent d'habiter quelques anciennes et inconfortables maisons ; elles envoient leur fils à Oxford, ou, en cas d'impossibilité, à Harvard ; là ils cultivent l'accent anglais et les bonnes manières, et portent des cravates sobres. Quant aux catholiques, qui forment près de la moitié de la population, ils ont leur bonne part de responsabilité dans les procès intentés à Erskine Caldwell, entre autres pour obscénité.

Mais Boston a quelque chose d'unique : la colonie française, qui est nombreuse. Là (influence du climat doux et pluvieux ou de l'affabilité américaine ?) pas de disputes, pas de politicaille. Sous l'impulsion du consul Albert Chambon, un « French Center » propose sa bibliothèque, ses conférences, ses expositions. « C'est très bien, tout le monde s'entend... Nous formons une parfaite grande famille », me dit Charles Münch.

Il faut voir le même Charles Münch faire travailler le Symphony Orchestra de Boston, un tiers de Français (« Cette oreille, ce doigté ! Et ils sont si vifs... Ils sont formidables, ils déchiffrent presque mieux qu'ils ne jouent. ») et le reste d'Américains (« Des travailleurs ! Une conscience, un amour de leur métier... Et puis tellement persévérants, tellement appliqués. Ils ont la volonté d'être par leur travail à la tête de tous les orchestres américains... ») ; et l'Amérique tout entière envie la qualité de l'ensemble. Münch fait de touchants efforts pour parler anglais à ses exécutants. « One, two, thrrree, one... Mais doucement ! Intime, voyons ! Du cœur ! » Chacun obtempère. L'italien domine, finalement. C'est un compromis. « Je n'ai ni le temps ni le courage d'apprendre l'anglais à fond... » — Evidemment, tout l'orchestre sait maintenant quelques mots.

— Il existe ici un grand mouvement d'intérêt pour la musique contemporaine. Le public bostonien est très curieux et soutient les compositeurs modernes. Je vais créer des œuvres américaines, bien sûr : une symphonie de Walter Piston, le Deuxième Concerto de Lucas Foss, un nocturne d'Irvin Fine. »

Je fais un geste d'ignorance. « Et les Français ?

— J'ai l'intention de donner du Jolivet, du Poulenc, du Jacques Ibert... Henri Barraud aussi et Tabor Harsanyi... Théoriquement il me faut certains accords. »

Nous sourions tous les deux. Il est difficile d'imaginer quelqu'un ne faisant pas toutes les volontés du maître dans ce Boston où toute le monde, depuis ma logeuse qui ne l'entend qu'à la radio jusqu'aux dévots abonnés du samedi, idolâtre notre docteur Münch.

« Et Honegger ?

— Très prisé ici. Il existe une société des amis d'Honegger. L'orchestre jouera les cinq symphonies, et, avec le Glee Club, la Danse des morts et Jeanne au bûcher.

— Qui a traduit Claudel ?

— Mais personne ! Ils entendront l'original. Le « Symphony » est submergé de demandes. Nous avons déjà cent vingt concerts par saison pour les abonnés du Symphony Hall, et plusieurs tournées de dix jours environ, où l'on joue tous les soirs dans une ville différente. L'accueil est toujours merveilleux d'ailleurs; mais c'est une vie harassante... Il y a beaucoup de festivals, c'est une bonne invention. L'été prochain j'irai à Paris, invité par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture, puis à Bordeaux, diriger l'orchestre national; à Bruxelles, en Hollande, en Italie... Après je voudrais pouvoir revenir à Paris pour célébrer l'anniversaire de la Société des concerts du Conservatoire. Je voudrais aussi entendre mes poulains... Oui, mes élèves, puisque j'ai eu la classe d'orchestre au Conservatoire. Il y avait là Gérard, Landowski, Gitton, Martinon...

— Et en Amérique, y aura-t-il des solistes français pour le début de l'année ?

— A Boston, en tout cas, viendront Nicole Henriot et Monique de la Bruchollerie... Sansom François et Pierre Sancan doivent effectuer une tournée aussi, je crois... »

Nous bavardons un peu de Paris, des festivals.

« Il ne faut pas croire qu'il n'y ait de festivals qu'en Europe ! Cet été j'irai aussi à Tanglewood...

— C'est cet endroit dans les collines ?

— Dans les collines du Berkshire, pas trop loin d'ici. Cette année les concerts ont lieu, je crois, du 1er au 15 août. L'atmosphère de Tanglewood est unique : imaginez douze mille personnes assistant à des concerts en plein air dans cette verdure, avec un recueillement extraordinaire. Tout est étonnant : le cadre, les orchestres, les chorales, les solistes. Ils n'ont pas la cathédrale de Strasbourg, voyez-vous, ni l'archevêché d'Aix, mais ils ont la ferveur... »

Et Charles Münch me parle de l'Enfance du Christ, qu'il a montée pour Noël avec le concours du Harvard Glee Club, une admirable chorale dont les éléments sont issus des classes de musique de l'Université...

DANIÈLE CLÉMENT.

J. Jones

DURRANT'S PRESS CUTTINGS
29-39, Mount Pleasant, London, W.C.1.
Telephone: CENTRAL 3149 (Two Lines).

The Times
Printing House Square, E.C.4.
Cutting from issue dated 31 DEC 1951

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has accepted an invitation to take part in the festival of the arts to be held in Paris throughout May. This, it is stated, will be the first time that this orchestra has played in Europe, and during its stay in Europe it will also perform at Bordeaux, Strasbourg, and Zürich, as well as in Belgium, Holland, and Austria. The Boston Symphony Orchestra was formed in 1881 and now has 104 players. Other orchestras to take part in the festival of "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century" will be the Vienna Philharmonic, the Chorus and Orchestra of the Academy of St. Cecilia in Rome, the Radio Orchestra of West Berlin, the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, from Geneva, the Orchestre du Conservatoire, Paris, and the Orchestre Nationale. The New York City Ballet will give six performances, at one of which Mr. Igor Stravinsky will conduct several of his own works; and there is also likely to be a performance by a Negro company of Four Saints in Three Acts, an opera by Virgil Thompson and Gertrude Stein. Mr. J. J. Sweeney has been commissioned by the organizers of the festival to assemble an exhibition of French, Dutch, and American paintings.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Cur de Paris janvier 1952

On sait que le grand orchestre symphonique de Boston sera présenté à Paris, en mai, M. Charles Munch et M. Pierre Monteux tiendront tour à tour la baguette.

A la suite de l'orchestre de Boston seront présentés à Paris l'Opéra de Vienne, les chœurs et l'orchestre de l'Académie Ste-Cécile de Rome, ainsi que le New-York City Ballet qui donnera six spectacles.

LEONBERGER KREISZEITUNG
Leonberg, 4 Janvier, 1952

Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester hat eine Einladung angenommen, im Frühjahr zum Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit nach Paris zu kommen. Es wird der erste Auftritt des berühmten Orchesters in Europa sein. Auf dem Kongreß werden auch einige der bekanntesten europäischen Orchester, darunter die Wiener Philharmoniker, das Genfer „Orchestre de La Suisse Romande", das Pariser „Orchestre du Conservatoire" und „Orchestre National" sowie die Wiener Staatsoper, teilnehmen. Das New Yorker Staatsballett unter der Leitung von Georges Balanchine wird Tanzstücke von Igor Strawinsky aufführen, die vom Komponisten selbst dirigiert werden

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
33, Rue de l'Amiral-Mouchez, PARIS-13e
CHÈQUES POSTAUX
PARIS C. 2107-84
TÉL. : GOB. 00-32
R. C. SEINE 674-072

OPÉRA PARIS
2 JANV 1952

L'Orchestre de Boston se fera entendre à Paris

EN mai prochain, grâce au congrès pour la liberté de la Culture, nous reverrons, à Paris, Charles Münch et Pierre Monteux qui dirigeront à tour de rôle les 104 musiciens de l'orchestre symphonie de Boston.

L'orchestre de Boston s'embarquera à destination de l'Europe immédiatement après sa saison de printemps au Symphony Hall, soit le 26 avril. Il restera une quinzaine de jours en Europe et projette après ses trois concerts au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, d'aller jouer à Bordeaux, à Strasbourg, à Zurich et sans doute en Belgique, en Hollande et en Autriche. Rappelons que c'est en 1949 que Charles Münch, succédant à Koussevitsky, fut nommé directeur musical de cet orchestre.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Die Neue Zeitung, München
Berliner Ausgabe
vom 13. Jan. 1952

Auf Einladung des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit wird das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester unter Charles Munch im Mai an den Pariser Festspielen teilnehmen. Ferner werden sich an den Festspielen beteiligen: das Ballett der New-Yorker Städtischen Oper, die Wiener Philharmoniker, die Wiener Staatsoper und das RIAS-Symphonie-Orchester. (NZ)

[258]

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Leonberger Kreiszeitung
4 JANV 1952

Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester hat eine Einladung angenommen, im Frühjahr zum Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit nach Paris zu kommen. Es wird der erste Auftritt des berühmten Orchesters in Europa sein. Auf dem Kongreß werden auch einige der bekanntesten europäischen Orchester, darunter die Wiener Philharmoniker, das Genfer „Orchestre de La Suisse Romande", das Pariser „Orchestre du Conservatoire" und „Orchestre National" sowie die Wiener Staatsoper, teilnehmen. Das New Yorker Staatsballett unter der Leitung von Georges Balanchine wird Tanzstücke von Igor Strawinsky aufführen, die vom Komponisten selbst dirigiert werden

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

PARIS, LE Monde 2 JAN 1952

Avec Charles Münch

directeur musical de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston

(Correspondance spéciale du Monde.)

Boston, fin décembre. — L'orchestre symphonique de Boston, l'une des plus célèbres formations musicales d'Amérique, devant venir donner une série de concerts à Paris au mois de mai, il nous a paru intéressant d'aller nous entretenir à Boston même avec Charles Münch, son directeur musical depuis deux ans.

Le Français d'honnête culture sait un certain nombre de choses sur Boston : que c'est une des plus anciennes grandes agglomérations des U.S.A., que l'indépendance américaine a commencé lorsque les Bostoniens ont jeté à la mer toutes les caisses d'un thé taxé par les Anglais et que les fondateurs de la cité furent des puritains, les rigoristes émigrants débarqués du Mayflower. On imagine donc des squares calmes, une atmosphère vieillotte des sentiments antibritanniques et énormément de protestants. On trouve un port très actif, une banlieue très industrielle, deux ou trois gratte-ciel, et même des rues larges, résultats des constructions du siècle dernier : ce temps où l'on sut conquérir les marais en y jetant la terre de deux collines. Sur la seule éminence qui reste, Beacon Hill, les familles de la bonne société se doivent d'habiter quelques anciennes et inconfortables maisons ; elles envoient leur fils à Oxford, ou, en cas d'impossibilité, à Harvard ; là ils cultivent l'accent anglais et les bonnes manières, et portent des cravates sobres. Quant aux catholiques, qui forment près de la moitié de la population, ils ont leur bonne part de responsabilité dans les procès intentés à Erskine Caldwell, entre autres pour obscénité.

Mais Boston a quelque chose d'unique : la colonie française, qui est nombreuse. Là (influence du climat doux et pluvieux ou de l'affabilité américaine ?) pas de disputes, pas de politicaille. Sous l'impulsion du consul Albert Chambon, un « French Center » propose sa bibliothèque, ses conférences, ses expositions. « C'est très bien, tout le monde s'entend... Nous formons une parfaite grande famille », me dit Charles Münch.

Il faut voir le même Charles Münch faire travailler le Symphony Orchestra de Boston, un tiers de Français (« Cette oreille, ce doigté ! Et ils sont si vifs... Ils sont formidables, ils déchiffrent presque mieux qu'ils ne jouent. ») et le reste d'Américains (« Des travailleurs ! Une conscience, un amour de leur métier... Et puis tellement persévérants, tellement appliqués. Ils ont la volonté d'être par leur travail à la tête de tous les orchestres américains... ») ; et l'Amérique tout entière envie la qualité de l'ensemble. Münch fait de touchants efforts pour parler anglais à ses exécutants. « One, two, thrrree, one... Mais doucement ! Intime, voyons ! Du cœur ! » Chacun obtempère. L'italien domine, finalement. C'est un compromis. « Je n'ai ni le temps ni le courage d'apprendre l'anglais à fond... »

— Evidemment, tout l'orchestre sait maintenant quelques mots.

— Il existe ici un grand mouvement d'intérêt pour la musique contemporaine. Le public bostonien est très curieux et soutient les compositeurs modernes. Je vais créer des œuvres américaines, bien sûr : une symphonie de Walter Piston, le Deuxième Concerto de Lucas Foss, un nocturne d'Irvin Fine. »

Je fais un geste d'ignorance. « Et les Français ?

— J'ai l'intention de donner du Jolivet, du Poulenc, du Jacques Ibert... Henri Barraud aussi et Tabor Harsanyi... Théoriquement il me faut certains accords. »

Nous sourions tous les deux. Il est difficile d'imaginer quelqu'un ne faisant pas toutes les volontés du maître dans ce Boston où toute le monde, depuis ma logeuse qui ne l'entend qu'à la radio jusqu'aux dévots abonnés du samedi, idolâtre notre docteur Münch.

« Et Honegger ?

— Très prisé ici. Il existe une société des amis d'Honegger. L'orchestre jouera les cinq symphonies, et, avec le Glee Club, la Danse des morts et Jeanne au bûcher.

— Qui a traduit Claudel ?

— Mais personne ! Ils entendront l'original. Le « Symphony » est submergé de demandes. Nous avons déjà cent vingt concerts par saison pour les abonnés du Symphony Hall, et plusieurs tournées de dix jours environ, où l'on joue tous les soirs dans une ville différente. L'accueil est toujours merveilleux d'ailleurs ; mais c'est une vie harassante... Il y a beaucoup de festivals, c'est une bonne invention. L'été prochain j'irai à Paris, invité par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture, puis à Bordeaux, diriger l'orchestre national ; à Bruxelles, en Hollande, en Italie... Après je voudrais pouvoir revenir à Paris pour célébrer l'anniversaire de la Société des concerts du Conservatoire. Je voudrais aussi entendre mes poulains... Oui, mes élèves, puisque j'ai eu la classe d'orchestre au Conservatoire. Il y avait là Gérard, Landowski, Gilton, Martinon...

— Et en Amérique, y aura-t-il des solistes français pour le début de l'année ?

— A Boston, en tout cas, viendront Nicole Henriot et Monique de la Bruchollerie... Samson François et Pierre Sancan doivent effectuer une tournée aussi, je crois... »

Nous bavardons un peu de Paris, des festivals.

« Il ne faut pas croire qu'il n'y ait de festivals qu'en Europe ? Cet été j'irai aussi à Tanglewood...

— C'est cet endroit dans les collines ?

— Dans les collines du Berkshire, pas trop loin d'ici. Cette année les concerts ont lieu, je crois, du 1er au 15 août. L'atmosphère de Tanglewood est unique : imaginez douze mille personnes assistant à des concerts en plein air dans cette verdure, avec un recueillement extraordinaire. Tout est étonnant : le cadre, les orchestres, les chorales, les solistes. Ils n'ont pas la cathédrale de Strasbourg, voyez-vous, ni l'archevêché d'Aix, mais ils ont la ferveur... »

Et Charles Münch me parle de l'Enfance du Christ, qu'il a montée pour Noël avec le concours du Harvard Glee Club, une admirable chorale dont les éléments sont issus des classes de musique de l'Université...

DANIÈLE CLÉMENT.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
33, Rue de l'Amiral-Mouchez, PARIS-13e
CHÈQUES POSTAUX
PARIS C. 2107-84
TÉL. : GOB. 00-32
R. C. SEINE 674-072

OPÉRA PARIS
2 JANV 1952

L'Orchestre de Boston se fera entendre à Paris

EN mai prochain, grâce au congrès pour la liberté de la Culture, nous reverrons, à Paris, Charles Münch et Pierre Monteux qui dirigeront à tour de rôle les 104 musiciens de l'orchestre symphonie de Boston.

L'orchestre de Boston s'embarquera à destination de l'Europe immédiatement après sa saison de printemps au Symphony Hall, soit le 26 avril. Il restera une quinzaine de jours en Europe et projette après ses trois concerts au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, d'aller jouer à Bordeaux, à Strasbourg, à Zurich et sans doute en Belgique, en Hollande et en Autriche. Rappelons que c'est en 1949 que Charles Münch, succédant à Koussevitsky, fut nommé directeur musical de cet orchestre.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

COMBAT - PARIS

4 JANV 1952

En mai prochain au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées

« L'œuvre du vingtième siècle »

Lorsque, en avril dernier, le président Auriol rendit visite au président Truman, il félicita Charles Munch, directeur musical de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston venu jouer spécialement pour lui à Washington. Il demanda même au chef d'orchestre de venir présenter ses musiciens en France.

Ce vœu deviendra en mai prochain une réalité grâce au Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture qui organise, sur le thème « L'œuvre du vingtième siècle », un grand Festival d'art au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées.

Trois concerts de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston (Charles Munch Pierre Monteux)

Au programme, trois concerts donnés par les 104 musiciens de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston sous la direction de Charles Munch ou de Pierre Monteux.

Neuf chefs ont dirigé cet orchestre depuis sa fondation en 1881. Pierre Monteux, après des études musicales à Paris où il est né, vint aux Etats-Unis avec les Ballets russes de Serge de Diaghilev et s'y fixa. Passé au Metropolitan Opera de New York, il dirigea, de 1919 à 1924, l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston. Actuellement, il dirige, jusqu'en avril prochain, l'Orchestre symphonique de San Francisco.

Les musiciens de Boston s'embarqueront pour l'Europe le 26 avril après leur saison de printemps au Symphony Hall. Ils comptent rester une quinzaine de jours en Europe pour se produire, après leurs trois concerts parisiens, à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich et, peut-être, en Belgique, en Hollande et en Autriche.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Arts-Paris

-4 JAN 1952

● L'orchestre symphonique de Boston viendra pour la première fois en Europe. Il donnera à Paris trois concerts en mai, jouera ensuite à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich, dans les Pays-Bas et en Belgique.

● L'Opéra de Vienne et l'orchestre philharmonique de Vienne joueront à Paris en mai. Toujours en mai, l'orchestre de la Suisse romande et les chœurs de Sainte-Cécile de Rome.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

COMBAT - PARIS

4 JANV 1952

Charles Munch et Pierre Monteux prennent rendez-vous

Charles Munch qui dirige le « Boston Symphony Orchestra » et Pierre Monteux se serrent la main, se promettant bien de se retrouver à Paris, le 6 mai à l'Opéra, avec tous les exécutants de la célèbre formation en partie composée de musiciens français.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Paris-Presse - L'Intra

1er JANV 1952

LE JOURNAL DE LA MUSIQUE

LES PARISIENS AURONT UN « SUPER-FESTIVAL »

L'orchestre de Boston et la rentrée de Strawinsky en mai à Paris

AU mois de mai, c'est maintenant officiel, l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston donnera trois concerts à Paris. Concerts dirigés par Charles Münch, actuel président du grand orchestre américain, et Pierre Monteux, le créateur du « Sacre du printemps ».

Cet événement musical fait partie d'une série de manifestations groupées sous le titre : « L'Œuvre du XXe siècle », organisées par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture, qui se tiendra à cette époque au théâtre des Champs-Elysées.

On laisse entendre que les trois concerts auront lieu au théâtre des Champs-Elysées Etant donné l'ampleur de l'événement nous pensons et nous espérons que les organisateurs changeront d'avis et feront jouer ces trois concerts à l'Opéra, cadre beaucoup plus adéquat.

Sans vouloir faire preuve d'un chauvinisme mesquin, ce serait, à notre avis, une façon élégante de rendre hommage à Charles Münch et à Monteux qui font honneur à la France en la représentant brillamment à l'étranger.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Arts-Paris

-4 JAN 1952

● L'orchestre symphonique de Boston viendra pour la première fois en Europe. Il donnera à Paris trois concerts en mai, jouera ensuite à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich, dans les Pays-Bas et en Belgique.

● L'Opéra de Vienne et l'orchestre philharmonique de Vienne joueront à Paris en mai. Toujours en mai, l'orchestre de la Suisse romande et les chœurs de Sainte-Cécile de Rome.

Die Tat, Zürich

Leonberger Kreiszeitung

Ausgabe vom: 7 Jan. 1952

Ausgabe vom: - 4. Jan

Ein Festival der Freien Welt

In Paris plant man für Mai 1952 eine Reihe von Veranstaltungen, die unter dem Patronat des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit «Meisterwerke des 20. Jahrhunderts» zur Schau stellen und damit gegenüber der Propaganda des Ostens die Gültigkeit, Kraft und Lebensfähigkeit der modernen westlichen Kultur dartun sollen. Bildende Kunst, Musik, Oper, Ballett, Literatur, Drama und Philosophie sollen inbegriffen sein. Aufführen will man Werke von Debussy, Ravel, Schönberg, Milhaud, Honegger, Alban Berg, Strawinsky, der auch als Dirigent auftreten soll, auch von Schostakowitsch und Prokofiew, soweit ihre Schöpfungen in Rußland verboten sind. Unter den bedeutendsten Dirigenten sollen die Wiener Philharmoniker, Chor und Orchester der Akademie der hl. Cecilie in Rom, das Rias-Orchester aus Berlin, das Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, das Orchestre des Conservatoires, Paris, das Amerikanische Nationalorchester und vielleicht das Orchester von Philadelphia mitwirken. Einige der bedeutsamsten dramatischen Werke der Zeit sollen aufgeführt und eine umfassende Ausstellung zeitgenössischer Malerei aus europäischem und amerikanischem Besitz soll gezeigt werden.

np.

Kongreß für kulturelle Fr

Das Bostoner Symphonieorche
Einladung angenommen, im F
Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit
kommen. Es wird der erste Au rühmten Orchesters in Europa s Kongreß werden auch einige der europäischen Orchester, darunter
Philharmoniker, das Genfer „Orc
Suisse Romande", das Pariser Conservatoire" und „Orchest.e
wie die Wiener Staatsoper, teil
New Yorker Staatsballett unter
vor. Georges Balanchine wird
Igor Strawinsky aufführen, die nisten selbst dirigiert werde

3.1.52 Die Welt

Kunst kämpft für Freiheit

21 Paris, 2. Jan

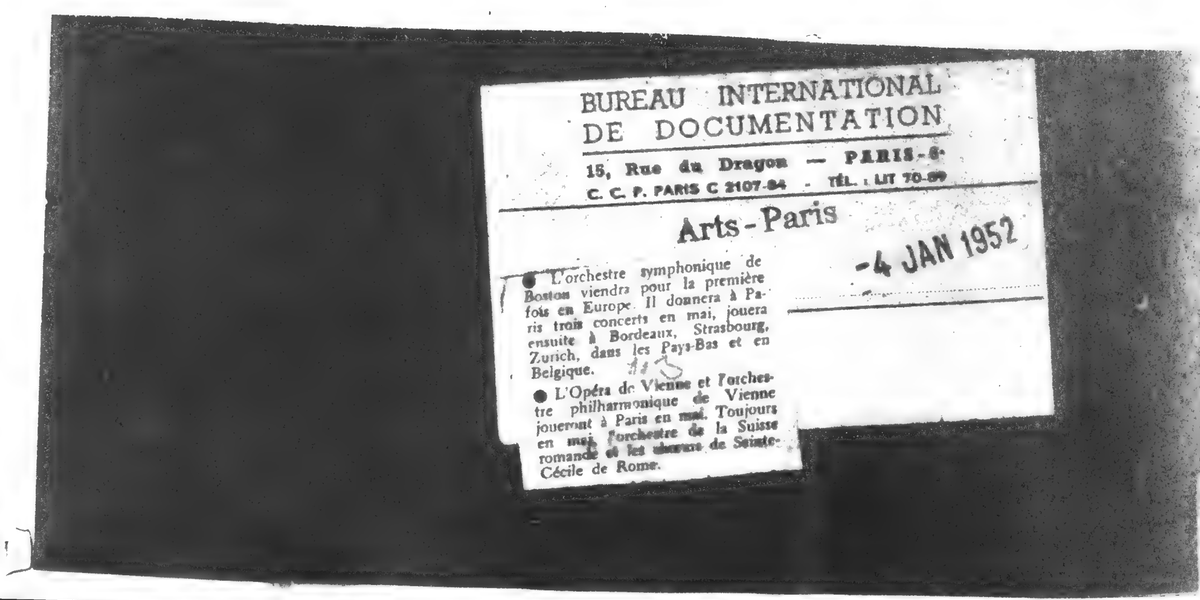
Der Kongreß für kult[ur]elle Freiheit, der im Mai in Paris stattfi[n]det, und das Bostoner Sinfonie-Orchester unter seinem Dirigenten Charles Mu[nch] und Pierre Monteux in die französische Hauptstadt führen. Außerdem werden [die] Wiener Staatoper (mit Alban Berg's Wozzeck), die Wiener Philharmoniker, [der] Orchester der Cäcilien-Akademie Rom sowie Orchester aus Genf und Berlin (RIAS) gastieren. Igor Strawinsky hat zugesagt, bei einer Vorstellung des New-York-City-Balletts eigene Werke zu dirigieren. Eine große moderne Kunstausstellung und literarische Veranstaltungen von ähnlich internationalem Rang werden die Reihe der künstlerischen Veranstaltungen ergänzen.



BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Arts-Paris

-4 JAN 1952

● L'orchestre symphonique de Boston viendra pour la première fois en Europe. Il donnera à Paris trois concerts en mai, jouera ensuite à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich, dans les Pays-Bas et en Belgique.

● L'Opéra de Vienne et l'orchestre philharmonique de Vienne joueront à Paris en mai. Toujours en mai, l'orchestre de la Suisse romande et les chœurs de Sainte-Cécile de Rome.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

COMBAT - PARIS

4 JANV 1952

En mai prochain au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées

« L'œuvre du vingtième siècle »

Lorsque, en avril dernier, le président Auriol rendit visite au président Truman, il félicita Charles Munch, directeur musical de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston venu jouer spécialement pour lui à Washington. Il demanda même au chef d'orchestre de venir présenter ses musiciens en France.

Ce vœu deviendra en mai prochain une réalité grâce au Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture qui organise, sur le thème « L'œuvre du vingtième siècle », un grand Festival d'art au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées.

Trois concerts de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston (Charles Munch Pierre Monteux)

Au programme, trois concerts donnés par les 104 musiciens de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston sous la direction de Charles Munch ou de Pierre Monteux.

Neuf chefs ont dirigé cet orchestre depuis sa fondation en 1881. Pierre Monteux, après des études musicales à Paris où il est né, vint aux Etats-Unis avec les Ballets russes de Serge de Diaghilev et s'y fixa. Passé au Metropolitan Opera de New York, il dirigea, de 1919 à 1924, l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston. Actuellement, il dirige, jusqu'en avril prochain, l'Orchestre symphonique de San Francisco.

Les musiciens de Boston s'embarqueront pour l'Europe le 26 avril après leur saison de printemps au Symphony Hall. Ils comptent rester une quinzaine de jours en Europe pour se produire, après leurs trois concerts parisiens, à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich et, peut-être, en Belgique, en Hollande et en Autriche.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Arts-Paris

-4 JAN 1952

● L'orchestre symphonique de Boston viendra pour la première fois en Europe. Il donnera à Paris trois concerts en mai, jouera ensuite à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich, dans les Pays-Bas et en Belgique.

● L'Opéra de Vienne et l'orchestre philharmonique de Vienne joueront à Paris en mai. Toujours en mai, l'orchestre de la Suisse romande et les chœurs de Sainte-Cécile de Rome.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

COMBAT - PARIS

7 JANV 1952

Charles Munch

● L'orchestre symphonique de Boston viendra pour la première fois en Europe. Il donnera à Paris trois concerts en mai, jouera ensuite à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich, dans les Pays-Bas et en Belgique.

● L'Opéra de Vienne et l'orchestre philharmonique de Vienne joueront à Paris en mai. Toujours en mai, l'orchestre de la Suisse romande et les chœurs de Sainte-Cécile de Rome.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Paris-Presse - L'Intransigeant

1er JANV 1952

LE JOURNAL DE LA MUSIQUE

LES PARISIENS AURONT UN « SUPER-FESTIVAL »

L'orchestre de Boston et la rentrée de Strawinsky en mai à Paris

AU mois de mai, c'est maintenant officiel, l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston donnera trois concerts à Paris. Concerts dirigés par Charles Münch, actuel président du grand orchestre américain, et Pierre Monteux, le créateur du « Sacre du printemps ».

Cet événement musical fait partie d'une série de manifestations groupées sous le titre : « L'Œuvre du XXe siècle », organisées par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture, qui se tiendra à cette époque au théâtre des Champs-Elysées.

On laisse entendre que les trois concerts auront lieu au théâtre des Champs-Elysées. Etant donné l'ampleur de l'événement nous pensons et nous espérons que les organisateurs changeront d'avis et feront jouer ces trois concerts à l'Opéra, cadre beaucoup plus adéquat.

Sans vouloir faire preuve d'un chauvinisme mesquin, ce serait, à notre avis, une façon élégante de rendre hommage à Charles Münch et à Monteux qui font honneur à la France en la représentant brillamment à l'étranger.

[259]

Die Tat, Zürich

Ausgabe vom: 7 Jan. 1952

Ein Festival der Freien Welt

In Paris plant man für Mai 1952 eine Reihe von Veranstaltungen, die unter dem Patronat des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit «Meisterwerke des 20. Jahrhunderts» zur Schau stellen und damit gegenüber der Propaganda des Ostens die Gültigkeit, Kraft und Lebensfähigkeit der modernen westlichen Kultur dartun sollen. Bildende Kunst, Musik, Oper, Ballett, Literatur, Drama und Philosophie sollen inbegriffen sein. Aufführen will man Werke von Debussy, Ravel, Schönberg, Milhaud, Honegger, Alban Berg, Strawinsky, der auch als Dirigent auftreten soll, auch von Schostakowitsch und Prokofiew, soweit ihre Schöpfungen in Rußland verboten sind. Unter den bedeutendsten Dirigenten sollen die Wiener Philharmoniker, Chor und Orchester der Akademie der hl. Cecilie in Rom, das Rias-Orchester aus Berlin, das Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, das Orchestre des Conservatoires, Paris, das Amerikanische Nationalorchester und vielleicht das Orchester von Philadelphia mitwirken. Einige der bedeutsamsten dramatischen Werke der Zeit sollen aufgeführt und eine umfassende Ausstellung zeitgenössischer Malerei aus europäischem und amerikanischem Besitz soll gezeigt werden.

np.

Leonberger Kreiszeitung

Ausgabe vom: - 4. Jan 1952

Kongreß für kulturelle Fr...

Das Bostoner Symphonieorches... Einladung angenommen, im Fr... Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit ... kommen. Es wird der erste Au... rühmten Orchesters in Europa se... Kongreß werden auch einige der b... europäischen Orchester, darunter d... Philharmoniker, das Genfer „Orch... Suisse Romande", das Pariser „C... Conservatoire" und „Orchest..e N... wie die Wiener Staatsoper, te... New Yorker Staatsballett unter ... vor. Georges Balanchine wird ... Igor Strawinsky aufführen, die ... nisten selbst dirigiert werden.

3.1.52 Die Welt

Kunst kämpft für Freiheit

21

Paris, 2. Januar (eig. Ber.)

Der Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit, der im Mai in Paris stattfindet, wird das Bostoner Sinfonie-Orchester unter seinen Dirigenten Charles Munch und Pierre Monteux in die französische Hauptstadt führen. Außerdem werden die Wiener Staatoper (mit Alban Bergs „Wozzeck"), die Wiener Philharmoniker, Chor und Orchester der Cäcilien-Akademie Rom sowie Orchester aus Genf und Berlin (RIAS) gastieren. Igor Strawinskij hat zugesagt, bei einer Vorstellung des New-York-City-Balletts eigene Werke zu dirigieren. Eine große moderne Kunstausstellung und literarische Darbietungen von ähnlich internationalem Rang werden die Reihe der künstlerischen Veranstaltungen ergänzen.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Arts-Paris

-4 JAN 1952

● L'orchestre symphonique de Boston viendra pour la première fois en Europe. Il donnera à Paris trois concerts en mai, jouera ensuite à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich, dans les Pays-Bas et en Belgique.

● L'Opéra de Vienne et l'orchestre philharmonique de Vienne joueront à Paris en mai. Toujours en mai, l'orchestre de la Suisse romande et les chœurs de Sainte-Cécile de Rome.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89
COMBAT - PARIS
Incomplète
4 JANV 1952

En mai prochain au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées

« L'œuvre du vingtième siècle »

Lorsque, en avril dernier, le président Auriol rendit visite au président Truman, il félicita Charles Munch, directeur musical de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston venu jouer spécialement pour lui à Washington. Il demanda même au chef d'orchestre de venir présenter ses musiciens en France.

Ce vœu deviendra en mai prochain une réalité grâce au Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture qui organise, sur le thème « L'œuvre du vingtième siècle », un grand Festival d'art au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées.

Trois concerts de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston (Charles Munch Pierre Monteux)

Au programme, trois concerts donnés par les 104 musiciens de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston sous la direction de Charles Munch ou de Pierre Monteux.

Neuf chefs ont dirigé cet orchestre depuis sa fondation en 1881. Pierre Monteux, après des études musicales à Paris où il est né, vint aux Etats-Unis avec les Ballets russes de Serge de Diaghilev et s'y fixa. Passé au Metropolitan Opera de New York, il dirigea, de 1919 à 1924, l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston. Actuellement, il dirige, jusqu'en avril prochain, l'Orchestre symphonique de San Francisco.

Les musiciens de Boston s'embarqueront pour l'Europe le 26 avril après leur saison de printemps au Symphony Hall. Ils comptent rester une quinzaine de jours en Europe pour se produire, après leurs trois concerts parisiens, à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich et, peut-être, en Belgique, en Hollande et en Autriche.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89
Arts-Paris
-4 JAN 1952

● L'orchestre symphonique de Boston viendra pour la première fois en Europe. Il donnera à Paris trois concerts en mai, jouera ensuite à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich, dans les Pays-Bas et en Belgique.

● L'Opéra de Vienne et l'orchestre philharmonique de Vienne joueront à Paris en mai. Toujours en mai, l'orchestre de la Suisse romande et les chœurs de Sainte-Cécile de Rome.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89
COMBAT - PARIS
10 JANV 1952

Charles Munch

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89
Paris-Presse l'Intransigeant
1er JANV 1952

LE JOURNAL DE LA MUSIQUE

LES PARISIENS AURONT UN « SUPER-FESTIVAL »

L'orchestre de Boston et la rentrée de Strawinsky en mai à Paris

AU mois de mai, c'est maintenant officiel, l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston donnera trois concerts à Paris. Concerts dirigés par Charles Münch, actuel président du grand orchestre américain, et Pierre Monteux, le créateur du « Sacre du printemps ».

Cet événement musical fait partie d'une série de manifestations groupées sous le titre : « L'Œuvre du XXe siècle », organisées par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture, qui se tiendra à cette époque au théâtre des Champs-Elysées.

On laisse entendre que les trois concerts auront lieu au théâtre des Champs-Elysées. Etant donné l'ampleur de l'événement nous pensons et nous espérons que les organisateurs changeront d'avis et feront jouer ces trois concerts à l'Opéra, cadre beaucoup plus adéquat.

Sans vouloir faire preuve d'un chauvinisme mesquin, ce serait, à notre avis, une façon élégante de rendre hommage à Charles Münch et à Monteux qui font honneur à la France en la représentant brillamment à l'étranger.

259

Die Tat, Zürich

Ausgabe vom: 7 Jan. 1952

Ein Festival der Freien Welt

In Paris plant man für Mai 1952 eine Reihe von Veranstaltungen, die unter dem Patronat des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit «Meisterwerke des 20. Jahrhunderts» zur Schau stellen und damit gegenüber der Propaganda des Ostens die Gültigkeit, Kraft und Lebensfähigkeit der modernen westlichen Kultur dartun sollen. Bildende Kunst, Musik, Oper, Ballett, Literatur, Drama und Philosophie sollen inbegriffen sein. Aufführen will man Werke von Debussy, Ravel, Schönberg, Milhaud, Honegger, Alban Berg, Strawinsky, der auch als Dirigent auftreten soll, auch von Schostakowitsch und Prokofiew, soweit ihre Schöpfungen in Rußland verboten sind. Unter den bedeutendsten Dirigenten sollen die Wiener Philharmoniker, Chor und Orchester der Akademie der hl. Cecilie in Rom, das Rias-Orchester aus Berlin, das Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, das Orchestre des Conservatoires, Paris, das Amerikanische Nationalorchester und vielleicht das Orchester von Philadelphia mitwirken. Einige der bedeutsamsten dramatischen Werke der Zeit sollen aufgeführt und eine umfassende Ausstellung zeitgenössischer Malerei aus europäischem und amerikanischem Besitz soll gezeigt werden. wp.

Leonberger Kreiszeitung

Ausgabe vom: - 4. Jan. 1952

Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester hat eine Einladung angenommen, im Frühjahr zum Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit nach Paris zu kommen. Es wird der erste Auftritt des berühmten Orchesters in Europa sein. Auf dem Kongreß werden auch einige der bekanntesten europäischen Orchester, darunter die Wiener Philharmoniker, das Genfer „Orchestre de la Suisse Romande", das Pariser „Orchestre du Conservatoire" und „Orchestre National" sowie die Wiener Staatsoper, teilnehmen. Das New Yorker Staatsballett unter der [illegible] von Georges Balanchine wird Tanzstücke Igor Strawinsky aufführen, die vom Komponisten selbst dirigiert werden.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89
Arts-Paris
-4 JAN 1952

● L'orchestre symphonique de Boston viendra pour la première fois en Europe. Il donnera à Paris trois concerts en mai, jouera ensuite à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich, dans les Pays-Bas et en Belgique.

● L'Opéra de Vienne et l'orchestre philharmonique de Vienne joueront à Paris en mai. Toujours en mai, l'orchestre de la Suisse romande et les chœurs de Sainte-Cécile de Rome.

3.1.52 Die Welt, Hamburg (überp.)

Kunst kämpft für Freiheit

Paris, 2. Januar (Eig. Ber.)

Der Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit, der im Mai in Paris stattfindet, wird das Bostoner Sinfonie-Orchester unter seinen Dirigenten Charles Munch und Pierre Monteux in die französische Hauptstadt führen. Außerdem werden die Wiener Staatoper (mit Alban Bergs „Wozzeck"), die Wiener Philharmoniker, Chor und Orchester der Cäcilien-Akademie Rom sowie Orchester aus Genf und Berlin (RIAS) gastieren. Igor Strawinskij hat zugesagt, bei einer Vorstellung des New-York-City-Balletts eigene Werke zu dirigieren. Eine große moderne Kunstausstellung und literarische Darbietungen von ähnlich internationalem Rang werden die Reihe der künstlerischen Veranstaltungen ergänzen.

FRANC-TIREUR, PARIS

17 JAN 1952

SOUS L'ÉGIDE DU CONGRÈS POUR LA LIBERTÉ DE LA CULTURE

Entretien avec le directeur de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston

L'ŒUVRE du XXe siècle !... L'anthologie de tout ce que [illegible] musique, la peinture, la littérature, la philosophie de l'Occident a pu apporter durant un [illegible] par quelques grandes œuvres [illegible], au fonds commun de la civilisation... C'est cette vaste démonstration que va faire au mois de mai, comme nous l'avons vu déjà, sous l'égide du Congrès mondial pour la liberté de la culture, une Exposition internationale des arts, qu'anime le secrétaire général du Congrès, Nicolas Nabokov.

Entre tant de sociétés, de troupes, de compagnies, de grands artistes internationaux qui se préparent à venir ou viennent déjà à Paris pour ce printemps de la culture libre, nous avons rencontré hier à Paris, aux bureaux du congrès, M. George E. Judd, qui est le directeur du Boston Symphony Orchestra, l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, l'une des plus réputées parmi les grandes compagnies musicales du monde entier.

Cet homme, grand, mince, aux cheveux blancs sur un visage à la fois malicieux et rêveur, on le sent tout entier possédé par cette œuvre qu'il accomplit depuis l'année 1918, depuis plus de trente ans. Et tout de suite il nous dit :

— Nous sommes toujours heureux de pouvoir venir en France, car notre orchestre est peut-être celui qui a le plus de liens d'art et de sensibilité avec votre pays. Vingt musiciens de notre orchestre sont d'origine française. Et, depuis 1918, c'est l'orchestre de Boston qui a fait connaître les œuvres nouvelles de vos compositeurs, de cette admirable école de Paris, avec ses grands noms, Honegger, Milhaud...

Et soudain, émotion... Tandis que nous parlons apparaît la silhouette un peu plus fragile, un peu plus voûtée d'Arthur Honegger, remis maintenant d'une longue maladie. Et puis Darius Milhaud appuyé sur deux cannes... Deux illustres parmi les plus grands, et qui échangent des souvenirs.

Et George E. Judd continue :

— Charles Munch et Pierre Monteux, vos deux grands chefs d'orchestre, viendront à Paris avec notre orchestre pour un concert de la grande manifestation artistique organisée par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Je pense que ce sera une joie pour les Parisiens de retrouver Pierre Monteux après si longtemps. C'est le 5 mai que notre compagnie arrivera à Paris.

Et nous quittons le directeur de l'orchestre de Boston sur une dernière parole d'amitié, en parlant de la musique qui, par-dessus les frontières, unit tous les peuples.

G. A.

LE PARISIEN LIBÉRÉ, PARIS

19 JANV. 1952

20 FRANÇAIS dans le Boston Symphony Orchestra qui sera à Paris en mai

M. JUDD, directeur du « Boston Symphony Orchestra », est venu passer une semaine à Paris afin de « contacter » les autorités artistiques françaises, notamment M. Joxe, à propos de l'organisation des concerts que donnera son brillant ensemble à Paris, au mois de mai, dans le cadre du congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Affable, souriant, cet aimable Américain affirme qu'il préfère notre capitale en hiver qu'en été. Devant mon étonnement, il sourit :

— Mais oui, bien sûr, au mois de janvier on peut se promener sans rencontrer un compatriote à chaque coin de rue, tandis qu'au mois d'août.

C'est décidé, la séance inaugurale aura lieu à l'Opéra sous la direction de Charles Munch. Pierre Monteux, qui a conduit le Sacre du printemps, il y a 39 ans, lors de sa création au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, l'animera de nouveau.

Au cours d'un cocktail, Honegger, Milhaud et Judd ont levé leur verre à la prospérité du Boston Symphony Orchestra jadis dirigé par Henri Rabaud et dont font partie une vingtaine de virtuoses français.

LE CÉLÈBRE ORCHESTRE DE BOSTON

viendra à Paris en mai

sous les auspices du Congrès Américain

(De notre bureau de New-York)

31 décembre 1951. — Les Parisiens auront, au printemps prochain, le privilège d'applaudir le fameux Orchestre symphonique de Boston qui, pour la première fois, traversera l'Océan. Cette célèbre compagnie, considérée comme la meilleure équipe musicale des Etats-Unis, fut pendant près de vingt ans dirigée par Koussevitzky ; son actuel chef d'orchestre est un Français, Charles Münch. Au cours d'un séjour en Europe de trois semaines, elle donnera également des concerts en Belgique, en Hollande et en Suisse. A Paris, ses 104 exécutants se feront entendre à l'Opéra. L'an dernier, l'Orchestre philharmonique de New-York était déjà venu en Europe, mais s'était borné à jouer au festival d'Edimbourg.

De plus, les Ballets de New-York donneront au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées six représentations, dont un programme entier d'œuvres de Stravinsky, dirigé par le compositeur. Au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées aussi, une troupe nègre jouera l'opéra de Virgil Thompson, Quatre saints en trois actes, écrit sur un livret de Gertrude Stein. Enfin, aura lieu une exposition de 200 peintres contemporains américains.

Cette série de festivités inspirées par le nouveau monde aura lieu à l'occasion du Festival des arts, organisé par le congrès des Libertés culturelles. Et, chose exceptionnelle, c'est le Parlement de Washington qui patronne et même finance ces exhibitions, dans le but de lutter contre la propagande communiste en Europe qui déclare « décadente » la culture du monde occidental. Naturellement, ces manifestations seront payantes, mais le Congrès américain s'est engagé à couvrir le déficit qui pourrait résulter des frais élevés du voyage. On estime ces frais à plus de 150.000 dollars (plus de 50 millions de francs).

RAYMOND LANGE.

UNITED STATES DELEGATION
TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS

HOTEL ASTORIA
131, AVENUE DES CHAMPS-ÉLYSÉES
PARIS (8e) FRANCE

ADVANCE RELEASE:
FOR RELEASE SUNDAY
JANUARY 13, 1952
8 P.M. PARIS TIME

Press Release #1379
January 10, 1952

Text of the weekly radio commentary by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in French, broadcast at 8 p.m. (Paris time), Sunday, January 13, on the Programme Parisien of the Radio-Diffusion Francaise.

- -

Because unfortunately Ambassador Warren Austin's health has not permitted his return to Paris, I am continuing to act as Chief of the Delegation. For that reason I have been forced to give up many personal contacts and to refuse invitations which I would have been very much interested in accepting.

Next Sunday, however, I will have the great pleasure of paying a visit to the cradle of the Roosevelt family at Lannoy, near Roubaix. The French farmers who emigrated to America in the seventeenth century came from that neighborhood and were called de Lannoy, which became Delano. Delano was the name of my husband's mother.

The authorities of Lannoy are good enough to be conferring upon me the title of honorary citizen and I have accepted this invitation with great pleasure. I will be, I believe, the first member of the Roosevelt family to make this pilgrimage. And like all my fellow Americans, although our roots are deeply sunk in the soil and the history of the United States, I do not forget my European origin.

Our ancestors were refugees who fled during the religious wars. I have never stopped being interested in the fate of refugees. It is still of serious concern today. That is the question we have been discussing in the Third Committee of the United Nations this week, and I want to say a few words about it here.

The plight of refugees poses a moral problem which we cannot disregard. It is not by saying that a refugee is a traitor that we can resolve this problem. I imagine that in the course of history, all refugees have

MORE
1379

FRANC-TIREUR, PARIS

17 JAN 1952

SOUS L'ÉGIDE DU CONGRÈS POUR LA LIBERTÉ DE LA CULTURE

Entretien avec le directeur de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston

L'ŒUVRE du XX[e] siècle !... L'anthologie de tout ce que la musique, la peinture, la littérature, la philosophie de l'Occident ont pu apporter durant un siècle, par quelques grandes œuvres marquantes, au fonds commun de la civilisation... C'est cette vaste démonstration que va faire au mois de mai, comme nous l'avons vu déjà, sous l'égide du Congrès mondial pour la liberté de la culture, une Exposition internationale des arts, qu'anime le secrétaire général du Congrès Nicolas Nabokov.

Entre tant de sociétés, de troupes, de compagnies, de grands artistes internationaux qui se préparent à venir ou viennent déjà à Paris pour ce printemps de la culture libre, nous avons rencontré hier à Paris, aux bureaux du congrès, M. George E. Judd, qui est le directeur du Boston Symphony Orchestra, l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, l'une des plus réputées parmi les grandes compagnies musicales du monde entier.

Cet homme, grand, mince, aux cheveux blancs sur un visage à la fois malicieux et rêveur, on le sent tout entier possédé par cette œuvre qu'il accomplit depuis l'année 1918, depuis plus de trente ans. Et tout de suite il nous dit :

— Nous sommes toujours heureux de pouvoir venir en France, car notre orchestre est peut-être celui qui a le plus de liens d'art et de sensibilité avec votre pays. Vingt musiciens de notre orchestre sont d'origine française. Et, depuis 1918, c'est l'orchestre de Boston qui a fait connaître les œuvres nouvelles de vos compositeurs, de cette admirable école de Paris, avec ses grands noms, Honegger, Milhaud...

Et soudain, émotion... Tandis que nous parlons apparaît la silhouette un peu plus fragile, un peu plus voûtée d'Arthur Honegger, remis maintenant d'une longue maladie. Et puis Darius Milhaud appuyé sur deux cannes... Deux illustres parmi les plus grands, et qui échangent des souvenirs.

Et George E. Judd continue :

— Charles Munch et Pierre Monteux, vos deux grands chefs d'orchestre, viendront à Paris avec notre orchestre pour un concert de la grande manifestation artistique organisée par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Je pense que ce sera une joie pour les Parisiens de retrouver Pierre Monteux après si longtemps. C'est le 5 mai que notre compagnie arrivera à Paris.

Et nous quittons le directeur de l'orchestre de Boston sur une dernière parole d'amitié, en parlant de la musique qui, par-dessus les frontières, unit tous les peuples.

G. A.

LE PARISIEN LIBÉRÉ, PARIS

19 JANV. 1952

20 FRANÇAIS dans le Boston Symphony Orchestra qui sera à Paris en mai

M. JUDD, directeur du « Boston Symphony Orchestra », est venu passer une semaine à Paris afin de « contacter » les autorités artistiques françaises, notamment M. Jaxe, à propos de l'organisation des concerts que donnera son brillant ensemble à Paris, au mois de mai, dans le cadre du congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Affable, souriant, cet aimable Américain affirme qu'il préfère notre capitale en hiver qu'en été. Devant mon étonnement, il souligna :

— Mais oui, bien sûr, au mois de janvier on peut se promener sans rencontrer un compatriote à chaque coin de rue, tandis qu'au mois d'août.

C'est décidé, la séance inaugurale aura lieu à l'Opéra sous la direction de Charles Münch. Pierre Monteux, qui a conduit le Sacre du printemps, il y a 39 ans, lors de sa création au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, l'animera de nouveau.

Au cours d'un cocktail, Honegger, Milhaud et Judd ont levé leur verre à la prospérité du Boston Symphony Orchestra jadis dirigé par Henri Rabaud et dont font partie une vingtaine de virtuoses français.

viendra à Paris en mai

sous les auspices du Congrès Américain

(De notre bureau de New-York)

31 décembre 1951. — Les Parisiens auront, au printemps prochain, le privilège d'applaudir le fameux Orchestre symphonique de Boston qui, pour la première fois, traversera l'Océan. Cette célèbre compagnie, considérée comme la meilleure équipe musicale des Etats-Unis, fut pendant près de vingt ans dirigée par Koussevitzky ; son actuel chef d'orchestre est un Français, Charles Münch. Au cours d'un séjour en Europe de trois semaines, elle donnera également des concerts en Belgique, en Hollande et en Suisse. A Paris, ses 104 exécutants se feront entendre à l'Opéra. L'an dernier, l'Orchestre philharmonique de New-York était déjà venu en Europe, mais s'était borné à jouer au festival d'Edimbourg.

De plus, les Ballets de New-York donneront au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées six représentations, dont un programme entier d'œuvres de Stravinsky, dirigé par le compositeur. Au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées aussi, une troupe nègre jouera l'opéra de Virgil Thompson, Quatre saints en trois actes, écrit sur un livret de Gertrude Stein. Enfin, aura lieu une exposition de 200 peintres contemporains américains.

Cette série de festivités inspirées par le nouveau monde aura lieu à l'occasion du Festival des arts, organisé par le congrès des Libertés culturelles. Et, chose exceptionnelle, c'est le Parlement de Washington qui patronne et même finance ces exhibitions, dans le but de lutter contre la propagande communiste en Europe qui déclare « décadente » la culture du monde occidental. Naturellement, ces manifestations seront payantes, mais le Congrès américain s'est engagé à couvrir le déficit qui pourrait résulter des frais élevés du voyage. On estime ces frais à plus de 150.000 dollars (plus de 50 millions de francs).

RAYMOND LANGE.

UNITED STATES DELEGATION
TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS

HOTEL ASTORIA
131, AVENUE DES CHAMPS-ÉLYSÉES
PARIS (8[e]) FRANCE

ADVANCE RELEASE:
FOR RELEASE SUNDAY
JANUARY 13, 1952
8 P.M. PARIS TIME

Press Release #1379
January 10, 1952

Text of the weekly radio commentary by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in French, broadcast at 8 p.m. (Paris time), Sunday, January 13, on the Programme Parisien of the Radio-Diffusion Francaise.

Because unfortunately Ambassador Warren Austin's health has not permitted his return to Paris, I am continuing to act as Chief of the Delegation. For that reason I have been forced to give up many personal contacts and to refuse invitations which I would have been very much interested in accepting.

Next Sunday, however, I will have the great pleasure of paying a visit to the cradle of the Roosevelt family at Lannoy, near Roubaix. The French farmers who emigrated to America in the seventeenth century came from that neighborhood and were called de Lannoy, which became Delano. Delano was the name of my husband's mother.

The authorities of Lannoy are good enough to be conferring upon me the title of honorary citizen and I have accepted this invitation with great pleasure. I will be, I believe, the first member of the Roosevelt family to make this pilgrimage. And like all my fellow Americans, although our roots are deeply sunk in the soil and the history of the United States, I do not forget my European origin.

Our ancestors were refugees who fled during the religious wars. I have never stopped being interested in the fate of refugees. It is still of serious concern today. That is the question we have been discussing in the Third Committee of the United Nations this week, and I want to say a few words about it here.

The plight of refugees poses a moral problem which we cannot disregard. It is not by saying that a refugee is a traitor that we can resolve this problem. I imagine that in the course of history, all refugees have

MORE
1379

FRANC-TIREUR, PARIS

17 JAN 1952

SOUS L'ÉGIDE DU CONGRÈS POUR LA LIBERTÉ DE LA CULTURE

Entretien avec le directeur de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston

L'ŒUVRE du XX• siècle !... L'anthologie de tout ce que la musique, la peinture, la littérature, la philosophie de l'Occident ont pu apporter durant un siècle, par quelques grandes œuvres marquantes, au fonds commun de la

viendra à Paris en mai

sous les auspices du Congrès Américain

(De notre bureau de New-York)

31 décembre 1951. — Les Parisiens auront, au printemps prochain, le privilège d'applaudir le fameux Orchestre symphonique de Boston qui, pour la première fois, traversera l'Océan. Cette célèbre compagnie, considérée comme la meilleure équipe musicale des Etats-Unis, fut pendant près de vingt ans dirigée par Koussevitzky ; son actuel chef d'orchestre est un Français, Charles Münch. Au cours d'un séjour en Europe de trois semaines, elle donnera également des concerts en Belgique, en Hollande et en Suisse. A Paris, ses 104 exécutants se feront entendre à l'Opéra. L'an dernier, l'Orchestre philharmonique de New-York était déjà venu en Europe, mais s'était borné à jouer au festival d'Edimbourg.

De plus, les Ballets de New-York donneront au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées six représentations, dont un programme entier d'œuvres de Stravinsky, dirigé par le compositeur. Au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées aussi, une troupe nègre jouera l'opéra de Virgil Thompson, Quatre saints en trois actes, écrit sur un livret de Gertrude Stein. Enfin, aura lieu une exposition de 200 peintres contemporains américains.

Cette série de festivités inspirées par le nouveau monde aura lieu à l'occasion du Festival des arts, organisé par le congrès des Libertés culturelles. Et, chose exceptionnelle, c'est le Parlement de Washington qui patronne et même finance ces exhibitions, dans le but de lutter contre la propagande communiste en Europe qui déclare « décadente » la culture du monde occidental. Naturellement, ces manifestations seront payantes, mais le Congrès américain s'est engagé à couvrir le déficit qui pourrait résulter des frais élevés du voyage. On estime ces frais à plus de 150.000 dollars (plus de 50 millions de francs).

RAYMOND LANGE.

heard themselves called "renegades". However, the judgement of history has been very different. We are in a good position in the United States to understand this fact.

They were refugees, fleeing from religious and political persecution, who founded our Democracy. It was towards the United States that refugees fled from the Nazi terror.
We have welcomed the families of displaced persons since 1945, many of whom had lived for long years in displaced persons camps. Their children were born there. Many of these people have suffered terribly and have known the horrors of forced labor.

These are the "criminals" and the "traitors" whose suffering some people would want to prolong rather than help them to re-establish themselves. In the free world we believe that no one should be forced to return to his native land against his will. France, champion of the right of asylum, has given the world an example of generosity and of wisdom that none of us has the right to forget.

Our position on this question is exactly the opposite of the position of the Soviet representatives. As for us, we do not see how there could be such a large number of traitors. Exile is the most terrible of the sacrifices that can be imposed upon man. The Balts, the Ukranians, the Poles, the Rumanians, the Czechs, the Hungarians, the Bulgarians and those Russians who have decided to seek out a land of liberty at the price of terrible personal suffering are, from our point of view, simply people who want to live their own lives.

What can be the underlying reason for this epidemic of "treachery" which has attacked countries where, we are told, all the rules of social justice and of respect for the individual human being are being observed? There has not been, so far as I know, in our Democracies whose imperfections are well-known, a similar epidemic of exile and of flight towards Eastern Europe. It seems strange that such vast territories produce so many "traitors".

In an effort to influence world opinion against refugees and against the governments who welcome them, our Soviet colleagues have stated, in the United Nations, that we are collecting displaced persons because we need cheap labor.

I want to say here that we cannot even imagine such a possibility in the United States. Apart from all human considerations, I can point out the fact that our labor unions are, thank heaven, very powerful. They would never tolerate our bringing cheap labor into the country to compete with American labor.

I find it absurd, moreover, that in our time a refugee who has lost everything, who has given up everything that is most dear to him in order to be master of his own fate, should be called "fascist". Must we say that whoever is not a Communist is for that reason an agent of fascism? That is a generalization which sums up the very essence of the spirit of intolerance.

• • • •

This week, at a meeting with the organisers of the Congress for Cultural Freedom, I learned with great interest that they are planning to hold in Paris in May a Cultural Festival to be called "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century". This series of exhibits has been planned in order to remind us that it is thanks

viendra à Paris en mai

sous les auspices du Congrès Américain

(De notre bureau de New-York)

31 décembre 1951. — Les Parisiens auront, au printemps prochain, le privilège d'applaudir le fameux Orchestre symphonique de Boston qui, pour la première fois, traversera l'Océan. Cette célèbre compagnie, considérée comme la meilleure équipe musicale des Etats-Unis, fut pendant près de vingt ans dirigée par Koussevitzky ; son actuel chef d'orchestre est un Français, Charles Münch. Au cours d'un séjour en Europe de trois semaines, elle donnera également des concerts en Belgique, en Hollande et en Suisse. A Paris, ses 104 exécutants se feront entendre à l'Opéra. L'an dernier, l'Orchestre philharmonique de New-York était déjà venu en Europe, mais s'était borné à jouer au festival d'Edimbourg.

De plus, les Ballets de New-York donneront au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées six représentations, dont un programme entier d'œuvres de Stravinsky, dirigé par le compositeur. Au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées aussi, une troupe nègre jouera l'opéra de Virgil Thompson, Quatre saints en trois actes, écrit sur un livret de Gertrude Stein. Enfin, aura lieu une exposition de 200 peintres contemporains américains.

Cette série de festivités inspirées par le nouveau monde aura lieu à l'occasion du Festival des arts, organisé par le congrès des Libertés culturelles. Et, chose exceptionnelle, c'est le Parlement de Washington qui patronne et même finance ces exhibitions, dans le but de lutter contre la propagande communiste en Europe qui déclare « décadente » la culture du monde occidental. Naturellement, ces manifestations seront payantes, mais le Congrès américain s'est engagé à couvrir le déficit qui pourrait résulter des frais élevés du voyage. On estime ces frais à plus de 150.000 dollars (plus de 50 millions de francs).

RAYMOND LANGE.

to the blessings of liberty that the most beautiful examples of European culture in this era have been achieved. Without freedom, that personal enterprise to which we owe our masterpieces of music, of painting and of literature would never have been possible.

The Congress for Cultural Freedom is inviting to Paris famous composers, artists and orchestra conductors. For instance, Stravinsky will direct several of his own works. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Suisse Romande Orchestra, the Choir of the Academy of Saint Cecilia in Rome, will take part in the Festival. And of course the Conservatory Orchestra and the National Orchestra will also be heard.

It is difficult to imagine a better selection than Paris as the site for a Festival celebrating the Twentieth Century. The first concert will take place in the Eglise St. Roch, where the Bach Magnificat will be given in the memory of the victims of persecution.

******

Continental DAILY MAIL

MONDAY, JANUARY 21, 1952.

Twenty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play here in May for the festival of the arts sponsored by the Congress for Cultural Freedom, are of French descent, and the four most recent conductors, since 1918, have all gone to Boston from France . . . Four great grandchildren and four great great grandchildren will attend celebrations here next month of the 150th anniversary of the birth of Victor Hugo . . . Beginning on January 24 and for 18 days, about 150 famous singers including Edith Piaf, Yves Montand, Tino Rossi, Jean Sablon and Les Compagnons de la Chanson will become street singers in the leading thoroughfares of Paris.

Air de Paris

23 JAN 1952

A la suite de l'orchestre de Boston seront présentés à Paris l'Opéra de Vienne, les chœurs et l'orchestre de l'Académie Ste-Cécile de Rome, ainsi que le New-York City Ballet qui donnera six spectacles.

After the Boston symphony orchestra, the Viennese Opera will open in Paris, the dancers and orchestra of the academy of St Cecile of Rome, and the New-York city Ballet will give six performances.

Air de Paris

On sait que le grand orchestre symphonique de Boston sera présenté à Paris, en mai. M. Charles Munch et M. Pierre Monteux tiendront tour à tour la baguette.

LE MONDE - PARIS

20 JAN 1952

Une réception a été donnée récemment au centre du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture en l'honneur de M. Judd, administrateur du Boston Symphonic Orchestra. M. Judd a annoncé la venue de ce célèbre orchestre à Paris, en mai. Un concert, dirigé par Charles Münch, aura lieu à l'Opéra, et un autre au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous la direction de Pierre Monteux.

MM. Arthur Honegger, Henri Barraut et Darius Milhaud assistaient à cette réception.

Le Nouveau Rhin Français - Colmar

23 JAN 1952

La vie musicale

La musique française et l'orchestre symphonique de Boston

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston donnera son premier concert parisien le 6 Mai à l'Opéra sous la direction de Charles Munch et dans le cadre de « L'Oeuvre du Vingtième Siècle », vaste exposition internationale des arts qui doit se dérouler tout au long du mois de Mai dans notre capitale sous l'égide du Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture.

Cette formation qui ne comprend pas moins de cent quatre musiciens s'embarquera à destination de la France le 27 Avril à bord de l'Ile de France (pour se plier aux dates de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, la French Line n'a pas hésité à modifier les siennes).

Le second concert de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston est prévu pour le 8 Mai. Il aura lieu au Théâtre des Champs Elysées et sera dirigé par Pierre Monteux qui, trente neuf ans auparavant, jour pour jour, dirigeait dans ce même théâtre la première représentation du « Sacre du Printemps » de Strawinsky pour les Ballets Russes de Diaghilew.

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston donnera son troisième concert le 21 Mai, au Palais de Chaillot.

L'un de ces concerts sera consacré aux oeuvres de musiciens français contemporains. Parmi les autres projets de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, citons notamment la Cinquième Symphonie de Honegger, une ouverture d'un compositeur américain, Samuel Barber, et diverses oeuvres de Ravel et de Debussy.

Après avoir joué dans le cadre de « L'Oeuvre du XXème Siècle », l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston ira à Strasbourg, ville natale de Charles Munch, en Hollande, Belgique, Angleterre et en Allemagne où il jouera pour les troupes d'occupation américaines.

La musique française contemporaine a toujours été en faveur auprès des divers chefs d'orchestre qui se succédèrent au pupitre de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston. Il n'y a rien d'étonnant à cela, trois de ces chefs d'orchestre étaient eux-mêmes français : Charles Munch qui en est l'actuel directeur artistique, Pierre Monteux qui le resta de 1919 à 1924 et avant lui Henri Rabaud. Quant à Serge Koussevitzky qui dirigea la célèbre formation américaine de 1923 jusqu'à l'arrivée de Munch en 1949, il avait acquis la nationalité française et demeura toute sa vie le champion le plus ardent de la cause de la musique française. Avant eux, Wilhelm Gericke, Max Fiedler et Karl Muck avaient beau venir d'Europe Centrale, la musique française les intéressait passionnément : ils surent le prouver.

C'est sous la direction de Charles Munch et à Boston que fut jouée pour la première fois la Cinquième Symphonique de Honegger. Ceci grâce à l'autorisation spéciale de Koussevitzky qui avait commandé cette oeuvre pour sa propre école de musique.

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston peut se vanter des créations du Quatrième Concerto pour piano de Darius Milhaud et du Concerto pour piano de Francis Poulenc. C'est encore sous la baguette de Munch que furent présentés au public américain la Sonate de Jaubert et le Concerto pour ondes Martenot d'André Jolivet. Ce chef d'orchestre révéla aussi aux Etats-Unis le Jeanne au Bucher de Honegger et le Requiem de Berlioz. La symphonie d'Olivier Messiaen, Turangalla, fut crée par l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston sous la direction de Léonard Bernstein, l'un des plus dynamiques musiciens et compositeurs d'Amérique.

Il est impossible de faire une liste précise de toutes les oeuvres françaises jouées par l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston pendant que Koussevitzky en tenait la tête.

En 1930, pour célébrer le cinquième anniversaire de cette illustre formation, Honegger composa à son intention sa Première Symphonie, Milhaud sa seconde, Poulenc sa troisième et Strawinsky sa Symphonie pour Psaumes. Par la suite, Koussevitzky présenta les quatre premières symphonies de Honegger, toutes celles de Roussel et la plupart des oeuvres de ce dernier. C'est encore lui qui commanda à Ravel l'orchestration des Tableaux de l'Exposition de Moussorsky qu'il fit très fréquemment jouer par son orchestre. C'est lui encore qui présenta en Amérique la Fantaisie contrapuntale de Lekeu, la suite d'Impressions de Roussel, l'Elan de Bonchard, l'Hymne de Caplet, la Sinfonia de Roland-Manuel. Plus tard quand il fut invité à diriger l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston par Munch, Koussevitzky lui fit jouer pour la première fois aux Etats-Unis le Mystère des Saints Innocents de Barraud. Nadia Boulanger aussi, fut invitée à présenter le Requiem de Fauré.

Pierre Monteux fut le premier à révéler aux Américains les Jeux, la Fantaisie pour piano de Dukas, la Symphonie Héroïque de Honegger, la Suite Provençale de Milhaud, le Tombeau de Couperin de Ravel, Soir de Fête de Chausson, les Chorales de Koechlin et la Symphonie de Ropartz. C'est sous sa direction que l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston joua pour la première fois la Valse et les Valses Nobles et Sentimentales de Ravel, la Suite de Dieu de Vincent d'Indy, la Symphonie Symphonique de Lekeu, la Symphonie de Chausson et la Peri de Dukas.

Henri Rabaud ne resta qu'une saison à la tête de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, mais néanmoins il eut le temps de présenter la Première Suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé la Musique de Plein Air de Schmitt, la Suite de Sherlock Holmes de Hurel, l'Hymne à la Justice de Magnard.

Karl Muck présenta la seconde suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé, Ma Mère l'Oye de Ravel, les Trois Images et la Mer de Debussy, la Symphonie de Dukas, la Symphonie No 4 de Ropartz, la Salomé de Szamuel Wallenstein de d'Indy et la Symphonie Suite Française de Roger-Ducasse et Chausson.

Max Fiedler lui, révéla aux Américains la Pièce Symphonique extraite de la Rédemption de César Franck.

Wilhelm Gericke, au début du siècle, fit jouer par l'Orchestre de Boston pour la première fois les deux premières symphonies de Vincent d'Indy, la première symphonie de Saint-Saens, la Fantaisie de Ropartz, Viviane de Chausson et l'Apprenti Sorcier de Dukas.

Mentionnons enfin, qu'à cette époque, le célèbre joueur de houtbois Georges Long dirigeait une formation qui fut la première à jouer aux Etats-Unis l'Après-Midi d'un Faune de Debussy.

Le Parisien

LA MUSIQUE

ORPHÉE, de Gluck, à l'Empire

Il y a un an, presque jour pour jour, Maria Férès offrait une série de représentations consacrées à l'Orphée de Gluck au théâtre des Champs-Elysées. Nous avons souligné à ce moment-là toute la valeur de son effort. Encouragée par le succès, elle donne de nouveau pendant une semaine le même spectacle, mais à l'Empire. L'Orchestre national, dirigé par Inghelbrecht, a remplacé l'ensemble Lamoureux conduit par Henri Tomasi. La distribution a été modifiée aussi.

Maria Férès n'est pas une cantatrice ordinaire. Très cultivée, avant de se consacrer à l'art, elle a été institutrice à Châteauroux et apportait à l'enseignement la même passion qu'à la scène. Sa culture étendue, la flamme qui l'anime lui permettent de tenir le rôle du héros avec ardeur. Elle a le sens du drame et ses jeux de physionomie contribuent à créer la tragique ambiance recherchée. A force de tendre vers la simplicité, elle procède par symboles, et c'est une erreur. Un simple voile blanc posé à terre figure un sépulcre : « Et couvrez son tombeau de fleurs », chante Orphée ; or aucun bouquet n'apparaît sur la scène. Danièle Vrillet, charmante et gracieuse jeune fille, a fait ses débuts dans le rôle de l'Amour avec une émotion bien compréhensible et a eu le mérite de savoir se dominer, affermir sa voix. Nadine Sautereau incarnait à merveille Eurydice. Si l'acte à la porte des Enfers était violent à souhait, celui des Champs-Elysées, par contre, manquait de souriante sérénité. Les visages restaient trop graves. Ce ne sont là que critiques de détail. Maria Férès a le mérite de jouer, de chanter, de représenter l'harmonieux chef-d'œuvre de Gluck avec infiniment de talent. La mise en scène chorégraphique est de Nicolas Zvereff, la chorale Elisabeth Brasseur prête son concours à ce spectacle.

20 FRANÇAIS dans le Boston Symphony Orchestra qui sera à Paris en mai

M. JUDD, directeur du « Boston Symphony Orchestra », est venu passer une semaine à Paris afin de « contacter » les autorités artistiques françaises, notamment M. Joxe, à propos de l'organisation des concerts que donnera son brillant ensemble à Paris, au mois de mai, dans le cadre du congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Affable, souriant, cet aimable Américain affirme qu'il préfère notre capitale en hiver qu'en été. Devant mon étonnement, il souligna :

— Mais oui, bien sûr, au mois de janvier on peut se promener sans rencontrer un compatriote à chaque coin de rue, tandis qu'au mois d'août...

C'est décidé, la séance inaugurale aura lieu à l'Opéra sous la direction de Charles Münch. Pierre Monteux, qui a conduit le Sacre du printemps, il y a 39 ans, lors de sa création au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, l'animera de nouveau.

Au cours d'un cocktail, Honegger, Milhaud et Judd ont levé leur verre à la prospérité du Boston Symphony Orchestra jadis dirigé par Henri Rabaud, et dont font partie une vingtaine de virtuoses français.

"LE CONSUL" de Gian-Carlo Menotti

LE dramatique « Consul » de Gian-Carlo Menotti laisse une empreinte dans l'esprit et le cœur de ceux qui l'entendent. Il revient à Paris pour une série de 20 représentations, dont dix-sept en langue française qui seront données à partir du 22 février au théâtre des Champs-Elysées.

Comment expliquer la ruée actuelle du public aux guichets pour s'assurer des places aux trois seuls spectacles prévus en anglais, alors qu'il lui sera tellement plus facile de comprendre toutes les finesses de l'œuvre dans sa nouvelle traduction ? Aurait-il le souci de la difficulté à vaincre ? Ou serait-ce le jeu parfait des interprètes Marie Powers, Patricia Neway et de leur entourage qui suffit à l'enchanter ?

A moins que le procès de l'administration contemporaine apparaisse suffisamment transparent pour n'avoir pas besoin du secours de la parole, alors tout à fait secondaire. Nous penchons d'ailleurs en faveur de cette troisième hypothèse...

W.-L. L.

DAILY MAIL, PARIS

21 JAN 1952

SNAPSHOTS : A French newspaper reports that in Paris 112 women, averaging about 40 years of age, have their husbands followed by private detectives every day . . . Ballet star Nina Vyroubova refused to appear at a local festival after complaining that her name was not given sufficient prominence on posters announcing the performance. The audience applauded 18-year-old Violette Verdy, star of the film, "Ballerina," who did appear . . . A Paris hairdresser has wired his hair dryers with radio, so that women can listen while they wait for their permanent waves to set . . . Twenty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play here in May for the festival of the arts sponsored by the Congress for Cultural Freedom, are of French descent, and the four most recent conductors, since 1918, have all gone to Boston from France . . . Four great grandchildren and four great great grandchildren will attend celebrations here next month of the 150th anniversary of the birth of Victor Hugo . . . Beginning on January 24 and for 18 days, about 150 famous singers including Edith Piaf, Yves Montand, Tino Rossi, Jean Sablon and Les Compagnons de la Chanson will become street singers in the leading thoroughfares of Paris.

[261]

★ SPECTACLE DU MONDE ★

La délégation de réorganisation du cinéma

L'arrêté portant nomination des membres de la Commission de Réorganisation créée auprès du Centre National de la Cinématographie (J. O. du 20 février) a nommé membres de la dite commission : MM. Léon Carré, François Chavane, J.-P. Frogerais, Paul Joly, Lucien Masson et O. Connel.

Le « Comité » à l'action

Sous la présidence de M. Roger Ferdinand, président de la Société des Auteurs dramatiques, le Comité national d'action pour la défense du cinéma français vient de se réunir. Après avoir examiné la situation, le comité a décidé de s'adresser directement au public parisien et l'invite le 26 février à la Salle Pleyel. Au cours de cette manifestation un grand film français sera présenté en première mondiale.

On prend les mêmes et...

Le mariage civil des artistes de cinéma Elizabeth Taylor et Michael Wilding sera célébré demain jeudi à Londres à la mairie de Caxton Hall, annonce un porte-parole de la Compagnie Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Les nouveaux mariés, croit-on savoir, passeront leur « lune de miel » — qui durera environ une semaine — en France et en Suisse.

« Ponce-Pilate » de Bernard-Ch. Miel sera créé à Strasbourg

Le Centre Dramatique de l'Est créera le 22 février, au Grand Théâtre de Strasbourg, la pièce de Bernard-Charles Miel : « Ponce-Pilate » ou « La Tragédie du Prétoire ».

Dans sa pièce, l'auteur a noué le drame entre trois personnages centraux : Pilate, la conscience humaine, Zarités, le Grec, précurseur du matérialisme moderne, et Jésus dans son univers spirituel.

Les trois actes se passent dans le prétoire de Pilate. Ils ont été réglés par le metteur en scène du Centre : Vanderic, dans les décors de Michel Juncar.

Principaux comédiens : Paul Barrault, dans le rôle de Jésus, Pierre Tabbar (Pilate) et François Darbon (Zarités).

Le programme européen de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston

On sait déjà depuis quelque temps que le « Boston Symphonic Orchestra » doit venir à Paris ce printemps. Voici son programme :

6 MAI : à l'Opéra, sous la direction de Charles Munch (« Cinquième Symphonie » d'Arthur Honegger, « Daphnis et Chloé » de Maurice Ravel, ouverture de « L'Ecole du Scandale » de Samuel Barber, « Suite d'Amphion » d'Arthur Honegger, « Toccata » de Walter Piston, « La Mer » de Debussy).

8 MAI : au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous la direction de Pierre Monteux (« Fantasia » de Tallis, Seconde Suite de « Protée » de Darius Milhaud, « Troisième Symphonie » de William Schuman, « Rondes de Printemps » de Debussy, « Le Sacre du Printemps » de Stravinsky).

10 MAI : concert à La Haye.

11 MAI : concert à Amsterdam.

12 MAI : concert à Bruxelles.

17 MAI : concert à Strasbourg (ville natale de Charles Munch).

26 MAI : concert à Londres.

D'autres concerts sont également prévus en Italie et en Allemagne.

Pro-Europe

Paris

Europe

Pops

Continental DAILY MAIL

MONDAY, JANUARY 21, 1952.

Twenty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play here in May for the festival of the arts sponsored by the Congress for Cultural Freedom, are of French descent, and the four most recent conductors, since 1918, have all gone to Boston from France . . . Four great grandchildren and four great great grandchildren will attend celebrations here next month of the 150th anniversary of the birth of Victor Hugo . . . Beginning on January 24 and for 18 days, about 150 famous singers including Edith Piaf, Yves Montand, Tino Rossi, Jean Sablon and Les Compagnons de la Chanson will become street singers in the leading thoroughfares of Paris.

Cir de Paris

23 JAN 1952

A la suite de l'orchestre de Boston seront présentés à Paris l'Opéra de Vienne, les chœurs et l'orchestre de l'Académie Ste-Cécile de Rome, ainsi que le New-York City Ballet qui donnera six spectacles.

After the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Viennese Opera will open in Paris, the dancers and orchestra of the academy of St Cecile of Rome, and the New-York city Ballet will give six performances.

Cir de Paris

23 JAN 1952

On sait que le grand orchestre symphonique de Boston sera présenté à Paris, en mai. M. Charles Munch et M. Pierre Monteux tiendront tour à tour la baguette.

LE MONDE - PARIS

20 JAN 1952

Une réception a été donnée récemment au centre du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture en l'honneur de M. Judd, administrateur du Boston Symphonic Orchestra. M. Judd a annoncé la venue de ce célèbre orchestre à Paris, en mai. Un concert, dirigé par Charles Münch, aura lieu à l'Opéra, et un autre au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous la direction de Pierre Monteux.

MM. Arthur Honegger, Henri Barraut et Darius Milhaud assistaient à cette réception.

Le Parisien

LA MUSIQUE

ORPHÉE, de Gluck, à l'Empire

Il y a un an, presque jour pour jour, Maria Férès offrait une série de représentations consacrées à l'Orphée de Gluck au théâtre des Champs-Elysées. Nous avons souligné à ce moment-là toute la valeur de son effort. Encouragée par le succès, elle donne de nouveau pendant une semaine le même spectacle, mais à l'Empire. L'Orchestre national, dirigé par Inghelbrecht, a remplacé l'ensemble Lamoureux conduit par Henri Tomasi. La distribution a été modifiée aussi.

Maria Férès n'est pas une cantatrice ordinaire. Très cultivée, avant de se consacrer à l'art, elle a été institutrice à Châteauroux et apportait à l'enseignement la même passion qu'à la scène. Sa culture étendue, la flamme qui l'anime lui permettent de tenir le rôle du héros avec ardeur. Elle a le sens du drame et ses jeux de physionomie contribuent à créer la tragique ambiance recherchée. A force de tendre vers la simplicité, elle procède par symboles, et c'est une erreur. Un simple voile blanc posé à terre figure un sépulcre : « Et couvres son tombeau de fleurs », chante Orphée ; or aucun bouquet n'apparaît sur la scène. Danièle Vrillet, charmante et gracieuse jeune fille, a fait ses débuts dans le rôle de l'Amour avec une émotion bien compréhensible et a eu le mérite de savoir se dominer, affermir sa voix. Nadine Sautereau incarnait à merveille Eurydice. Si l'acte à la porte des Enfers était violent à souhait, celui des Champs-Elysées, par contre, manquait de souriante sérénité. Les visages restaient trop graves. Ce ne sont là que critiques de détail. Maria Férès a le mérite de jouer, de chanter, de représenter l'harmonieux chef-d'œuvre de Gluck avec infiniment de talent. La mise en scène chorégraphique est de Nicolas Zvereff, la chorale Elisabeth Brasseur prête son concours à ce spectacle.

20 FRANÇAIS dans le Boston Symphony Orchestra qui sera à Paris en mai

M. JUDD, directeur du « Boston Symphony Orchestra », est venu passer une semaine à Paris afin de « contacter » les autorités artistiques françaises, notamment M. Joxe, à propos de l'organisation des concerts que donnera son brillant ensemble à Paris, au mois de mai, dans le cadre du congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Affable, souriant, cet aimable Américain affirme qu'il préfère notre capitale en hiver qu'en été. Devant mon étonnement, il souligna :

— Mais oui, bien sûr, au mois de janvier on peut se promener sans rencontrer un compatriote à chaque coin de rue, tandis qu'au mois d'août...

C'est décidé, la séance inaugurale aura lieu à l'Opéra sous la direction de Charles Münch. Pierre Monteux, qui a conduit le Sacre du printemps, il y a 39 ans, lors de sa création au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, l'animera de nouveau.

Au cours d'un cocktail, Honegger, Milhaud et Judd ont levé leur verre à la prospérité du Boston Symphony Orchestra jadis dirigé par Henri Rabaud, et dont font partie une vingtaine de virtuoses français.

"LE CONSUL" de Gian-Carlo Menotti

LE dramatique « Consul » de Gian-Carlo Menotti laisse une empreinte dans l'esprit et le cœur de ceux qui l'entendent. Il revient à Paris pour une série de 20 représentations, dont dix-sept en langue française qui seront données à partir du 22 février au théâtre des Champs-Elysées.

Comment expliquer la ruée actuelle du public aux guichets pour s'assurer des places aux trois seuls spectacles prévus en anglais, alors qu'il lui sera tellement plus facile de comprendre toutes les finesses de l'œuvre dans sa nouvelle traduction ? Aurait-il le souci de la difficulté à vaincre ? Ou serait-ce le jeu parfait des interprètes Marie Powers, Patricia Neway et de leur entourage qui suffit à l'enchanter ?

A moins que le procès de l'administration contemporaine apparaisse suffisamment transparent pour n'avoir pas besoin du secours de la parole, alors tout à fait secondaire. Nous penchons d'ailleurs en faveur de cette troisième hypothèse...

W.-L. L.

DAILY MAIL, PARIS

21 JAN 1952

SNAPSHOTS : A French newspaper reports that in Paris 112 women, averaging about 40 years of age, have their husbands followed by private detectives every day . . . Ballet star Nina Vyroubova refused to appear at a local festival after complaining that her name was not given sufficient prominence on posters announcing the performance. The audience applauded 18-year-old Violette Verdy, star of the film, "Ballerina," who did appear . . . A Paris hairdresser has wired his hair dryers with radio, so that women can listen while they wait for their permanent waves to set . . . Twenty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play here in May for the festival of the arts sponsored by the Congress for Cultural Freedom, are of French descent, and the four most recent conductors, since 1918, have all gone to Boston from France . . . Four great grandchildren and four great great grandchildren will attend celebrations here next month of the 150th anniversary of the birth of Victor Hugo . . . Beginning on January 24 and for 18 days, about 150 famous singers including Edith Piaf, Yves Montand, Tino Rossi, Jean Sablon and Les Compagnons de la Chanson will become street singers in the leading thoroughfares of Paris.

[261]

Le Nouveau Rhin Français - Colmar

23 JAN 1952

La vie musicale

La musique française et l'orchestre symphonique de Boston

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston donnera son premier concert parisien le 6 Mai à l'Opéra sous la direction de Charles Munch et dans le cadre de « L'Oeuvre du Vingtième Siècle », vaste exposition internationale des arts qui doit se dérouler tout au long du mois de Mai dans notre capitale sous l'égide du Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture.

Cette formation qui ne comprend pas moins de cent quatre musiciens s'embarquera à destination de la France le 27 Avril à bord de l'Ile de France (pour se plier aux dates de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, la French Line n'a pas hésité à modifier les siennes).

Le second concert de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston est prévu pour le 8 Mai. Il aura lieu au Théâtre des Champs Elysées et sera dirigé par Pierre Monteux qui, trente neuf ans auparavant, jour pour jour, dirigeait dans ce même théâtre la première représentation du « Sacre du Printemps » de Strawinsky pour les Ballets Russes de Diaghilew.

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston donnera son troisième concert le 21 Mai, au Palais de Chaillot.

L'un de ces concerts sera consacré aux oeuvres de musiciens français contemporains. Parmi les autres projets de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, citons notamment la Cinquième Symphonie de Honegger, une ouverture d'un compositeur américain, Samuel Barber, et diverses oeuvres de Ravel et de Debussy.

Après avoir joué dans le cadre de « L'Oeuvre du XXème Siècle », l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston ira à Strasbourg, ville natale de Charles Munch, en Hollande, Belgique, Angleterre et en Allemagne où il jouera pour les troupes d'occupation américaines.

La musique française contemporaine a toujours été en faveur auprès des divers chefs d'orchestre qui se succédèrent au pupitre de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston. Il n'y a rien d'étonnant à cela, trois de ces chefs d'orchestre étaient eux-mêmes français : Charles Munch qui en est l'actuel directeur artistique, Pierre Monteux qui le resta de 1919 à 1924 et avant lui Henri Rabaud. Quant à Serge Koussevitzky qui dirigea la célèbre formation américaine de 1923 jusqu'à l'arrivée de Munch en 1949, il avait acquis la nationalité française et demeura toute sa vie le champion le plus ardent de la cause de la musique française. Avant eux, Wilhelm Gericke, Max Fiedler et Karl Muck avaient beau venir d'Europe Centrale, la musique française les intéressait passionnément : ils surent le prouver.

C'est sous la direction de Charles Munch et à Boston que fut jouée pour la première fois la Cinquième Symphonique de Honegger. Ceci grâce à l'autorisation spéciale de Koussevitzky qui avait commandé cette oeuvre pour sa propre école de musique.

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston peut se vanter des créations du Quatrième Concerto pour piano de Darius Milhaud et du Concerto pour piano de Francis Poulenc. C'est encore sous la baguette de Munch que furent présentés au public américain la Sonate de Jaubert et le Concerto pour ondes Martenot d'André Jolivet. Ce chef d'orchestre révéla aussi aux Etats-Unis la Jeanne au Bucher de Honegger et le Requiem de Berlioz. La symphonie d'Olivier Messiaen, Turangalla, fut crée par l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston sous la direction de Léonard Bernstein, l'un des plus dynamiques musiciens et compositeurs d'Amérique.

Il est impossible de faire une liste précise de toutes les oeuvres françaises jouées par l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston pendant que Koussevitzky en tenait la tête.

En 1930, pour célébrer le cinquième anniversaire de cette illustre formation, Honegger composa à son intention sa Première Symphonie, Milhaud sa seconde, Roussel sa troisième et Strawinsky sa Symphonie pour Psaumes. Par la suite, Koussevitzky présenta les quatre premières symphonies de Honegger, toutes celles de Roussel et la plupart des oeuvres de ce dernier. C'est encore lui qui commanda à Ravel l'orchestration des Tableaux de l'Exposition de Moussorsky qu'il fit très fréquemment interpréter par son orchestre. C'est toujours lui qui présenta en Amérique la Fantaisie Contrapuntale de Lekeu, la suite Padmavati de Roussel, l'Elan de Borchard, l'Emphatie de Caplet, la Sinfonia de Roland Manuel. Et quand il fut invité à diriger l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston par Munch, Koussevitzky lui fit jouer pour la première fois aux Etats-Unis le Mystère des Saints Innocents de Barraud. Nadia Boulanger, elle aussi, fut invitée à présenter le Requiem de Fauré.

Pierre Monteux fut le premier à révéler aux Américains les Jeux, la Petite Suite et la Fantaisie pour piano de Debussy ; l'Horace Victorieux de Honegger, la Suite No de Milhaud, le Tombeau de Couperin de Ravel, Soir de Fête de Chausson, les Trois Chorales de Koechlin et le Désir [illegible] de Ropartz. C'est sous sa direction [illegible] l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston joua pour la première fois la Valse et les Valses Nobles et Sentimentales de Ravel, la Quête de Dieu de Vincent d'Indy, la Fantaisie Symphonique de Lekeu, la Sinfonia de d'Indy et la Peri de Dukas.

Henri Rabaud ne resta qu'une année à la tête de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston mais néanmoins il eut le temps de présenter la Première Suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé, la Musique de Plein Air de Schmitt, la Suite de Shylock, de Fauré et l'Hymne à la Justice de Magnard.

Karl Muck présenta la seconde suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé, Ma Mère l'Oye de Ravel, les Trois Images et la Mer de Debussy, la Symphonie de Dukas, la Symphonie No 4 de Ropartz, la Salomé de Schmitt, Wallenstein de d'Indy et la Symphonie et Suite Française de Roger Ducasse et Chausson.

Max Fiedler lui, révéla aux Américains la Pièce Symphonique extraite de la Rédemption de César Franck.

Wilhelm Gericke, au début du siècle, fit jouer par l'Orchestre de Boston pour la première fois les deux premières symphonies de Vincent d'Indy, la première symphonie de Saint-Saens, la Fantaisie de Ropartz, Viviane de Chausson et l'Apprenti Sorcier de Dukas.

Mentionnons enfin, qu'à cette époque, le célèbre joueur de houbois Georges Longy dirigeait une formation qui fut la première à jouer aux Etats-Unis l'Après-Midi d'un Faune de Debussy.

COMPAT
122, Rue Montmartre
21 FEV

★ SPECTACLE DU MONDE ★

La délégation de réorganisation du cinéma

L'arrêté portant nomination des membres de la Commission de Réorganisation créée auprès du Centre National de la Cinématographie (J. O. du 20 février) a nommé membres de la dite commission : MM. Léon Carré, François Chavane, J.-P. Frogerais, Paul Joly, Lucien Masson et O. Connel.

Le « Comité » à l'action

Sous la présidence de M. Roger Ferdinand, président de la Société des Auteurs dramatiques, le Comité national d'action pour la défense du cinéma français vient de se réunir. Après avoir examiné la situation, le comité a décidé de s'adresser directement au public parisien et l'invite le 26 février à la Salle Pleyel. Au cours de cette manifestation un grand film français sera présenté en première mondiale.

On prend les mêmes et...

Le mariage civil des artistes de cinéma Elizabeth Taylor et Michael Wilding sera célébré demain jeudi à Londres à la mairie de Caxton Hall, annonce un porte-parole de la Compagnie Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Les nouveaux mariés, croit-on savoir, passeront leur « lune de miel » — qui durera environ une semaine — en France et en Suisse.

« Ponce-Pilate » de Bernard-Ch. Miel sera créé à Strasbourg

Le Centre Dramatique de l'Est créera le 22 février, au Grand Théâtre de Strasbourg, la pièce de Bernard - Charles Miel : « Ponce-Pilate » ou « La Tragédie du Prétoire ».

Dans sa pièce, l'auteur a noué le drame entre trois personnages centraux : Pilate, la conscience humaine, Zarités, le Grec, précurseur du matérialisme moderne, et Jésus dans son univers spirituel.

Les trois actes se passent dans le prétoire de Pilate. Ils ont été réglés par le metteur en scène du Centre : Vanderic dans les décors de Michel Juncar.

Principaux comédiens : Paul Barrault, dans le rôle de Jésus, Pierre Tabbar (Pilate) et François Darbon (Zarités).

Le programme européen de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston

On sait déjà depuis quelque temps que le « Boston Symphonic Orchestra » doit venir à Paris ce printemps. Voici son proramme :

6 MAI : à l'Opéra, sous la direction de Charles Munch (« Cinquième Symphonie » d'Arthur Honegger, « Daphnis et Chloé » de Maurice Ravel, ouverture de « L'Ecole du Scandale » de Samuel Barber, « Suite d'Amphion » d'Arthur Honegger, « Toccata » de Walter Piston, « La Mer » de Debussy).

8 MAI : au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous la direction de Pierre Monteux (« Fantasia » de Tallis, Seconde Suite de « Protée » de Darius Milhaud, « Troisième Symphonie » de William Schuman, « Rondes de Printemps » de Debussy, « Le Sacre du Printemps » de Stravinsky).

10 MAI : concert à La Haye.

11 MAI : concert à Amsterdam.

12 MAI : concert à Bruxelles.

17 MAI : concert à Strasbourg (ville natale de Charles Munch).

26 MAI : concert à Londres.

D'autres concerts sont également prévus en Italie et en Allemagne.

FRANCE-SOIR, PARIS

24 JAN 1952

L'oreille en souffleur

● Le Boston Symphony Orchestra, qui se fera entendre à Paris, en mai, a eu, comme derniers chefs d'orchestre : Henri Rabaud (1918-19), Pierre Monteux (1919-24), Serge Koussevitzky (1924-49) et, actuellement, Charles Munchs. Il compte vingt musiciens d'origine française qui, à cette occasion reviendront dans la capitale, qu'ils n'on pas vue depuis bien longtemps. ●

FRANCE-SOIR, PARIS

24 JAN 1952

L'oreille en souffleur

● Le Boston Symphony Orchestra, qui se fera entendre à Paris, en mai, a eu, comme derniers chefs d'orchestre : Henri Rabaud (1918-19), Pierre Monteux (1919-24), Serge Koussevitzky (1924-49) et, actuellement, Charles Munchs. Il compte vingt musiciens d'origine française qui, à cette occasion, reviendront dans la capitale, qu'ils n'on pas vue depuis bien longtemps. ●

ARGUS de la PRESSE
37, Rue Bergère, PARIS (9e)

N° de débit .....
LE POINT DES ARTS
... Montmartier - XIe

25 JANVIER 1952

DE PAR LE MONDE...

En mai à Paris, se fera entendre l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, Pierre Monteux et Ch. Munch le dirigeant. Strawinsky donnera en même temps trois concerts...

...ys International de la Presse S.A.
32, Rue du 31 Décembre -- GENÈVE

...trait du Journal : Arts
...resse : Paris
...te : 25. Jan. 1952

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 . TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Le Républ. du Ht-Rhin - Mulhouse

26 JAN 1952

Le célèbre orchestre symphonique de Boston

viendra en France au printemps prochain

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston donnera son premier concert parisien le 6 mai à l'Opéra sous la direction de Charles Munch et dans le cadre de «L'Oeuvre du vingtième siècle», vaste exposition internationale des arts qui doit se dérouler tout au long du mois de mai dans notre capitale, sous l'égide du congrès pour la liberté de la culture.

Cette formation qui ne comprend pas moins de cent quatre musiciens s'embarquera à destination de la France le 27 avril à bord de l'Ile-de-France (pour se plier aux dates de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, la French Line n'a pas hésité à modifier les siennes).

Le second concert de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston est prévu pour le 8 mai. Il aura lieu à Paris au Théâtre des Champs Elysées et sera dirigé par Pierre Monteux qui, trente-neuf ans auparavant, jour pour jour, dirigeait dans ce même théâtre la première représentation du «Sacre du Printemps» de Strawinsky pour les ballets russes de Diaghilew.

L'orchestre symphonique de Boston donnera son troisième concert le 21 mai, au Palais de Chaillot.

Après avoir joué dans le cadre de «L'œuvre du 20ème siècle» l'orchestre symphonique de Boston ira à Strasbourg, ville natale de Charles Munch, en Hollande, Belgique, Angleterre et en Allemagne.

La musique française contemporaine a toujours été en faveur auprès des divers chefs d'orchestre qui se succédèrent au pupitre de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston. Il n'y a rien d'étonnant à cela, trois de ces chefs d'orchestre étaient eux mêmes français: Charles Munch qui en est l'actuel directeur artistique, Pierre Monteux qui le resta de 1919 à 1924 et avant lui Henri Rabaud. Quant à Serge Koussevitzky qui dirigea la célèbre formation américaine de 1924 jusqu'à l'arrivée de Munch en 1949, il avait acquis la nationalité française et demeura toute sa vie le champion le plus ardent de la cause de la musique française.

C'est sous la direction de Charles Munch et à Boston que fut jouée pour la première fois la Cinquième Symphonie de Honegger. Ceci grâce à l'autorisation spéciale de Koussevitsky qui avait commandé cette œuvre pour sa propre école de musique.

L'orchestre symphonique de Boston peut se vanter de plusieurs importantes créations, dont le Quatrième Concerto pour piano de Darius Milhaud, et le Concerto pour piano de Francis Poulenc, la Sonate de Jaubert, le Concerto pour cordes Martenot d'André Jolivet, «Jeanne au Bûcher» de Honegger, le Requiem de Berlioz, la symphonie d'Olivier Messiaen etc.

Il est impossible de faire une liste précise de toutes les œuvres françaises jouées par l'orchestre symphonique de Boston sous la direction de Koussevitsky, de Pierre Monteux, de Henri Rabaud et de Ch. Munch.

Nous reviendrons ultérieurement sur les différentes manifestations de cette célèbre association symphonique.

Les plus grands artistes et intellectuels de l'Occident vont se réunir à Paris en mai

POUR UNE NOUVELLE MANIÈRE D'ÊTRE

Le Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture qui se tiendra à Paris en mai et sur lequel nous apportons de nombreuses révélations sera un événement de première importance. Nous avons demandé à M. Roger Caillois, qui organisera les manifestations littéraires prévues à l'occasion de ce Congrès, de nous dire comment était philosophiquement située l'œuvre de rassemblement des intellectuels qui sera ainsi tentée à Paris.

par Roger Caillois

Au cœur même des pays où l'on dirait la civilisation le plus solidement implantée et où elle a fini par paraître aussi naturelle que la nature, le décor si familier par où se révèlent les conditions de vie qu'elle permet, pour ceci qui semble inévitable et cependant est né dans l'espace d'une vie humaine et pourrait ne naître jamais. On songe aux paysans qui ont vu arriver dans leur village le premier train, puis la première auto, qui ont enfin aperçu dans le ciel le premier avion. Ils se souviennent aussi du jour où ils ont mangé leur premier morceau de sucre, leur première tablette de chocolat, leur première banane, leur premier orange. Ils ont vu le pétrole remplacer la houille, le pétrole remplacer le gaz d'éclairage, le gaz d'éclairage, et l'électricité le gaz d'éclairage. Ils ont vu l'automobile remplacer la charrette et la machine pour la presse faire le travail de l'homme et pas que le travail de l'homme une en ait généralisé une meilleure

Les pièges de la connaissance

De même le premier musée, la première école publique, le premier bureau de poste, le premier journal ne sont pas des faits, ces transformations modifient pas seulement la vie matérielle. Elles signifient un élargissement inconcevable du monde de l'individu.

Elles signifient que le premier enfant venu est aujourd'hui mieux renseigné qu'Archimède sur les lois de la physique, qu'il en sait plus que Newton sur le mouvement des astres, et sur la structure de l'atome, plus que Lavoisier qui ne les soupçonnait même pas. Elle signifient qu'un amateur ou qu'un étudiant, en feuilletant quelques albums, connait une multitude de trésors d'art dont Rembrandt et Michel-Ange ignorèrent jusqu'à l'existence. Elles ne signifient pas que le premier enfant venu soit plus artiste que Raphaël ou Rembrandt, plus inventif que Lavoisier, Képler ou Archimède. Elles signifient que les hommes sont solidaires et que le monde est un. Elles ne garantissent même pas que cette unité nouvelle, précieuse, féconde, irremplaçable, ne soit pas emplie de pièges. Peut-être faut-il payer de quelque manière le privilège de pouvoir tout connaître d'un seul coup...

Il y a cent ans, il était rare et presque impossible qu'un homme ordinaire fût renseigné sur les événements qui avaient lieu loin de son pays, de sa province, de son village. Chacun vivait enfermé dans un canton minuscule qui contenait son univers ; rien, ou presque, ne lui venait d'ailleurs, et, l'eût-il désiré, qu'il n'avait guère le moyen de s'intéresser en quelque manière à ce qui survenait au-delà des limites étroites de son horizon. Au reste, cela lui importait peu.

Aujourd'hui, le même homme n'a plus qu'à parcourir un journal, qu'à tourner le bouton de la radio pour savoir ce qui s'est passé la veille dans le monde entier. Le voudrait-il ? Cette fois, c'est s'en désintéresser ou en demeurer indépendant qui serait impossible. Que les Hindous décident de tisser leurs vêtements et on ferme des usines à Manchester. Et quand la mode fait que les femmes de Paris se coupent les cheveux, celles de Tokio doivent cesser de faire des peignes.

La culture, les échanges, la guerre même rendent continue, effective, totale interdépendance de tous les hommes. Une épidémie sévit au Caire, des avions apportent en hâte des médicaments de Chicago. Une façon de peindre inventée à Montparnasse par un groupe de bohèmes disparates féconde la peinture mexicaine. Un manifeste écrit à Londres par un théoricien allemand change le sort de la Russie et soulève les coolies à Shanghaï. Un appareil qu'un enfant porte sans effort suffit à mettre un homme, où qu'il soit, en contact avec le reste de l'univers. De fait, tout voyage et se colporte si bien que l'univers entier, aboutissant en effet à chaque homme, le nourrit, l'habille et l'instruit. Celui-ci mange du blé du Canada, de la viande d'Argentine et des fruits de Californie, il se vêt avec de la laine australienne ou du coton égyptien. Dans sa bibliothèque, Confucius est rangé à côté de Montaigne et Shakespeare à côté de Kalidasa. Cependant, grâce au cinéma, jusqu'aux émotions s'universalisent :

L'homme et l'œuvre du XXe siècle

« A cette heure, écrit Malraux, une femme hindoue qui regarde Anna Karénine, pleure peut-être en voyant exprimée par une actrice suédoise et un metteur en scène américain, l'idée que le Russe Tolstoï se faisait de l'amour. »

Il s'agit maintenant de savoir si l'homme moderne acceptera un pareil héritage ou s'il le récusera en s'enfermant dans une tradition particulière. Il s'agit ensuite de savoir s'il en sera accablé ou s'il réussira à lui imposer un style. Le but du Congrès pour la liberté de la Culture sera de dégager les lignes de force de l'œuvre du XXe siècle.

JACQUES MARITAIN, Bertrand Russell, Benedeto Croce, John Devey et Salvador de Madariaga sont les présidents d'honneur du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture qui tiendra ses assises à Paris, en mai. Le théâtre des Champs-Elysées sera le centre des manifestations, qu'organise dès à présent Nicolas Nabokov, secrétaire général du congrès.

Le programme mis au point a pour but de répondre par des preuves irréfutables à la propagande mensongère de ceux qui cherchent à saper la culture occidentale, qui la jouent perdante ; il s'agit de glorifier une manière d'être et de s'exprimer que la liberté autorise et sans laquelle le monde deviendrait finalement une caserne. Il s'agit aussi de démontrer que la culture occidentale a produit des œuvres magnifiques tout au long de ce dernier demi-siècle et qu'elle continue à se bien porter. Que ce soit dans le domaine de la musique pure ou dans ceux de l'Opéra, du ballet, du théâtre et de la peinture, de la littérature et de la philosophie. Toutes les manifestations qui seront offertes au public seront d'un intérêt majeur et parfaitement démonstratif.

Les dix meilleurs compositeurs

Le programme musical prévoit la participation d'Igor Stravinsky, qui dirigera lui-même quelques-unes de ses compositions les plus récentes. L'Orchestre philharmonique de Boston, venu spécialement à Paris pour la circonstance, donnera plusieurs concerts. L'un des six spectacles, que le New-York City Ballet montera sous la direction de Georges Balanchine, sera consacré aux ballets dont Stravinsky a écrit la musique.

L'Opéra de Vienne interprétera Wozzeck, d'Alban Berg, l'orchestre philharmonique de Vienne, l'orchestre anglais de Halle, les chœurs et l'orchestre de l'Académie Sainte-Cécile de Rome, les chœurs St-Guillaume de Strasbourg et ceux de Sheffield, la R.I.A.S. (radio du secteur américain de Berlin), l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande de Genève, l'Orchestre du Conservatoire et l'Orchestre national de Paris se feront successivement entendre au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous la direction de Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Bruno Walter, Sir John Barbirolli, Igor Markewitch, Ferencz Fricsay, Ernest Ansermet, Fritz Munch, Carl Boehm.

De plus, une troupe notre donnera une représentation de l'opéra de Virgile Thompson et Gertrude Stein : Quatre Saints en trois actes, qui obtint un grand succès à New-York en 1934.

Création de trois opéras

La troupe du Covent Garden de Londres et l'orchestre dirigé par Benjamin Britten, donneront une représentation les 25 et 26 mai.

Nicolas Naboukoff compte également monter trois petits opéras, l'un de Pucchini, Jeanny Schischi, Dom Pirlipiplim, de Lorca, et le nouvel opéra de Menotti qui a été mis en scène cette année à la télévision américaine. D'autre part, deux ballets ont été commandés à Auric et Sauget ; Cassandre fera les décors de celui d'Auric, et Jacques Dupont illustrera celui de Sauget ; Balenchine réglera la chorégraphie. Ces représentations seront dédiées à la mémoire de Diaghilew.

Dans l'esprit des organisateurs la création des trois opéras de Pucchini, Lorca et Menotti doit avoir un écho en province même, car ils envisagent, après le congrès, d'effectuer une tournée dans les grandes villes françaises. Autre innovation intéressante, on fera appel à des élèves des Conservatoires de Paris, Madrid, Londres et Vienne pour interpréter les rôles, réalisant ainsi une véritable unité internationale.

Dans le même temps, l'Opéra de Paris, sur l'initiative de M. Lehmann, reprendra des œuvres contemporaines comme Péléas, l'Enfant et les sortilèges, Ariane et Barbe-Bleue, Antigone d'Honnegger, Sa'omé de Strauss. L'importance du congrès s'en trouvera accrue d'autant.

Douze débats et conférences

Pour la littérature et la philosophie, douze débats-conférences sont prévus. Ces manifestations se situeront sur deux plans : des discussions « Table ronde » réunissant les meilleurs esprits de ce temps, et une série d'exposés publics. Le principe est d'effectuer l'inventaire des valeurs intellectuelles contemporaines, en réalisant un véritable examen de conscience. T. S. Eliot, Karl Jaspers, Rosamond Lehmann, Martin Heidegger, Aldous Huxley, Graham Greene, John dos Passos, Blaise Cendrars, Jean Cassou, Albert Camus, Raymond Aron, François Mauriac, Jean-Paul Sartre, Ignazio Silone, Arnold Toynbee, Richard Wright figurent parmi les personnalités qui ont été invitées dans le cadre des conférences et entretiens littéraires.

[262]

FRANCE-SOIR, PARIS

24 JAN 1952

L'oreille en souffleur

● Le Boston Symphony Orchestra, qui se fera entendre à Paris, en mai, a eu, comme derniers chefs d'orchestre : Henri Rabaud (1918-19), Pierre Monteux (1919-24), Serge Koussevitzky (1924-49) et, actuellement, Charles Munchs. Il compte vingt musiciens d'origine française qui, à cette occasion, reviendront dans la capitale, qu'ils n'on pas vue depuis bien longtemps. ●

FRANCE-SOIR, PARIS

24 JAN 1952

L'oreille en souffleur

● Le Boston Symphony Orchestra, qui se fera entendre à Paris, en mai, a eu, comme derniers chefs d'orchestre : Henri Rabaud (1918-19), Pierre Monteux (1919-24), Serge Koussevitzky (1924-49) et, actuellement, Charles Munchs. Il compte vingt musiciens d'origine française qui, à cette occasion, reviendront dans la capitale, qu'ils n'on pas vue depuis bien longtemps. ●

ARGUS de la PRESSE
37, Rue Bergère, PARIS (9e)

N° de débit

LE PONT DES ARTS
82, Avenue Parmentier -- XIe

25 JANVIER 1952

DE PAR LE MONDE.

— En mai à Paris, se fera entendre l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, Pierre Monteux et Ch. Munch le dirigeant. Strawinsky donnera en même temps trois concerts.

...ue International de la Presse S. A.
...2, Rue du 31 Décembre -- GENÈVE

...rait du Journal : Arts
...esse : Paris
... : 25. Jan. 1952

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89
Le Républ. du Ht-Rhin - Mulhouse

26 JAN 1952

Le célèbre orchestre symphonique de Boston

viendra en France au printemps prochain

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston donnera son premier concert parisien le 6 mai à l'Opéra sous la direction de Charles Munch et dans le cadre de «L'Oeuvre du vingtième siècle», vaste exposition internationale des arts qui doit se dérouler tout au long du mois de mai dans notre capitale, sous l'égide du congrès pour la liberté de la culture.

Cette formation qui ne comprend pas moins de cent quatre musiciens s'embarquera à destination de la France le 27 avril à bord de l'Ile-de-France (pour se plier aux dates de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, la French Line n'a pas hésité à modifier les siennes).

Le second concert de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston est prévu pour le 8 mai. Il aura lieu à Paris au Théâtre des Champs Elysées et sera dirigé par Pierre Monteux qui, trente-neuf ans auparavant, jour pour jour, dirigeait dans ce même théâtre la première représentation du «Sacre du Printemps» de Strawinsky pour les ballets russes de Diaghilew.

L'orchestre symphonique de Boston donnera son troisième concert le 21 mai, au Palais de Chaillot.

Après avoir joué dans le cadre de «L'œuvre du 20ème siècle» l'orchestre symphonique de Boston ira à Strasbourg, ville natale de Charles Munch, en Hollande, Belgique, Angleterre et en Allemagne.

La musique française contemporaine a toujours été en faveur auprès des divers chefs d'orchestre qui se succédèrent au pupitre de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston. Il n'y a rien d'étonnant à cela, trois de ces chefs d'orchestre étaient eux-mêmes français: Charles Munch qui en est l'actuel directeur artistique, Pierre Monteux qui le resta de 1919 à 1924 et avant lui Henri Rabaud. Quant à Serge Koussevitzky qui dirigea la célèbre formation américaine de 1924 jusqu'à l'arrivée de Munch en 1949, il avait acquis la nationalité française et demeura toute sa vie le champion le plus ardent de la cause de la musique française.

C'est sous la direction de Charles Munch et à Boston que fut jouée pour la première fois la Cinquième Symphonie de Honegger. Ceci grâce à l'autorisation spéciale de Koussevitsky qui avait commandé cette œuvre pour sa propre école de musique.

L'orchestre symphonique de Boston peut se vanter de plusieurs importantes créations, dont le Quatrième Concerto pour piano de Darius Milhaud, et le Concerto pour piano de Francis Poulenc, la Sonate de Jaubert, le Concerto pour cordes Martenot d'André Jolivet, «Jeanne au Bûcher» de Honegger, le Requiem de Berlioz, la symphonie d'Olivier Messiaen etc.

Il est impossible de faire une liste précise de toutes les œuvres françaises jouées par l'orchestre symphonique de Boston sous la direction de Koussevitsky, de Pierre Monteux, de Henri Rabaud et de Ch. Munch.

Nous reviendrons ultérieurement sur les différentes manifestations de cette célèbre association symphonique.

Les plus grands artistes et intellectuels de l'Occident vont se réunir à Paris en mai

POUR UNE NOUVELLE MANIÈRE D'ÊTRE

Le Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture qui se tiendra à Paris en mai et sur lequel nous apportons de nombreuses révélations sera un événement de première importance. Nous avons demandé à M. Roger Caillois, qui organisera les manifestations littéraires prévues à l'occasion de ce Congrès, de nous dire comment était philosophiquement située l'œuvre de rassemblement des intellectuels qui sera ainsi tentée à Paris.

par Roger Caillois

Au cœur même des pays où l'on dirait la civilisation le plus solidement implantée et où elle a fini par paraître aussi naturelle que la nature, le décor si familier par où se révèlent les conditions de vie qu'elle permet, tout cela qui semble inévitable et éternel est né dans l'espace d'une vie humaine et pouvait ne naître jamais. On signale des paysans qui ont vu arriver dans leur village le premier train, puis la première auto, qui ont enfin aperçu dans leur ciel le premier avion. Ils se souviennent aussi du jour où ils ont mangé leur premier morceau de sucre, leur première tablette de chocolat, leur première banane, leur première orange. Ils ont vu la bougie remplacer la lampe à l'huile, le pétrole remplacer la bougie, le gaz d'éclairage le pétrole, et l'électricité le gaz d'éclairage. Ils ont vu le tracteur remplacer la charrue et la machine pour la première fois, faire le travail de l'animal et celui de l'homme. Il ne s'ensuit pas que le travail de l'homme en ait généralement reçu une meilleure destination.

Les pièges de la connaissance

De même, le premier musée, la première école publique, le premier bureau de poste, le premier journal ne sont pas anciens. Or, ces transformations ne modifient pas seulement la vie matérielle. Elles signifient un élargissement naguère inconcevable du monde de l'individu.

Elles signifient que le premier enfant venu est aujourd'hui mieux renseigné qu'Archimède sur les lois de la physique, qu'il en sait plus que Newton sur le mouvement des astres, et sur la structure de l'atome, plus que Lavoisier qui ne les soupçonnait même pas. Elle signifient qu'un amateur ou qu'un étudiant, en feuilletant quelques albums, connaît une multitude de trésors d'art dont Rembrandt et Michel-Ange ignorèrent jusqu'à l'existence. Elles ne signifient pas que le premier enfant venu soit plus artiste que Raphaël ou Rembrandt, plus inventif que Lavoisier, Képler ou Archimède. Elles signifient que les hommes sont solidaires et que le monde est un. Elles ne garantissent même pas que cette unité nouvelle, précieuse, féconde, irremplaçable, ne soit pas emplie de pièges. Peut-être faut-il payer de quelque manière le privilège de pouvoir tout connaître d'un seul coup...

Il y a cent ans, il était rare et presque impossible qu'un homme ordinaire fût renseigné sur les événements qui avaient lieu loin de son pays, de sa province, de son village. Chacun vivait enfermé dans un canton minuscule qui contenait son univers ; rien, ou presque, ne lui venait d'ailleurs, et, l'eût-il désiré, qu'il n'avait guère le moyen de s'intéresser en quelque manière à ce qui survenait au-delà des limites étroites de son horizon. Au reste, cela lui importait peu.

Aujourd'hui, le même homme n'a plus qu'à parcourir un journal, qu'à tourner le bouton de la radio pour savoir ce qui s'est passé la veille dans le monde entier. Le voudrait-il ? Cette fois, c'est s'en désintéresser ou en demeurer indépendant qui serait impossible. Que les Hindous décident de tisser leurs vêtements et on ferme des usines à Manchester. Et quand la mode fait que les femmes de Paris se coupent les cheveux, celles de Tokio doivent cesser de faire des peignes.

La culture, les échanges, la guerre même rendent continue, effective, totale interdépendance de tous les hommes. Une épidémie sévit au Caire, des avions apportent en hâte des médicaments de Chicago. Une façon de peindre inventée à Montparnasse par un groupe de bohèmes disparates féconde la peinture mexicaine. Un manifeste écrit à Londres par un théoricien allemand change le sort de la Russie et soulève les coolies à Shanghaï. Un appareil qu'un enfant porte sans effort suffit à mettre un homme, où qu'il soit, en contact avec le reste de l'univers. De fait, tout voyage et se colporte si bien que l'univers entier, aboutissant en effet à chaque homme, le nourrit, l'habille et l'instruit. Celui-ci mange du blé du Canada, de la viande d'Argentine et des fruits de Californie, il se vêt avec de la laine australienne ou du coton égyptien. Dans sa bibliothèque, Confucius est rangé à côté de Montaigne et Shakespeare à côté de Kalidasa. Cependant, grâce au cinéma, jusqu'aux émotions s'universalisent :

L'homme et l'œuvre du XXe siècle

« A cette heure, écrit Malraux, une femme hindoue qui regarde Anna Karénine, pleure peut-être en voyant exprimée par une actrice suédoise et un metteur en scène américain, l'idée que le Russe Tolstoï se faisait de l'amour. »

Il s'agit maintenant de savoir si l'homme moderne acceptera un pareil héritage ou s'il le récusera en s'enfermant dans une tradition particulière. Il s'agit ensuite de savoir s'il en sera accablé ou s'il réussira à lui imposer un style. Le but du Congrès pour la liberté de la Culture sera de dégager les lignes de force de l'œuvre du XXe siècle.

JACQUES MARITAIN, Bertrand Russell, Benedeto Croce, John Dewey et Salvador de Madariaga, sont les présidents d'honneur du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture qui tiendra ses assises à Paris, en mai. Le théâtre des Champs-Elysées sera le centre des manifestations, qu'organise dès à présent Nicolas Nabokov, secrétaire général du congrès.

Le programme mis au point a pour but de répondre par des preuves irréfutables à la propagande mensongère de ceux qui cherchent à saper la culture occidentale, qui la jouent perdante ; il s'agit de glorifier une manière d'être et de s'exprimer que la liberté autorise et sans laquelle le monde deviendrait finalement une caserne. Il s'agit aussi de démontrer que la culture occidentale a produit des œuvres magnifiques tout au long de ce dernier demi-siècle et qu'elle continue à se bien porter. Que ce soit dans le domaine de la musique pure ou dans ceux de l'Opéra, du ballet, du théâtre et de la peinture, de la littérature et de la philosophie. Toutes les manifestations qui seront offertes au public seront d'un intérêt majeur et parfaitement démonstratif.

Les dix meilleurs compositeurs

Le programme musical prévoit la participation d'Igor Stravinsky, qui dirigera lui-même quelques-unes de ses compositions les plus récentes. L'Orchestre philharmonique de Boston, venu spécialement à Paris pour la circonstance, donnera plusieurs concerts. L'un des six spectacles, que le New-York City Ballet montera sous la direction de Georges Balanchine, sera consacré aux ballets dont Stravinsky a écrit la musique.

L'Opéra de Vienne interprétera Wozzeck, d'Alban Berg, l'orchestre philharmonique de Vienne, l'orchestre anglais de Halle, les chœurs et l'orchestre de l'Académie Sainte-Cécile de Rome, les chœurs St-Guillaume de Strasbourg et ceux de Sheffield, la R.I.A.S. (radio du secteur américain de Berlin), l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande de Genève, l'Orchestre du Conservatoire et l'Orchestre national de Paris se feront successivement entendre au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous la direction de Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Bruno Walter, Sir John Barbirolli, Igor Markewitch, Ferencz Fricsay, Ernest Ansermet, Fritz Munch, Carl Boehm.

De plus, une troupe opéra donnera une représentation de l'opéra de Virgile Thompson et Gertrude Stein : Quatre Saints en trois actes, qui obtint un grand succès à New-York en 1934.

Création de trois opéras

La troupe du Covent Garden de Londres et l'orchestre dirigé par Benjamin Britten, donneront une représentation les 25 et 26 mai.

Nicolas Naboukoff compte également monter trois petits opéras, l'un de Pucchini, Jeanny Schischi, Dom Pirlipiplim, de Lorca, et le nouvel opéra de Menotti qui a été mis en scène cette année à la télévision américaine. D'autre part, deux ballets ont été commandés à Auric et Sauget ; Cassandre fera les décors de celui d'Auric, et Jacques Dupont illustrera celui de Sauget ; Balenchine réglera la chorégraphie. Ces représentations seront dédiées à la mémoire de Diaghilew.

Dans l'esprit des organisateurs la création des trois opéras de Pucchini, Lorca et Menotti doit avoir un écho en province même, car ils envisagent, après le congrès, d'effectuer une tournée dans les grandes villes françaises. Autre innovation intéressante, on fera appel à des élèves des Conservatoires de Paris, Madrid, Londres et Vienne pour interpréter les rôles, réalisant ainsi une véritable unité internationale.

Dans le même temps, l'Opéra de Paris, sur l'initiative de M. Lehmann, reprendra des œuvres contemporaines comme Péléas, l'Enfant et les sortilèges, Ariane et Barbe-Bleue. Antigone d'Honnegger, Salomé de Strauss. L'importance du congrès s'en trouvera accrue d'autant.

Douze débats et conférences

Pour la littérature et la philosophie, douze débats-conférences sont prévus. Ces manifestations se situeront sur deux plans : des discussions « Table ronde » réunissant les meilleurs esprits de ce temps, et une série d'exposés publics. Le principe est d'effectuer l'inventaire des valeurs intellectuelles contemporaines, en réalisant un véritable examen de conscience. T. S. Eliot, Karl Jaspers, Rosamond Lehmann, Martin Heidegger, Aldous Huxley, Graham Greene, John dos Passos, Blaise Cendrars, Jean Cassou, Albert Camus, Raymond Aron, François Mauriac, Jean-Paul Sartre, Ignazio Silone, Arnold Toynbee, Richard Wright figurent parmi les personnalités qui ont été invitées dans le cadre des conférences et entretiens littéraires.

[262]

ARGUS de la PRESSE
37, Rue Bergère, PARIS (9e)

N° de débit

Le plus célèbre orchestre américain pour la première fois à Paris

Grand, la chevelure aluminée surplombant en rotonde un visage de grand enfant, M. George E. Judd, administrateur du célèbre « Boston Symphony Orchestra », venu à Paris pour organiser la participation de son orchestre aux manifestations de l' « Œuvre du XXe siècle », qui se dérouleront tout au long du mois de mai, sous les auspices du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture », recevait, hier soir, dans un cadre intime, le Tout-Paris amis des arts. M. George Judd ne pratique guère plus notre langue que votre serviteur ne risquerait sa réputation sur la langue anglaise ; aussi faisions-nous assaut de courtoisie, par le truchement délicat d'une charmante personne du sexe.

Le « Boston Symphony Orchestra », dont il assume matériellement la direction, formation prestigieuse, considérée comme l'une des quatre meilleures du monde, va donc, pour la première fois depuis sa fondation, il y a quelque 71 ans, aborder l'Europe. Le 6 mai, à l'Opéra, sous la direction de Charles Münch, le 8, au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous celle de Pierre Monteux, qui fêtera ce jour-là le 30e anniversaire de la création du Sacre du Printemps, de Strawinsky, aux Ballets russes, en ce même théâtre, les 104 musiciens de l'orchestre prendront contact avec le public parisien. Pierre Monteux, que l'on oublie trop en France, est célèbre outre-Atlantique, où il dirigea pendant des années l'Orchestre de San-Francisco, et prit, avant Serge Koussewitzky, qui repassa le flambeau à Charles Münch, la charge de conduire vers une rare perfection l'Orchestre de Boston. Ces trois grands chefs étaient venus de Paris en Amérique. Koussewitzky, hélas, trop tôt disparu, ne verra pas sa phalange parcourir les capitales d'Europe !

Mais son souvenir, lorsque Münch et Monteux monteront au pupitre pour prouver que la France, elle aussi, a des chefs d'orchestre au génie mondialement reconnu, sera par tous associé à cette manifestation, où musique américaine et musique française voisineront fraternellement.

Jean HAMON.

LE PAYS CE MATIN, PARIS
29 JAN 1952

PARIS APPLAUDIRA CET ÉTÉ Igor Stravinsky, Charles Münch et l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston

IGOR STRAVINSKY dirigera à Paris cet été. La nouvelle, aujourd'hui officielle, réjouira les innombrables admirateurs du grand compositeur, depuis longtemps déjà considéré comme le maître que Diaghilev voyait en lui au temps où certains de ses confrères français, et non des moindres, ne savaient s'ils devaient le considérer comme un « révolutionnaire » ou comme un fumiste.

L'illustre compositeur montera au pupitre pour les spectacles que donnera au théâtre des Champs-Elysées la compagnie du New-York City Ballet, six représentations consacrées à ses ballets. Nous reverrons donc, dans une chorégraphie de Georges Balanchine, « l'Oiseau de feu », qu'il écrivit pour Anna Pavlova (qui se refusa à le danser), « le Sacre du Printemps », le grand événement — et le scandale ! — de la saison parisienne de 1913, « Petrouchka » et, probablement, « les Abeilles » et « le Rossignol.

Après plus de vingt ans

Aujourd'hui citoyen américain, Stravinsky — qui est venu en Europe en septembre dernier, pour la première mondiale à Venise de « The Rake's Progress », son premier opéra — n'a pas dirigé un orchestre en France depuis 1939.

Agé de soixante-dix ans, il vit à Hollywood dans une demi-retraite laborieuse, dont il sort volontiers pour se mêler au monde, généralement avec quelque éclat. Soit qu'il parte en guerre contre les critiques, à qui il conteste le droit de juger son œuvre — « car, dit-il, si elle n'est pas parfaite, je me demande comment ils peuvent s'en rendre compte » —, soit qu'il échange des lettres sévères avec les éditeurs qui s'arrogent le droit de faire « arranger » quelques-unes de ses pages pour en tirer un morceau « commercial ». La dernière (en date) de ces disputes le mettait en conflit avec le mari d'une des Andrew Sisters, l'éditeur Lou Levy, qui avait fait transformer « l'Oiseau de feu » en une sorte de fox-trott, dépourvu, assurait le compositeur, de « la moindre qualité musicale ».

Bien qu'il touche sur ces arrangements de substantiels droits d'auteur, Stravinsky est loin d'être aussi riche qu'on l'imagine, notamment parce que ses œuvres, lorsqu'elles sont jouées en U. R. S. S. — et c'est souvent — ne lui rapportent pas un centime. Il se refuse d'ailleurs à rien réclamer à Moscou, étant résolu à ne jamais avoir de rapports avec les maîtres actuels de la Russie. « Je suis un émigré, déclare-t-il, mais c'est la Russie des tsars que j'ai quittée, et non celle des Soviets ».

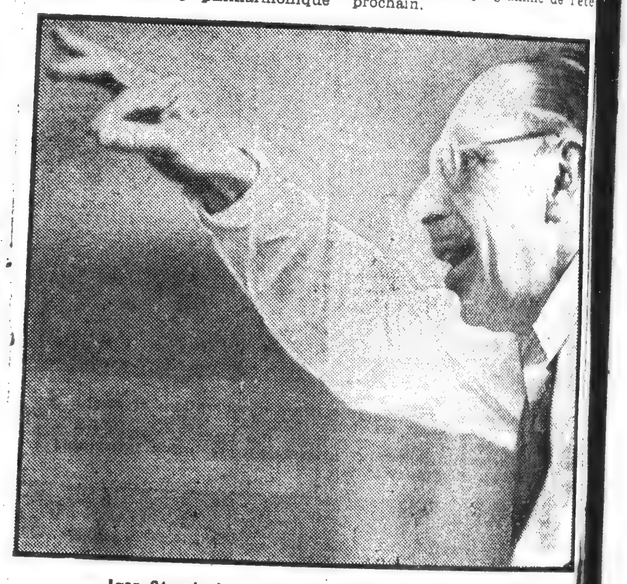
1851-1952

La venue à Paris du New-York City Ballet — et de Stravinsky — ne sera qu'une des contributions américaines à la série de manifestations artistiques organisées à Paris à l'occasion du congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Une autre visite nous est promise, celle de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, dont les concerts seront dirigés par deux de nos éminents compatriotes, M. Charles Münch et M. Pierre Monteux.

L'Orchestre symphonique de Boston n'est pas le doyen des grands ensembles symphoniques américains, puisqu'il fut fondé en 1851 seulement, trente-neuf ans après l'Orchestre philharmonique de New-York. Mais il a pendant celui dont les Américains sont le plus fiers. Dix chefs seulement l'ont dirigé de façon permanente et M. Charles Münch s'insère dixième sur une liste où l'on relève, avant le sien, des noms illustres, tels que ceux du Hongrois Arthur Nikish, de l'Allemand Karl Mück, de M. Pierre Monteux (qui resta cinq ans à Boston, de 1918 à 1924) et de Serge Koussevitzky, qui resta à la tête du célèbre orchestre de 1924 à 1949. M. Charles Münch lui succéda, il y a quelques trois ans, préféré à une épaisse foule de candidats de grande classe, dont les uns — tels que Bruno Walter, Léopold Stokowski et Furtwaengler — furent écartés parce que trop âgés, et les autres, plus jeunes, « parce qu'avec eux les risques eussent été trop considérables ».

Curiosité digne de mention, l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston ignore les difficultés financières. Il est soutenu par d'enthousiastes et riches mélomanes, et les meilleurs de ses musiciens ont de quoi faire rêver leurs collègues français. Un « premier pupitre » touche 10.000 dollars quarante-neuf fois dans l'année (pour quarante-neuf semaines de travail) et aucun des exécutants ne reçoit moins de 4.000 dollars par semaine, non compris bien entendu ce qu'il peut gagner avec les émissions radiophoniques et les enregistrement de disques...

Mais ce n'est point en raison de ces considérations financières que les Parisiens iront applaudir l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, que la province entendra elle aussi, des concerts dans plusieurs grandes villes de France, et notamment à Strasbourg et à Bordeaux, figurant à son programme de l'été prochain.



Igor Stravinsky dirigeant une répétition d'orchestre.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

France Illustration - Paris 26 JAN 1952

COURRIER MUSICAL

L'œuvre du XXe siècle

En mai prochain va s'ouvrir à Paris, sous les auspices du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture, l'Exposition Internationale des Arts. Elle groupera tout ce que les hommes libres ont réalisé dans le domaine artistique et culturel au cours de la première moitié de ce siècle.

Le Congrès — organisation mondiale d'écrivains, d'artistes, de philosophes et d'hommes de sciences — s'est donné pour tâche la sauvegarde de la liberté de l'expression humaine et l'extension de cette liberté dans tous les aspects de notre civilisation. Son premier acte va nous mettre en présence des réalisations majeures des cinquante dernières années du monde.

Les noms qui président à ces manifestations présagent de leur grandeur : Jacques Maritain, Bertrand Russel, Benedetto Croce, Karl Jaspers, John Dewey, Salvador de Madariaga. Dans cette vaste fresque culturelle où les arts, le théâtre et la littérature seront représentés, je voudrais signaler ce qui, déjà, nous est promis pour le seul département « musique et chorégraphie » :

— le retour d'Igor Stravinski ; après une absence de treize années, le maître dirigera lui-même ses ballets et ses œuvres symphoniques les plus récentes ;

— la présentation du Wozzeck, d'Alban Berg, par l'Opéra de Vienne ;

— la création de l'opéra de Gertrude Stein et Virgil Thompson, Quatre Saints en trois actes, par une admirable troupe de chanteurs noirs ;

— la création de deux œuvres chorégraphiques dont le Congrès a demandé les partitions nouvelles à Georges Auric et Henri Sauguet ;

— l'exécution des œuvres essentielles des fondateurs de la musique moderne, de Debussy à Honegger et Prokofiev.

Pour la réalisation des chefs-d'œuvre musicaux du XXe siècle sont conviées dans notre capitale quelques-unes des meilleures formations du monde. Pour la première fois l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston viendra se faire entendre à Paris ; les Etats-Unis nous délégueront encore le « New-York City Ballet » ; l'Autriche, l'Orchestre et la Philharmonie, de Vienne ; l'Allemagne, l'orchestre R. A. S., de Berlin ; la Suisse, l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande ; l'Italie, les Chœurs de l'Académie Sainte-Cécile, de Rome. La France sera représentée par l'Orchestre du Conservatoire et l'Orchestre national.

L. MAURICE-AMOUR.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Les Der. Nouv. de Colmar
31 JAN 1952

LA VIE MUSICALE

La musique française et l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston donnera son premier concert parisien le 6 Mai à l'Opéra sous la direction de Charles Munch et dans le cadre de «L'Oeuvre du Vingtième Siècle», vaste exposition internationale des arts qui doit se dérouler tout au long du mois de Mai dans notre capitale sous l'égide du Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture.

Cette formation qui ne comprend pas moins de cent quatre musiciens s'embarquera à destination de la France le 27 Avril à bord de l'Ile de France (pour se plier aux dates de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, la French Line n'a pas hésité à modifier les siennes).

Le second concert de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston est prévu pour le 8 Mai. Il aura lieu au Théâtre des Champs Elysées et sera dirigé par Pierre Monteux qui, trente neuf ans auparavant, jour pour jour, dirigeait dans ce même théâtre la première représentation du «Sacre du Printemps» de Strawinsky pour les Ballets Russes de Diagnilew.

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston donnera son troisième concert le 21 Mai, au Palais de Chaillot.

L'un de ces concerts sera consacré aux oeuvres de musiciens français contemporains. Parmi les autres projets de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, citons notamment la Cinquième Symphonie de Honegger une ouverture d'un compositeur américain, Samuel Barber, et diverses oeuvres de Ravel et de Debussy.

Après avoir joué dans le cadre de «L'oeuvre du XXème Siècle», l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston ira à Strasbourg, ville natale de Charles Munch, en Hollande, Belgique, Angleterre et en Allemagne où il jouera pour les troupes d'occupation américaines.

La musique française contemporaine a toujours été en faveur auprès des divers chefs d'orchestre qui se succédèrent au pupitre de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston. Il n'y a rien d'étonnant à cela. Trois de ces chefs d'orchestre étaient eux-mêmes français: Charles Munch qui en est l'actuel directeur artistique, Pierre Monteux qui le resta de 1919 à 1924 et avant lui Henri Rabaud. Quant à Serge Koussevitzky qui dirigea la célèbre formation américaine de 1924 jusqu'à l'arrivée de Munch en 1949, il avait acquis la nationalité française. Avant eux, Wilhelm Gericke, Mac Fielder et Karl Muck avaient beau venir d'Europe Centrale, la musique française les intéressait passionnément : ils surent le prouver.

C'est sous la direction de Charles Munch et à Boston que fut joué pour la première fois la Cinquième Symphonique de Honegger. Ceci grâce à l'autorisation spéciale de Koussevitsky qui avait commandé cette oeuvre pour sa propre école de musique.

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston peut se vanter des créations du Qatrième Concerto pour piano de Darius Milhaud et du Concerto pour piano de Francis Poulenc. C'est encore sous la baguette de Munch que furent présentées au public américain la Sonate de Jaubert et le Concerto pour ondes Martenot d'André Jolivet. Ce chef d'orchestre révéla aussi aux Etats-Unis la Jeanne au Bucher de Honegger et le Requiem de Berlioz. La symphonie d'Olivier Messiaen, Turangalila, fut créée par l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston sous la direction de Léonard Bernstein, l'un des plus dynamiques musiciens et compositeurs d'Amérique.

Il est impossible de faire une liste précise de toutes les oeuvres francaises jouées par l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston pendant que Koussevitsky en tenait la tête.

En 1930, pour célébrer le cinquième anniversaire de cette illustre formation, Honegger composa à son intention sa Première Symphonie, Milhaud, sa seconde, Roussel sa troisième et Strawinsky sa Symphonie pour Psaumes. Par la suite, Koussewitsky présenta les quatre premières symphonies de Honegger, toutes celles de Roussel et la plupart des oeuvres de ce dernier. C'est encore lui qui commanda à Ravel l'orchestration des Tableaux de l'Exposition de Moussorsky qu'il fit très fréquemment interpréter par son orchestre. C'est toujours lui qui présenta en Amérique la Fantaisie Contrapuntale de Lekeu, la suite Padnavati de Roussel, l'Elan de Brochard, l'Epiphanie de Caplet, la Sinfonia de Rodiland Manuel. Et quant il fut invité à diriger l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston par Munch, Koussewitsky lui fit jouer pour la première fois aux Etats-Unis le Mystère des Saints Innocents de Barraud, Nadia Boulanger, elle aussi, fut invitée à présenter le Requiem de Fauré.

Pierre Monteux fut le premier à révéler aux Américains les Jeux, la Petite Suite et la Fantaisie pour piano de Debussy; l'Horace Victorieux de Honegger, la Suite N° 2 de Milhaud, le Tombeau de Couperin de Ravel. Soir de Fête de Chausson, les Trois Chorales de Koechlin et le Divertissement de Ropartz. C'est sous sa direction que l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston joua pour la première fois la Valse et les Valses Nobles et Sentimentales de Ravel, la Queste de Dieu de Vincent d'Indy, la Fantaisie Symphonique de Lekeu, la Sinfonia de d'Indy et la Peri de Dukas.

Henri Rabaud ne resta qu'une année à la tête de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, mais néanmoins il eut le temps de présenter la Première Suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé, la Musique de Plein Air de Schmitt, la Suite de Shylock, de Fauré et l'Hymne à la Justice de Magnard.

Karl Muck présenta la seconde suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé, Ma Mère l'Oye de Ravel, les Trois Images et la Mer de Debussy, la Symphonie de Dukas, la Symphonie N° 4 de Ropartz, la Salomé de Schmitt, Wallenstein de d'Indy et la Symphonie de Chausson.

Max Fiedler lui, révéla aux Américains la Suite Française de Roger Ducasse et la Pièce Symphonique extraite de la Rédemption de César Franck.

Wilhelm Gericke, au début du siècle, fut jouer par l'Orchestre de Boston pour la première fois les deux premières symphonies de Vincent d'Indy, la première symphonie de Saint-Saens, la Fantaisie de Ropartz, Viviane de Chausson et l'Apprenti Sorcier de Dukas.

Mentionnons enfin, qu'à cette époque, le célèbre joueur de hautbois Georges Longy dirigeait une formation qui fut la première à jouer aux Etats-Unis l'Après-Midi d'un Faune de Debussy.

[263]

LE MONDE - PARIS
6 FEV

— On annonçait il y a plusieurs semaines que Charles Münch, sérieusement souffrant, avait dû renoncer à diriger pendant quelque temps l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, dont il est le chef depuis deux ans. Notre compatriote est à l'heure actuelle totalement rétabli et pourra, comme prévu, présenter l'orchestre de Boston lorsqu'il se produira à Paris en mai au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, dans le cadre de « l'œuvre du vingtième siècle ».

ARGUS de la PRESSE
37, Rue Bergère, PARIS (9e)

N° de débit .....

COMBAT
123, Rue Montmartre — P

17 JANVIER

Le plus célèbre orchestre américain pour la première fois à Paris

Grand, la chevelure aluminée surplombant un rotonde un visage de grand enfant, M. George E. Judd, administrateur du célèbre « Boston Symphony Orchestra », venu à Paris pour organiser la participation de son orchestre aux manifestations de l' « Œuvre du XXe siècle », qui se dérouleront tout au long du mois de mai, sous les auspices du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture », recevait, hier soir, dans un cadre intime, le Tout-Paris amis des arts. M. George Judd ne pratique guère plus notre langue que votre serviteur ne risquerait sa réputation sur la langue anglaise ; aussi faisions-nous assaut de courtoisie, par le truchement délicat d'une charmante personne du sexe.

Le « Boston Symphony Orchestra », dont il assume matériellement la direction, formation prestigieuse, considérée comme l'une des quatre meilleures du monde, va donc, pour la première fois depuis sa fondation, il y a quelque 71 ans, aborder l'Europe. Le 6 mai, à l'Opéra, sous la direction de Charles Münch, le 8, au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous celle de Pierre Monteux, qui fêtera ce jour-là le 30e anniversaire de la création du Sacre du Printemps, de Stravinsky, aux Ballets russes, en ce même théâtre, les 104 musiciens de l'orchestre prendront contact avec le public parisien. Pierre Monteux, que l'on oublie trop en France, est célèbre outre-Atlantique, où il dirigea pendant des années l'Orchestre de San-Francisco, et prit, ayant Serge Koussewitzky, qui repassa le flambeau à Charles Münch, la charge de conduire vers une rare perfection l'Orchestre de Boston. Ces trois grands chefs étaient venus de Paris en Amérique. Koussewitzky, hélas, trop tôt disparu, ne verra pas sa phalange parcourir les capitales d'Europe !

Mais son souvenir, lorsque Münch et Monteux monteront au pupitre pour prouver que la France, elle aussi, a des chefs d'orchestre au génie mondialement reconnu, sera par tous associé à cette manifestation, où musique américaine et musique française voisineront fraternellement.

Jean RAMON.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

France Illustration - Paris 26 JAN 1952

COURRIER MUSICAL

L'œuvre du XXe siècle

En mai prochain va s'ouvrir à Paris, sous les auspices du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture, l'Exposition Internationale des Arts. Elle groupera tout ce que les hommes libres ont réalisé dans le domaine artistique et culturel au cours de la première moitié de ce siècle.

Le Congrès — organisation mondiale d'écrivains, d'artistes, de philosophes et d'hommes de sciences — s'est donné pour tâche la sauvegarde de la liberté de l'expression humaine et l'extension de cette liberté dans tous les aspects de notre civilisation. Son premier acte va nous mettre en présence des réalisations majeures des cinquante dernières années du monde.

Les noms qui président à ces manifestations présagent de leur grandeur : Jacques Maritain, Bertrand Russel, Benedetto Croce, Karl Jaspers, John Dewey, Salvador de Madariaga. Dans cette vaste fresque culturelle où les arts, le théâtre et la littérature seront représentés, je voudrais signaler ce qui, déjà, nous est promis pour le seul département « musique et chorégraphie » :

— le retour d'Igor Stravinski ; après une absence de treize années, le maître dirigera lui-même ses ballets et ses œuvres symphoniques les plus récentes ;

— la présentation du Wozzeck, d'Alban Berg, par l'Opéra de Vienne ;

— la création de l'opéra de Gertrude Stein et Virgil Thompson, Quatre Saints en trois actes, par une admirable troupe de chanteurs noirs ;

— la création de deux œuvres chorégraphiques dont le Congrès a demandé les partitions nouvelles à Georges Auric et Henri Sauguet ;

— l'exécution des œuvres essentielles des fondateurs de la musique moderne, de Debussy à Honegger et Prokofiev.

Pour la réalisation des chefs-d'œuvre musicaux du XXe siècle sont conviées dans notre capitale quelques-unes des meilleures formations du monde. Pour la première fois l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston viendra se faire entendre à Paris ; les Etats-Unis nous déléguerons encore le « New-York City Ballet » ; l'Autriche, l'Orchestre et la Philharmonie, de Vienne ; l'Allemagne, l'orchestre R. A. S., de Berlin ; la Suisse, l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande ; l'Italie, les Chœurs de l'Académie Sainte-Cécile, de Rome. La France sera représentée par l'Orchestre du Conservatoire et l'Orchestre national.

L. MAURICE-AMOUR.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89
Les Der. Nouv. du Ht-Rhin - Colmar
31 JAN 1952

LA VIE MUSICALE

La musique française et l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston donnera son premier concert parisien le 6 Mai à l'Opéra sous la direction de Charles Munch et dans le cadre de «L'Oeuvre du Vingtième Siècles, vaste exposition internationale des arts qui doit se dérouler tout au long du mois de Mai dans notre capitale sous l'égide du Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture.

Cette formation qui ne comprend pas moins de cent quatre musiciens s'embarquera à destination de la France le 27 Avril à bord de l'Ile de France (pour se plier aux dates de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, la French Line n'a pas hésité à modifier les siennes).

Le second concert de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston est prévu pour le 8 Mai. Il aura lieu au Théâtre des Champs Elysées et sera dirigé par Pierre Monteux qui, trente neuf ans auparavant, jour pour jour, dirigeait dans ce même théâtre la première représentation du «Sacre du Printemps» de Strawinsky pour les Ballets Russes de Diagnilew.

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston donnera son troisième concert le 24 Mai, au Palais de Chaillot.

L'un de ces concerts sera consacré aux oeuvres de musiciens français contemporains. Parmi les autres projets de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, citons notamment la Cinquième Symphonie de Honegger une ouverture d'un compositeur américain, Samuel Barber, et diverses oeuvres de Ravel et de Debussy.

Après avoir joué dans le cadre de «L'oeuvre du XXème Siècle», l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston ira à Strasbourg, ville natale de Charles Munch, en Hollande, Belgique, Angleterre et en Allemagne où il jouera pour les troupes d'occupation américaines.

La musique française contemporaine a toujours été en faveur auprès des divers chefs d'orchestre qui se succédèrent au pupitre de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston. Il n'y a rien d'étonnant à cela. Trois de ces chefs d'orchestre étaient eux-mêmes français: Charles Munch qui en est l'actuel directeur artistique, Pierre Monteux qui le resta de 1919 à 1924 et avant lui Henri Rabaud. Quant à Serge Koussevitzky qui dirigea la célèbre formation américaine de 1924 jusqu'à l'arrivée de Munch en 1949, il avait acquis la nationalité française. Avant eux, Wilhelm Gericke, Mac Fielder et Karl Muck avaient beau venir d'Europe Centrale, la musique française les intéressait passionnément : ils surent le prouver.

C'est sous la direction de Charles Munch et à Boston que fut joué pour la première fois la Cinquième Symphonique de Honegger. Ceci grâce à l'autorisation spéciale de Koussevitsky qui avait commandé cette oeuvre pour sa propre école de musique.

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston peut se vanter des créations du Qatrième Concerto pour piano de Darius Milhaud et du Concerto pour piano de Francis Poulenc. C'est encore sous la baguette de Munch que furent présentées au public américain la Sonate de Jaubert et le Concerto pour ondes Martenot d'André Jollivet. Ce chef d'orchestre révéla aussi aux Etats-Unis la Jeanne au Bucher de Honegger et le Requiem de Berlioz. La symphonie d'Olivier Messiaen, Turangalila, fut créée par l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston sous la direction de Léonard Bernstein, l'un des plus dynamiques musiciens et compositeurs d'Amérique.

Il est impossible de faire une liste précise de toutes les oeuvres françaises jouées par l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston pendant que Koussevitsky en tenait la tête.

En 1930, pour célébrer le cinquième anniversaire de cette illustre formation, Honegger composa à son intention sa Première Symphonie, Milhaud, sa seconde, Roussel sa troisième et Strawinsky sa Symphonie pour Psaumes. Par la suite, Koussewitsky présenta les quatre premières symphonies de Honegger, toutes celles de Roussel et la plupart des oeuvres de ce dernier. C'est encore lui qui commanda à Ravel l'orchestration des Tableaux de l'Exposition de Moussorsky qu'il fit très fréquemment interpréter par son orchestre. C'est toujours lui qui présenta en Amérique la Fantaisie Contrapuntale de Lekeu, la suite Padnavati de Roussel, l'Elan de Brochard, l'Epiphanie de Caplet, la Sinfonia de Roland Manuel. Et quant il fut invité à diriger l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston par Munch, Koussewitsky lui fit jouer pour la première fois aux Etats-Unis le Mystère des Saints Innocents de Barraud. Nadia Boulanger, elle aussi, fut invitée à présenter le Requiem de Fauré.

Pierre Monteux fut le premier à révéler aux Américains les Jeux, la Petite Suite et la Fantaisie pour piano de Debussy; l'Horace Victorieux de Honegger, la Suite N° 2 de Milhaud, le Tombeau de Couperin de Ravel, Soir de Fête de Chausson, les Trois Chorales de Koechlin et le Divertissement de Roparts. C'est sous sa direction que l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston joua pour la première fois la Valse et les Valses Nobles et Sentimentales de Ravel, la Queste de Dieu de Vincent d'Indy, la Fantaisie Symphonique de Lekeu, la Sinfonia de d'Indy et la Peri de Dukas.

Henri Rabaud ne resta qu'une année à la tête de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, mais néanmoins il eut le temps de présenter la Première Suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé, la Musique de Plein Air de Schmitt, la Suite de Shylock, de Fauré et l'Hymne à la Justice de Magnard.

Karl Muck présenta la seconde suite extraite de Daphnis et Cloé, Ma Mère l'Oye de Ravel, les Trois Images et la Mer de Debussy, la Symphonie de Dukas, la Symphonie N° 4 de Ropartz, la Salomé de Schmitt, Wallenstein de d'Indy et la Symphonie de Chausson.

Max Fiedler lui, révéla aux Américains la Suite Française de Roger Ducasse et la Pièce Symphonique extraite de la Rédemption de César Franck.

Wilhelm Gericke, au début du siècle, fut jouer par l'Orchestre de Boston pour la première fois les deux premières symphonies de Vincent d'Indy, la première symphonie de Saint-Saens, la Fantaisie de Ropartz, Viviane de Chausson et l'Apprenti Sorcier de Dukas.

Mentionnons enfin, qu'à cette époque, le célèbre joueur de hautbois Georges Longy dirigeait une formation qui fut la première à jouer aux Etats-Unis l'Après-Midi d'un Faune de Debussy.

[263]

LE PAYS CE MATIN, PARIS
29 JAN 1952

PARIS APPLAUDIRA CET ÉTÉ Igor Stravinsky, Charles Münch et l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston

IGOR STRAVINSKY dirigera à Paris cet été. La nouvelle, aujourd'hui officielle, réjouira les innombrables admirateurs du grand compositeur, depuis longtemps déjà considéré comme le maître que Diaghilev voyait en lui au temps où certains de ses confrères français, et non des moindres, ne savaient s'ils devaient le considérer comme un « révolutionnaire » ou comme un fumiste.

L'illustre compositeur montera au pupitre pour les spectacles que donnera au théâtre des Champs-Elysées la compagnie du New-York City Ballet, six représentations consacrées à ses ballets. Nous reverrons donc, dans une chorégraphie de Georges Balanchine, « l'Oiseau de feu », qu'il écrivit pour Anna Pavlova (qui se refusa à le danser), « le Sacre du Printemps », le grand événement — et le scandale ! — de la saison parisienne de 1913, « Petrouchka » et, probablement, « les Abeilles » et « le Rossignol.

Après plus de vingt ans

Aujourd'hui citoyen américain, Stravinsky — qui est venu en Europe en septembre dernier, pour la première mondiale à Venise de « The Rake's Progress », son premier opéra — n'a pas dirigé un orchestre en France depuis 1939.

Agé de soixante-dix ans, il vit à Hollywood dans une demi-retraite laborieuse, dont il sort volontiers pour se mêler au monde, généralement avec quelque éclat. Soit qu'il parte en guerre contre les critiques, à qui il conteste le droit de juger son œuvre — « car, dit-il, si elle n'est pas parfaite, je me demande comment ils peuvent s'en rendre compte » —, soit qu'il échange des lettres sévères avec les éditeurs qui s'arrogent le droit de faire « arranger » quelques-unes de ses pages pour en tirer un morceau « commercial ». La dernière (en date) de ces disputes le mettait en conflit avec le mari d'une des Andrew Sisters, l'éditeur Lou Lévy, qui avait fait transformer « l'Oiseau de feu » en une sorte de fox-trott, dépourvu, assurait le compositeur, de « la moindre qualité musicale ».

Bien qu'il touche sur ces arrangements de substantiels droits d'auteur, Stravinsky est loin d'être aussi riche qu'on l'imagine, notamment parce que ses œuvres, lorsqu'elles sont jouées en U. R. S. S. — et c'est souvent — ne lui rapportent pas un centime. Il se refuse d'ailleurs à rien réclamer à Moscou, étant résolu à ne jamais avoir de rapports avec les maîtres actuels de la Russie. « Je suis un émigré, déclare-t-il, mais c'est la Russie des tsars que j'ai quittée, et non celle des Soviets ».

1851-1952

La venue à Paris du New-York City Ballet — et de Stravinsky — ne sera qu'une des contributions américaines à la série de manifestations artistiques organisées à Paris à l'occasion du congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Une autre visite nous est promise, celle de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, dont les concerts seront dirigés par deux de nos éminents compatriotes, M. Charles Münch et M. Pierre Monteux.

L'Orchestre symphonique de Boston n'est pas le doyen des grands ensembles symphoniques américains, puisqu'il fut fondé en 1851 seulement, trente-neuf ans après l'Orchestre philharmonique de New-York. Mais il est peut-être celui dont les Américains sont le plus fiers. Dix chefs seulement l'ont dirigé de façon permanente et M. Charles Münch a inscrit dixième sur une liste où l'on relève, avant le sien, des noms illustres, tels que ceux du Hongrois Arthur Nikish, de l'Allemand Karl Mück, de M. Pierre Monteux (qui resta cinq ans à Boston, de 1918 à 1924) et de Serge Koussevitzky, qui resta à la tête du célèbre orchestre de 1924 à 1949. M. Charles Münch lui succéda, il y a d'ailleurs trois ans, préféré à une petite foule de candidats de grande classe, dont les uns — tels que Bruno Walter, Léopold Stokowski et Furtwaengler — furent écartés parce que trop âgés, et les autres, plus jeunes, « parce qu'avec eux les risques eussent été trop considérables ».

Curiosité digne de mention, l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston — ignore les difficultés financières — il est soutenu par d'enthousiastes et riches mélomanes, et les salaires de ses musiciens ont de quoi faire rêver leurs collègues français. Un « premier pupitre » touche 10.000 dollars quarante-neuf fois dans l'année (pour quarante-neuf semaines de travail) et aucun des exécutants ne reçoit moins de 4.000 dollars par semaine, non compris bien entendu ce qu'il peut gagner avec les émissions radiophoniques et les enregistrement de disques...

Mais ce n'est point en raison de ces considérations financières que les Parisiens iront applaudir l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, que la province entendra elle aussi, des concerts dans plusieurs grandes villes de France, et notamment à Strasbourg et à Bordeaux, figurant à son programme de l'été prochain.

Igor Stravinsky dirigeant une répétition d'orchestre.

LE MONDE - PARIS
6 FEV 1952

— On annonçait il y a plusieurs semaines que Charles Münch, sérieusement souffrant, avait dû renoncer à diriger pendant quelque temps l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, dont il est le chef depuis deux ans. Notre compatriote est à l'heure actuelle totalement rétabli et pourra, comme prévu, présenter l'orchestre de Boston lorsqu'il se produira à Paris en mai au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, dans le cadre de « l'œuvre du vingtième siècle ».

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Bruxelles

1 FEV 1952

« L'œuvre du XXe siècle »

★

Nous l'avons annoncé, [...]s pour la Liberté de la [...]es présidents d'honneur [...]Maritain, Bertrand Rus[...]o Croce, John Dewey [...]de Madariaga, tiendra [...]Paris en mai prochain. [...]de retentissantes mani[...]tiques et philosophi[...]dérouleront au Théâtre [...]Elysées, seront dégagées [...]force de l'œuvre du [...]réfutées par des preu[...]ables l'affirmation selon [...]civilisation occidentale [...]décadence. Des chefs[...]premier plan apparte[...]vers domaines des arts, [...]rature et de la musique [...]d'une manière écla[...]pouvoirs de création et de [...]de ce dernier demi-

★

[...]ramme musical prévoit la [...]on d'Igor Stravinsky, qui [...]-même quelques-unes de [...]ositions les plus récentes. L'O[...]re philharmonique de Bos[...]n spécialement à Paris pour [...]nstance, donnera plusieurs [...]. L'un des six spectacles, que [...]York City Ballet montera [...]direction de Georges Balan[...]chine, sera consacré aux ballets dont Stravinsky a écrit la musique.

L'Opéra de Vienne interprétera Wozzeck, d'Alban Berg; l'Orchestre philharmonique de Vienne, l'Orchestre anglais de Halle, les chœurs et l'orchestre de l'Académie Sainte-Cécile de Rome, les chœurs Saint-Guillaume de Strasbourg et ceux de Sheffield, la R.I.A.S. (radio du secteur américain de Berlin), l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande de Genève, l'Orchestre du Conservatoire et l'Orchestre national de Paris se feront successivement entendre au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous la direction de Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Bruno Walter, Sir John Barbirolli, Igor Markevitch, Ferencz Fricsay, Ernest Ansermet, Fritz Munch, Carl Boehm.

(Voir suite de l'article en [...] page 3.)

XXme Siècle »

John dos Passos, Blaise Cendrars, Jean Cassou, Albert Camus, Raymond Aron, François Mauriac, Jean-Paul Sartre, Ignazio Silone, Arnold Toynbee, Richard Wright figurent parmi les personnalités qui ont été invitées dans le cadre des conférences et entretiens littéraires.

★

Une très importante exposition au Musée d'Art Moderne réunira cent cinquante tableaux provenant de collections nationales et privées d'Amérique et d'Europe, et que le public sera admis à voir pour la première fois.

James Swence, René Huyghe, André Malraux dégageront, dans une salle du musée et devant les œuvres mêmes, les valeurs picturales contemporaines.

★

Sur le plan théâtral, des lectures de pièces sans décor seront faites par de grands acteurs de tous les pays.

Cette manifestation, véritable festival de l'esprit, doit permettre aux hommes de l'Occident de prendre conscience des valeurs universelles de leur culture. Bien que toutes provocations soient bannies de ce congrès, l'intention de ses organisateurs est de tenter, avec tous les moyens en leur pouvoir, de toucher les artistes du monde de l'Est et de faire pénétrer dans leur univers terne un peu de cette notion de liberté qui est le privilège de notre civilisation.

L. R

Le Meridional
Marseille, Dimanche
February 3

L'ORCHESTRE SYMPHONIQUE DE BOSTON VA VENIR EN FRANCE

L'orchestre symphonique de Boston donnera son premier concert en France le 6 mai à l'Opéra de Paris sous la direction de Charles Munch et dans le cadre de « L'Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle », vaste exposition internationale des arts qui doit se dérouler tout au long du mois de mai dans notre capitale sous l'égide du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture.

Cette formation qui ne comprend pas moins de cent quatre musiciens s'embarquera à destination de la France le 27 avril à bord de l'Ile de France (pour se plier aux dates de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, la French Line n'a pas hésité à modifier les siennes).

L'un de ces concerts sera consacré aux œuvres de musiciens français contemporains. Parmi les autres projets de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, citons notamment la Cinquième Symphonie de Honegger, une ouverture d'un compositeur américain, Samuel Barber, et diverses œuvres de Ravel et de Debussy.

Après les concerts donnés à Paris, l'orchestre symphonique de Boston ira à Strasbourg, ville natale de Charles Munch, en Hollande, Belgique, Angleterre et en Allemagne où il jouera pour les troupes d'occupation américaines.

Air de Paris

6 FEV 1952

■

On sait que le grand orchestre symphonique de Boston sera présenté à Paris, en mai, M. Charles Munch et M. Pierre Monteux tiendront tour à tour la baguette.

■

A la suite de l'orchestre de Boston seront présentés à Paris l'Opéra de Vienne, les chœurs et l'orchestre de l'Académie Ste-Cécile de Rome, ainsi que le New-York City Ballet qui donnera six spectacles.

■

Le saviez-vous?

● L'orchestre symphonique de Boston partira de New-York le 28 avril à bord de l' « Ile-de-France » pour une tournée de trois semaines en Europe. Il donnera une série de concerts dans treize villes de six pays européens, dont Paris, La Haye, Strasbourg et Londres.

● Georges Damois, huissier principal de l'Opéra, et qui appartient depuis 47 ans à l'administration de notre première scène lyrique nationale, vient d'être décoré de la médaille d'officier de l'Académie.

● Le théâtre Sarah-Bernhardt annonce les trente dernières représentations de La Dame de chez Maxim, avec Jeannette Batti.

● Le Quatuor Vegh interprétera La Chasse, de Mozart ; Le 6ème Quatuor de Bartok, La Jeune fille à la mort, de Schubert, le mercredi 13 février à 21 heures, aux Amis de la musique de chambre, Salle Marceau-Chaillot, 31, avenue Pierre-1er-de-Serbie.

FIGARO - PARIS

5 FEV 1952

en scène.

● Charles Münch espère être rétabli pour diriger l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, en mai, au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées.

Extrait du Journal: Die Tat
Zürich

– 9. Feb. 1952

Ernst Robert Curtius

BÜCHERTAGEBUCH

13

Seit dem ersten Weltkrieg ist die westliche Kultur vom Zweifel an sich selbst erfaßt. Noch jüngst hat Hendrik de Man (Vermassung und Kulturzerfall, Verlag A. Francke, Bern, 1951) den Gegenstand eindringlich beleuchtet. Zwischen 1918 und 1939 haben diese Sorgen nur einen verhältnismäßig engen Kreis der europäischen Bildungsschicht beschäftigt.

Seit 1945 sind sie in das breite Publikum gedrungen und gelten auch der Presse und der öffentlichen Erörterung als unbezweifelbarer Tatbestand. Dem seichten Fortschrittsoptimismus des neunzehnten stellt sich ein flacher Verfallspessimismus des zwanzigsten Jahrhunderts entgegen. Ein Klischee ist durch das andere ersetzt. Aber wenn ein Gedanke zum Gemeinplatz geworden ist, beginnt er schon seine Schlagkraft zu verlieren. Er hat die Linie des geringsten Widerstandes erreicht. Es ist heute gerichtsnotorisch, daß wir in einem «Zeitalter der Angst» leben. Nicht nur das. Es ist bequemer geworden, das neue Schlagwort nachzuplappern, als Besonnenheit und Kritik zu üben. Im Haushalt der Kultur gibt es Krisen und Depressionen wie im Wirtschaftsleben. Aber die Volkswirtschaft hat eine Krisenlehre entwickelt und den Konjunkturzyklus untersucht. Sollte Entsprechendes nicht auch für Kulturkrisen zu leisten sein? Die große Enquete von Toynbee, deren Abschluß wir bald erwarten dürfen, bemüht sich um Beantwortung dieser Frage.

Aber auch andere Anzeichen deuten darauf hin, daß die westliche Kultur sich wieder auf ihre Aktiva besinnt. Der Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit, der im Mai dieses Jahres in Paris tagen soll, kann eine solche Selbstbesinnung fördern. Die Kulturpanik der Gegenwart trägt zweifellos die Züge einer Nervenkrise an sich (unbeschadet aller ernstzunehmenden Bedrohungen). Wer die Herrschaft über seine «Nerven» verliert, ist bereit, alles verloren zu geben und weiß auch durchaus solide Werte nicht mehr einzuschätzen. Wir Deutsche sind dazu mehr geneigt als andere Völker. Hölderlin sagt einmal: «Gewinn und Verlust wäget ein sinniges Haupt.» Aber diese solide Buchführung ist uns in geistigen Dingen seit Generationen abhanden gekommen. Die Umwertung aller Werte hat bei uns manchmal die Formen eines sinnlosen Ausverkaufs angenommen. Es ist bezeichnend, daß Borchardt vor einem Vierteljahrhundert für eine lyrische Blütenlese den Titel Ewiger Vorrat deutscher Poesie (dritte Auflage 1951 bei Rütten und Lœning) gewählt hat: als Hinweis auf unverlierbaren Bestand. Die Selbstpreisgabe der deutschen Bildung, deren erste Symptome mit dem «Jungen Deutschland» der 1830er Jahre einsetzten, ist das geistige Gegenstück zur Selbstpreisgabe des deutschen Bürgertums, die sich schließlich in der Barbarei des Hitler-Regimes überstürzte. Als Teilausdruck jener Bildungskatastrophe muß auch der Verfall der literarischen Kritik in Deutschland angesehen werden.

Times Literary Supplement

Ein lehrreiches Gegenbeispiel bietet die Geschichte des Times Literary Supplement, das soeben seinen neunundfünfzigsten Jahrgang eröffnet. Die Nummer vom 18. Januar 1952 enthält einen Rückblick auf Entstehung und Geschichte des Blattes und eine Auswahl aus den Buchbesprechungen der letzten fünfzig Jahre. Wer das T. L. S. Jahre oder Jahrzehnte lang verfolgt hat, weiß, daß es das beste Rezensionsorgan der Alten und der Neuen Welt ist. Im Laufe eines halben Jahrhunderts hat es etwas von der Würde einer nationalen Institution angenommen, obwohl es eine private Gründung ist. Mittelbar verdankt es seine Entstehung dem Interesse des britischen Lesers für ausführliche Parlamentsberichte. Diese beanspruchten in der Times soviel Raum, daß während der Sitzungsperioden die Anzeigen neuer Bücher wochenlang liegenblieben. Als das Parlament am 16. Januar 1901 wieder einmal zusammentrat, entschloß sich die Redaktion der Times, für die Dauer der Tagung literarische Beilagen herauszugeben. Die erste erschien am 17. Januar. Das T. L. S. war also als saisonbedingter Notbehelf gedacht, der in den Parlamentsferien wieder entbehrlich werden würde. Aber als sie Ende März eintraten, hatte die Leitung des Weltblattes diese Planung vergessen. Die Beilage erschien weiter — weil sie übersehen worden war. Ihr Herausgeber fühlte sich offenbar nicht veranlaßt, die Zentrale darauf hinzuweisen. Und als diese sich darauf besann, ließ man das Literaturblatt weiter bestehen, weil inzwischen Inserate und Beifallsäußerungen eingegangen waren.

Ist diese Entstehungsgeschichte nicht im besten Sinne englisch? Es ging dem neuen Organ wie der kleinen Topsy in Onkel Toms Hütte, die behauptete, sie habe keine Eltern gehabt. Als man sie fragte, wer sie gemacht habe, sagte sie: «Wahrscheinlich bin ich gewachsen» (I spect I grow'd). Auch das T. L. S. wuchs und wuchs. Der Jahrgang 1902 zählte 392 Seiten, der von 1913 schon 620 Seiten, der von 1930 über 1100. Im Sommer 1914 war der Absatz des Blattes auf 44 000 Stück pro Nummer gestiegen. Eine solche Auflagenhöhe für ein rein literarisches Organ ist natürlich nur möglich, wenn es in der Sprache eines Weltreiches erscheint.

Das britische Empire hat heute seine politische Vormacht verloren, aber das Weltreich der englischen Sprache ist unerschüttert. Auch die Herausbildung einer amerikanischen Sondersprache für den Alltagsgebrauch, die Presse, den Roman ändert daran wenig. Das Spanische ist zwar nächst dem Englischen die meistgesprochene euro-amerikanische Sprache. Aber in Literatur und Wissenschaft kann es sich nicht entfernt mit der Produktivität des anglo-amerikanischen Sprachgebietes messen. Wer der literarischen und wissenschaftlichen Produktion des westlichen Kulturkreises folgen will, sieht sich heute wie vor fünfzig Jahren auf das T. L. S. angewiesen. Wenn es verschwände, wäre die Lücke nicht zu füllen.

Der Erfolg des Blattes beruht auf seiner Qualität. Es mußte allseitige Information mit hohem kritischen Niveau verbinden. «Von Anfang an wurde das Verfahren befolgt, nicht einen Stab von Mitarbeitern zu gruppieren, die die Arbeit unter sich aufteilten: vielmehr wurde aus der ganzen englisch-schreibenden Welt der beste Mann für jede Sonderaufgabe ausgesucht — wobei der «beste» natürlich nicht nur Kenntnisse über den Gegenstand bedeutete, sondern auch die Fähigkeit, einen Artikel zu schreiben, der an sich selbst gute Literatur wäre.» Die Redaktion sah ihre Aufgabe also nicht darin, einen «Standpunkt» zu vertreten, sondern darin, die bestmögliche Leistung zu erzielen. So wurden z. B., um ein Jahr herauszugreifen, 1919 über 150 Mitarbeiter herangezogen: nur 21 von ihnen gehörten dem Stabe der Times an: nur 15 steuerten mehr als 10 Artikel pro Person bei; und von diesen 15 waren nur noch 6 Mitglieder des Redaktionsstabes der Times. In demselben Jahr wurden Leitartikel von 28 verschiedenen Autoren verfaßt (darunter T. S. Eliot und Virginia Woolf). Diese Redaktionspolitik entspricht dem englischen Sinn für Qualität, aber auch dem gesunden Menschenverstand. Sie macht der Leitung des Blattes hohe Ehre. Ein Redaktionskomitee stellt eine Machtposition dar. Die Versuchung, von dieser Macht im Interesse bestimmter Personen oder Personenkreise Gebrauch zu machen, ist menschlich. Aber in einem Rezensionsorgan kann sie zur Verengung des Gesichtskreises, unter Umständen zur Protektionswirtschaft, führen. Die Redaktionspolitik des T. L. S. hat sich von solchen Schwächen reinzuhalten gewußt. Es zählt Fünfundzwanzigjährige zu seinen Mitarbeitern, aber auch Achtzigjährige. Es weiß, daß die Literatur «eine Gegenwart und eine Zukunft hat, aber auch eine Vergangenheit, die sie nicht vergessen darf». Es ist neuen Experimenten ebenso aufgeschlossen wie der Pflege der geistigen Erbgüter. Dadurch hat es traditionsbildend gewirkt und sich Autorität erworben.

★

Aber dieser Erfolg ist ebensosehr einem andern Grundsatz zu verdanken: alle Beiträge erscheinen anonym. Dieses Verfahren ist vielfach angegriffen worden, weil es nicht fair sei. Aber die Erfahrung lehrt, daß ein Kritiker, der nicht zeichnet, meist objektiver urteilt. Er hat es nicht nötig, den Leser durch seine Persönlichkeit zu beeindrucken. Er kann sich den Luxus erlauben, das zu sagen, was er wirklich denkt, anstatt das zu sagen, was das Publikum vielleicht von ihm erwartet. Er braucht aber auch nicht Rücksicht auf andere Kritiker und auf Schriftsteller zu nehmen, die er vielleicht kennt oder kennen lernen wird. Das sind die Beweggründe, die für diese Praxis ins Feld geführt werden. Dahinter dürfte aber auch das ungeschriebene Gesetz der englischen Gesellschaftssitte stehen, das die Zurschaustellung des Persönlichen verpönt.

Die vorliegende Jubiläumsnummer läßt erkennen, worauf der Ruf des Blattes bei Lesern und Forschern sich gründet: es ist «ein Führer zum Besten und eine Warnung vor dem Schlechtesten in der modernen Literatur». Wir könnten davon einiges lernen.

— Les maîtres de la censure américaine [illegible] la main lourde et l'esprit étroit. [illegible] Cleveland (Ohio) viennent de saisir le film adapté de la pièce de Flers et Caillavet, le Roi, dont Maurice Chevalier et Sophie Desmarets étaient les vedettes, et ont fait [illegible] une citation en justice au distributeur, [illegible] n'ont pas coupé certaines scènes « choquantes ».

⊙

— La célèbre cantatrice wagnérienne Kirsten Flagstad a annoncé qu'elle abandonnait définitivement l'opéra après les cinq dernières représentations qu'elle doit donner [illegible] au Metropolitan Opera de New-York.

⊙

— Souffrant depuis plusieurs semaines [illegible] Munch, sérieusement souffrant, renonce à diriger pendant quelques mois l'orchestre symphonique de Boston dont il est le chef depuis deux ans. Notre ville est à l'heure actuelle fortement éprouvée, et pourra, comme prévu, prélude l'orchestre de Boston lorsqu'il se rendra à Paris en mai au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, dans le cadre de « l'Œuvre du XXe siècle ».

LE PARISIEN LIBÉRÉ, PARIS

4 FEV 1952

Charles Münch, rétabli sera à Paris en mai

Il n'y a rien à craindre : Charles Münch dirigera lui-même l'orchestre symphonique de Boston lorsqu'il se produira à Paris, comme nous l'avons annoncé maintes fois, dans le cadre de l' « Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle », vaste exposition des arts organisée et patronnée par le Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture.

De Boston nous était parvenue il y a plusieurs semaines la nouvelle alarmante que le célèbre chef d'orchestre était sérieusement souffrant et que ses médecins lui avaient prescrit un repos complet. Il est maintenant entré dans la phase rassurante de la convalescence et, de New-York, où il habite momentanément, il nous a fait savoir que les progrès de son état de santé étaient très satisfaisants. Ce n'est plus qu'une question de jours. Bien avant de venir nous présenter le plus célèbre orchestre d'Amérique, dont il est depuis deux ans le chef d'orchestre, Charles Münch sera complètement rétabli.

264

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-64 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Beaux Arts - Bruxelles
1er FEV 1952

« L'œuvre du XXe siècle »

★

Ainsi que nous l'avons annoncé, le Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture a pour présidents d'honneur Jacques Maritain, Bertrand Russell, Benedetto Croce, John Dewey et Salvador de Madariaga, tiendra ses assises à Paris en mai prochain. Par une série de retentissantes manifestations artistiques et philosophiques dérouleront au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, seront dégagées les lignes de force de l'œuvre du XXe siècle et réfutées par des preuves irréfutables l'affirmation selon laquelle la civilisation occidentale serait en décadence. Des chefs-d'œuvre de premier plan appartenant aux divers domaines des arts, de la littérature et de la musique témoignent d'une manière éclatante des pouvoirs de création et de la vitalité de ce dernier demi-siècle.

★

Le programme musical prévoit la participation d'Igor Stravinsky, qui dirigera lui-même quelques-unes de ses compositions les plus récentes. L'Orchestre philharmonique de Boston, venu spécialement à Paris pour la circonstance, donnera plusieurs concerts. L'un des six spectacles, que le New York City Ballet montera sous la direction de Georges Balanchine, sera consacré aux ballets dont Stravinsky a écrit la musique.

L'Opéra de Vienne interprétera Wozzeck, d'Alban Berg; l'Orchestre philharmonique de Vienne, l'Orchestre anglais de Halle, les chœurs et l'orchestre de l'Académie Sainte-Cécile de Rome, les chœurs Saint-Guillaume de Strasbourg et ceux de Sheffield, la R.I.A.S. (radio du secteur américain de Berlin), l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande de Genève, l'Orchestre du Conservatoire et l'Orchestre national de Paris se feront successivement entendre au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous la direction de Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Bruno Walter, Sir John Barbirolli, Igor Markevitch, Ferencz Fricsay, Ernest Ansermet, Fritz Munch, Carl Boehm.

(Voir suite de l'article en page 3.)

XXme Siècle ”

John dos Passos, Blaise Cendrars, Jean Cassou, Albert Camus, Raymond Aron, François Mauriac, Jean-Paul Sartre, Ignazio Silone, Arnold Toynbee, Richard Wright figurent parmi les personnalités qui ont été invitées dans le cadre des conférences et entretiens littéraires.

★

Une très importante exposition au Musée d'Art Moderne réunira cent cinquante tableaux provenant de collections nationales et privées d'Amérique et d'Europe, et que le public sera admis à voir pour la première fois.

James Swence, René Huyghe, André Malraux dégageront, dans une salle du musée et devant les œuvres mêmes, les valeurs picturales contemporaines.

★

Sur le plan théâtral, des lectures de pièces sans décor seront faites par de grands acteurs de tous les pays.

Cette manifestation, véritable festival de l'esprit, doit permettre aux hommes de l'Occident de prendre conscience des valeurs universelles de leur culture. Bien que toutes provocations soient bannies de ce congrès, l'intention de ses organisateurs est de tenter, avec tous les moyens en leur pouvoir, de toucher les artistes du monde de l'Est et de faire pénétrer dans leur univers terne un peu de cette notion de liberté qui est le privilège de notre civilisation.

L. R

FIGARO - PARIS
5 FEV 1952

en scène.

● Charles Münch espère être rétabli pour diriger l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, en mai, au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées.

Extrait du Journal: Die Tat
Zürich

– 9 Feb. 1952

LE MONDE
5, rue des Italiens, IXe
6 FÉVRIER 1952

— Les maîtres de la censure américaine ont souvent la main lourde et l'esprit étroit. Ceux de Cleveland (Ohio) viennent de saisir le film adapté de la pièce de Flers et Caillavet, le Roi, dont Maurice Chevalier et Sophie Desmarets étaient les vedettes, et ont fait tenir une citation en justice au distributeur, qui n'avait pas coupé certaines scènes « choquantes ».

⊙

— La célèbre cantatrice wagnérienne Kirsten Flagstad a annoncé qu'elle abandonnerait définitivement l'opéra après les cinq dernières représentations qu'elle doit donner ce mois-ci au Metropolitan Opéra de New-York.

Culture

⊙

— On annonçait il y a plusieurs semaines que Charles Münch, sérieusement souffrant, avait dû renoncer à diriger pendant quelque temps l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, dont il est le chef depuis deux ans. Notre compatriote est à l'heure actuelle totalement rétabli et pourra, comme prévu, présenter l'orchestre de Boston lorsqu'il se produira à Paris en mai au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, dans le cadre de « l'Œuvre du vingtième siècle ».

LE PARISIEN LIBÉRÉ, PARIS
4 FEV 1952

Charles Münch, rétabli sera à Paris en mai

IL n'y a rien à craindre : Charles Münch dirigera lui-même l'orchestre symphonique de Boston lorsqu'il se produira à Paris, comme nous l'avons annoncé maintes fois, dans le cadre de l' « Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle », vaste exposition des arts organisée et patronnée par le Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture.

De Boston nous était parvenue il y a plusieurs semaines la nouvelle alarmante que le célèbre chef d'orchestre était sérieusement souffrant et que ses médecins lui avaient prescrit un repos complet. Il est maintenant entré dans la phase rassurante de la convalescence et, de New-York, où il habite momentanément, il nous a fait savoir que les progrès de son état de santé étaient très satisfaisants. Ce n'est plus qu'une question de jours. Bien avant de venir nous présenter le plus célèbre orchestre d'Amérique, dont il est depuis deux ans le chef d'orchestre, Charles Münch sera complètement rétabli.

264

Air de Paris
6 FEV 1952

On sait que le grand orchestre symphonique de Boston sera présenté à Paris, en mai. M. Charles Munch et M. Pierre Monteux tiendront tour à tour la baguette.

161

A la suite de l'orchestre de Boston seront présentés à Paris l'Opéra de Vienne, les chœurs et l'orchestre de l'Académie Ste-Cécile de Rome, ainsi que le New-York City Ballet qui donnera six spectacles.

LE POPULAIRE
61, rue [illegible]
6 FÉVRIER

Le saviez-vous?

Culture

● L'orchestre symphonique de Boston partira de New-York le 28 avril à bord de l' « Ile-de-France » pour une tournée de trois semaines en Europe. Il donnera une série de concerts dans treize villes de six pays européens, dont Paris, La Haye, Strasbourg et Londres.

● Georges Damois, huissier principal de l'Opéra, et qui appartient depuis 47 ans à l'administration de notre première scène lyrique nationale, vient d'être décoré de la médaille d'officier de l'Académie.

● Le théâtre Sarah-Bernhardt annonce les trente dernières représentations de La Dame de chez Maxim, avec Jeannette Batti.

● Le Quatuor Vegh interprétera La Chasse, de Mozart ; Le 6ème Quatuor de Bartok, La Jeune fille à la mort, de Schubert, le mercredi 13 février à 21 heures, aux Amis de la musique de chambre, Salle Marceau-Chaillot, 31, avenue Pierre-Ier-de-Serbie.

Ernst Robert Curtius
161
925,

BÜCHERTAGEBUCH

13

Seit dem ersten Weltkrieg ist die westliche Kultur vom Zweifel an sich selbst erfaßt. Noch jüngst hat Hendrik de Man (Vermassung und Kulturzerfall, Verlag A. Francke, Bern, 1951) den Gegenstand eindringlich beleuchtet. Zwischen 1918 und 1939 haben diese Sorgen nur einen verhältnismäßig engen Kreis der europäischen Bildungsschicht beschäftigt.

Seit 1945 sind sie in das breite Publikum gedrungen und gelten auch der Presse und der öffentlichen Erörterung als unbezweifelbarer Tatbestand. Dem seichten Fortschrittsoptimismus des neunzehnten stellt sich ein flacher Verfallspessimismus des zwanzigsten Jahrhunderts entgegen. Ein Klischee ist durch das andere ersetzt. Aber wenn ein Gedanke zum Gemeinplatz geworden ist, beginnt er schon seine Schlagkraft zu verlieren. Er hat die Linie des geringsten Widerstandes erreicht. Es ist heute gerichtsnotorisch, daß wir in einem «Zeitalter der Angst» leben. Nicht nur das. Es ist bequemer geworden, das neue Schlagwort nachzuplappern, als Besonnenheit und Kritik zu üben. Im Haushalt der Kultur gibt es Krisen und Depressionen wie im Wirtschaftsleben. Aber die Volkswirtschaft hat eine Krisenlehre entwickelt und den Konjunkturzyklus untersucht. Sollte Entsprechendes nicht auch für Kulturkrisen zu leisten sein? Die große Enquete von Toynbee, deren Abschluß wir bald erwarten dürfen, bemüht sich um Beantwortung dieser Frage.

Aber auch andere Anzeichen deuten darauf hin, daß die westliche Kultur sich wieder auf ihre Aktiva besinnt. Der Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit, der im Mai dieses Jahres in Paris tagen soll, kann eine solche Selbstbesinnung fördern. Die Kulturpanik der Gegenwart trägt zweifellos die Züge einer Nervenkrise an sich (unbeschadet aller ernstzunehmenden Bedrohungen). Wer die Herrschaft über seine «Nerven» verliert, ist bereit, alles verloren zu geben und weiß auch durchaus solide Werte nicht mehr einzuschätzen. Wir Deutsche sind dazu mehr geneigt als andere Völker. Hölderlin sagt einmal: «Gewinn und Verlust wäget ein sinniges Haupt.» Aber diese solide Buchführung ist uns in geistigen Dingen seit Generationen abhanden gekommen. Die Umwertung aller Werte hat bei uns manchmal die Formen eines sinnlosen Ausverkaufs angenommen. Es ist bezeichnend, daß Borchardt vor einem Vierteljahrhundert für eine lyrische Blütenlese den Titel Ewiger Vorrat deutscher Poesie (dritte Auflage 1951 bei Rütten und Loening) gewählt hat: als Hinweis auf unverlierbaren Bestand. Die Selbstpreisgabe der deutschen Bildung, deren erste Symptome mit dem «Jungen Deutschland» der 1830er Jahre einsetzten, ist das geistige Gegenstück zur Selbstpreisgabe des deutschen Bürgertums, die sich schließlich in der Barbarei des Hitler-Regimes überstürzte. Als Teilausdruck jener Bildungskatastrophe muß auch der Verfall der literarischen Kritik in Deutschland angesehen werden.

Times Literary Supplement

Ein lehrreiches Gegenbeispiel bietet die Geschichte des Times Literary Supplement, das soeben seinen neunundfünfzigsten Jahrgang eröffnet. Die Nummer vom 18. Januar 1952 enthält einen Rückblick auf Entstehung und Geschichte des Blattes und eine Auswahl aus den Buchbesprechungen der letzten fünfzig Jahre. Wer das T. L. S. Jahre oder Jahrzehnte lang verfolgt hat, weiß, daß es das beste Rezensionsorgan der Alten und der Neuen Welt ist. Im Laufe eines halben Jahrhunderts hat es etwas von der Würde einer nationalen Institution angenommen, obwohl es eine private Gründung ist. Mittelbar verdankt es seine Entstehung dem Interesse des britischen Lesers für ausführliche Parlamentsberichte. Diese beanspruchten in der Times soviel Raum, daß während der Sitzungsperioden die Anzeigen neuer Bücher wochenlang liegenblieben. Als das Parlament am 16. Januar 1901 wieder einmal zusammentrat, entschloß sich die Redaktion der Times, für die Dauer der Tagung literarische Beilagen herauszugeben. Die erste erschien am 17. Januar. Das T. L. S. war also als saisonbedingter Notbehelf gedacht, der in den Parlamentsferien wieder entbehrlich werden würde. Aber als sie Ende März eintraten, hatte die Leitung des Weltblattes diese Planung vergessen. Die Beilage erschien weiter — weil sie übersehen worden war. Ihr Herausgeber fühlte sich offenbar nicht veranlaßt, die Zentrale darauf hinzuweisen. Und als diese sich darauf besann, ließ man das Literaturblatt weiter bestehen, weil inzwischen Inserate und Beifallsäußerungen eingegangen waren.

Ist diese Entstehungsgeschichte nicht im besten Sinne englisch? Es ging dem neuen Organ wie der kleinen Topsy in Onkel Toms Hütte, die behauptete, sie habe keine Eltern gehabt. Als man sie fragte, wer sie gemacht habe, sagte sie: «Wahrscheinlich bin ich gewachsen» (I spect I grow'd). Auch das T. L. S. wuchs und wuchs. Der Jahrgang 1902 zählte 392 Seiten, der von 1913 schon 620 Seiten, der von 1930 über 1100. Im Sommer 1914 war der Absatz des Blattes auf 44 000 Stück pro Nummer gestiegen. Eine solche Auflagenhöhe für ein rein literarisches Organ ist natürlich nur möglich, wenn es in der Sprache eines Weltreiches erscheint.

Das britische Empire hat heute seine politische Vormacht verloren, aber das Weltreich der englischen Sprache ist unerschüttert. Auch die Herausbildung einer amerikanischen Sondersprache für den Alltagsgebrauch, die Presse, den Roman ändert daran wenig. Das Spanische ist zwar nächst dem Englischen die meistgesprochene euro-amerikanische Sprache. Aber in Literatur und Wissenschaft kann es sich nicht entfernt mit der Produktivität des anglo-amerikanischen Sprachgebietes messen. Wer der literarischen und wissenschaftlichen Produktion des westlichen Kulturkreises folgen will, sieht sich heute wie vor fünfzig Jahren auf das T. L. S. angewiesen. Wenn es verschwände, wäre die Lücke nicht zu füllen.

Der Erfolg des Blattes beruht auf seiner Qualität. Es mußte allseitige Information mit hohem kritischen Niveau verbinden. «Von Anfang an wurde das Verfahren befolgt, nicht einen Stab von Mitarbeitern zu gruppieren, die die Arbeit unter sich aufteilten: vielmehr wurde aus der ganzen englisch-schreibenden Welt der beste Mann für jede Sonderaufgabe ausgesucht — wobei der «beste» natürlich nicht nur Kenntnisse über den Gegenstand bedeutete, sondern auch die Fähigkeit, einen Artikel zu schreiben, der an sich selbst gute Literatur wäre.» Die Redaktion sah ihre Aufgabe also nicht darin, einen «Standpunkt» zu vertreten, sondern darin, die bestmögliche Leistung zu erzielen. So wurden z. B., um ein Jahr herauszugreifen, 1919 über 150 Mitarbeiter herangezogen: nur 21 von ihnen gehörten dem Stabe der Times an: nur 15 steuerten mehr als 10 Artikel pro Person bei; und von diesen 15 waren nur noch 6 Mitglieder des Redaktionsstabes der Times. In demselben Jahr wurden Leitartikel von 28 verschiedenen Autoren verfaßt (darunter T. S. Eliot und Virginia Woolf). Diese Redaktionspolitik entspricht dem englischen Sinn für Qualität, aber auch dem gesunden Menschenverstand. Sie macht der Leitung des Blattes hohe Ehre. Ein Redaktionskomitee stellt eine Machtposition dar. Die Versuchung, von dieser Macht im Interesse bestimmter Personen oder Personenkreise Gebrauch zu machen, ist menschlich. Aber in einem Rezensionsorgan kann sie zur Verengung des Gesichtskreises, unter Umständen zur Protektionswirtschaft, führen. Die Redaktionspolitik des T. L. S. hat sich von solchen Schwächen reinzuhalten gewußt. Es zählt Fünfundzwanzigjährige zu seinen Mitarbeitern, aber auch Achtzigjährige. Es weiß, daß die Literatur «eine Gegenwart und eine Zukunft hat, aber auch eine Vergangenheit, die sie nicht vergessen darf». Es ist neuen Experimenten ebenso aufgeschlossen wie der Pflege der geistigen Erbgüter. Dadurch hat es traditionsbildend gewirkt und sich Autorität erworben.

★

Aber dieser Erfolg ist ebensosehr einem andern Grundsatz zu verdanken: alle Beiträge erscheinen anonym. Dieses Verfahren ist vielfach angegriffen worden, weil es nicht fair sei. Aber die Erfahrung lehrt, daß ein Kritiker, der nicht zeichnet, meist objektiver urteilt. Er hat es nicht nötig, den Leser durch seine Persönlichkeit zu beeindrucken. Er kann sich den Luxus erlauben, das zu sagen, was er wirklich denkt, anstatt das zu sagen, was das Publikum vielleicht von ihm erwartet. Er braucht aber auch nicht Rücksicht auf andere Kritiker und auf Schriftsteller zu nehmen, die er vielleicht kennt oder kennen lernen wird. Das sind die Beweggründe, die für diese Praxis ins Feld geführt werden. Dahinter dürfte aber auch das ungeschriebene Gesetz der englischen Gesellschaftssitte stehen, das die Zurschaustellung des Persönlichen verpönt.

Die vorliegende Jubiläumsnummer läßt erkennen, worauf der Ruf des Blattes bei Lesern und Forschern sich gründet: es ist «ein Führer zum Besten und eine Warnung vor dem Schlechtesten in der modernen Literatur». Wir könnten davon einiges lernen.

Le Meridional
Marseille, Dimanche
February 3

L'ORCHESTRE SYMPHONIQUE DE BOSTON VA VENIR EN FRANCE

Culture

L'orchestre symphonique de Boston donnera son premier concert en France le 6 mai à l'Opéra de Paris sous la direction de Charles Munch et dans le cadre de « L'Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle », vaste exposition internationale des arts qui doit se dérouler tout au long du mois de mai dans notre capitale sous l'égide du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture.

Cette formation qui ne comprend pas moins de cent quatre musiciens s'embarquera à destination de la France le 27 avril à bord de l'Ile de France (pour se plier aux dates de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, la French Line n'a pas hésité à modifier les siennes).

L'un de ces concerts sera consacré aux œuvres de musiciens français contemporains. Parmi les autres projets de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, citons notamment la Cinquième Symphonie de Honegger, une ouverture d'un compositeur américain, Samuel Barber, et diverses œuvres de Ravel et de Debussy.

Après les concerts donnés à Paris, l'orchestre symphonique de Boston ira à Strasbourg, ville natale de Charles Munch, en Hollande, Belgique, Angleterre et en Allemagne où il jouera pour les troupes d'occupation américaines.

Solinger Tageblatt

12 FEV 1952

Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit

Im Mai findet in Paris ein großer Kongreß für die Freiheit der Kultur statt, an welchem bedeutendste Kulturträger unserer Zeit teilnehmen werden. Jacques Maritain, Bertrand Russell, Benedetto Croce, John Dewey und Salvador de Madariaga sind die Ehrenpräsidenten der Veranstaltungen, die vom Sekretär Nicolas Nabokov organisiert werden. Als Zentrum dient das Théâtre des Champs Elysées. Der Kongreß bezweckt, die Absichten und Ziele des Künstlers und des Kunstwerkes des 20. Jahrhunderts abzustecken, und dabei die Freiheit des Abendlandes unter Beweis zu stellen. Es soll auf den Gebieten der Musik, der Oper, des Theaters, des Balletts, der Malerei, der Literatur und der Philosophie gezeigt werden, welche Werte in den ersten fünfzig Jahren des neuen Jahrhunderts geschaffen wurden. Im Zentrum der musikalischen Veranstaltungen steht das Werk und die persönliche Anwesenheit Igor Strawinskys. Strawinsky wird mit dem Bostoner Philharmonischen Orchester mehrere Konzerte geben und das Newyork City-Ballet vermittelt einen Ballett-Abend unter der Leitung von Georges Balanchine mit Werken von Strawinsky. Die Oper von Wien bringt Alban Berg's „Wozzeck" zur Darstellung. Im Théâtre des Champs Elysées gastieren folgende Orchester: Wiener Philharmoniker, Hallé Orchestra Manchester, Chor und Orchester der Santa Cecilia in Rom, die Chöre von St. Guillaume in Straßburg und Sheffield, das Rias-Sinfonie-Orchester Berlin, das Orchestre de la Suisse romande, das Orchestre du Conservatoire und das Orchestre National von Paris. Als Dirigenten wirken mit: Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Bruno Walter, Sir John Barbirolli, Igor Markevitch, Ferenc Fricsay, Ernest Ansermet, Fritz Münch und Carl Boehm. Eine Negertruppe wird Gertrude Steins und Virgile Thompsons Oper „Vier Heilige" (1934) zur Aufführung bringen.

Die Londoner Covent Garden Opera gastiert am 25. und 26. Mai unter der Leitung von Benjamin Britten. Als kleinere Opern sind Puccinis „Ginni Schicci", Federico Garcia Lorcas „Dom Pirlipiplim" und Gian-Carlo Menottis neue Fernseh-Oper geplant. Balanchine wird die Choreographie von zwei an Georges Auric und Henri Sauget vergebene neue Ballette besorgen. Eine Theatertruppe von Musikstudierenden der Konservatorien von Paris, Madrid, London und Wien werden die Opern von Puccini, Lorca und Menotti auch in der Provinz zur Aufführung bringen. Die Pariser Opéra nimmt auf Initiative des Direktors Lehmann neuere Werke wieder auf (Pelléas et Mélisande, L'Enfant et les fortilèges, Ariane et Barbe-Bleue), Antigone (von Honegger) und Salome (von Richard Strauß).

Für die Literatur und die Philosophie sind zwölf Sitzungen mit Debatten vorgesehen. Am „runden Tisch" werden Dichter und Philosophen aller Länder über das Hauptthema der Veranstaltung diskutieren: T. S. Eliot, Karl Jaspers, Rosamond Lehmann, Martin Heidegger, Aldous Huxley, Graham Greene, John Dos Passos, Blaise Cendrars, Jean Cassous, Albert Camus, Raymond Aron, Fr. Mauriac, Jean Paul Sartre, Ignazio Silone, Arnold Tynbee, Richard Wright u. a.

Im Musée d'Art Moderne wird eine repräsentative Ausstellung von Werken aus Privatsammlungen und Museen Europas und Amerikas einen Querschnitt durch die moderne bildende Kunst vermitteln. James Swence, René Huyghe und André Malraux haben sich als Deuter der Werke zur Verfügung gestellt und werden dem Publikum in einem Sondersaal das Wesen der modernen Malerei und Plastik erläutern. Die Veranstaltungen dürften dazu berufen sein, über die universellen Werte der modernen Kunst Aufschluß und Rechenschaft zu geben. Der Kongreß soll auch den Künstlern jenseits des „Eisernen Vorhanges" die Bedeutung des künstlerischen Schaffens in der Freiheit vor Augen [illegible]ten (Arts, Paris).

MANNHEIMER MORGEN

15 FEV 1952

Werke des zwanzigsten Jahrhunderts

Eine internationale Kundgebung in Paris

Der Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit bereitet in Paris eine große internationale Kundgebung vor, die den „Werken des zwanzigsten Jahrhunderts" gewidmet sein soll und die in der Zeit zwischen dem 28. April und dem 31. Mai 1952 im Pariser Theater der Champs Elysées stattfinden wird. Die Veranstalter gehen dabei von der Idee aus, daß es gerade heute, in einer Zeit, in der eine zerstörerische Propaganda die Vitalität und die schöpferische Kraft unserer westlichen Kultur in Frage stellen will, von hoher Bedeutung ist, den Menschen und vor allem auch den jungen Künstlern unserer Generation Gelegenheit zu geben, einen Gesamtüberblick über die großen Schöpfungen der letzten fünfzig Jahre zu gewinnen, um dadurch der universellen Werte einer Kultur, die nur in der Freiheit entstehen konnte, voll bewußt zu werden. Diese Kundgebung wird sowohl der Schöpfungen der Musik wie des Theaters oder der Malerei, und ebenso den wichtigsten Strömungen der Literatur und der Philosophie Rechnung tragen.

Das umfangreiche musikalische Programm sieht die Mitwirkung von Igor Strawinsky vor, der selbst einige seiner neuesten Kompositionen dirigieren wird. Das Philharmonische Orchester von Boston wird mehrere Konzerte geben. Aus den Vereinigten Staten kommt auch das New York City-Ballett unter Leitung von George Balachine nach Paris. Die Oper von Wien wird erstmalig Alban Bergs Oper „Wozzek" in Paris vorstellen. Auch werden die Wiener Philharmoniker nach Paris kommen, weiter die Chöre und das Orchester der römischen Sankt Cäcilien Akademie und noch viele andere berühmte Orchester, ebenso wie die hervorragendsten Dirigenten der Welt. Aus Deutschland wird das Symphonie-Orchester des Berliner RIAS-Funks erwartet. Eine amerikanische Negertruppe wird die Oper Virgile Thompsons und Gertrude Steins „Vier Heilige in drei Akten", die 1934 in New York großen Erfolg hatte, zeigen.

Auf dem Gebiet der Literatur und der Philosophie sind 12 große Vortragsdebatten vorgesehen, zu denen Persönlichkeiten von Rang, wie T. S. Éliot, Karl Jaspers, Martin Heidegger, Aldous Huxley, Graham Greene, John Dos Passos, Jean-Paul Sartre, Ignazio Silone, Albert Camus, Richard Wright, Arnold Toynbee und viele andere eingeladen sind.

Gleichzeitig werden im Pariser Museum für Moderne Kunst 150 Meistergemälde, die zum großen Teil aus Privatsammlungen in Europa und den Vereinigten Staaten stammen, erstmalig einer größeren Oeffentlichkeit gezeigt werden, wobei Kunstkenner von Weltruf, wie zum Beispiel André Malraux, sich bereit erklärt haben, dem Publikum die großen Linien der modernen Kunst durch Vorträge nahezubringen. Die Vorbereitungen für diese wichtige künstlerische Manifestation werden vom Generalsekretär des Kongresses für Kulturelle Freiheit, Nikolas Nabokov, in die Wege geleitet.

Hubert v. Ranke

10 FÉVRIER 195[illegible]

DE PAR LE MONDE...

— Ernest Fornairon prépare, en collaboration avec François Bonnery, une suite d'études, Histoires de l'Histoire.

— Chez Fayard, paraissent : Les Grands Capétiens, par Auguste Bailly; Le Roi des sables, par Pierre Apesteguy.

— Le tome II des Petits Musées et Joyaux de l'Ile-de-France, par Ph. Lefrançois et P. Boussel, va sortir aux Ed. Inter-nationales.

— Chez Hachette, sortent : Lélia, ou Vie de George Sand, par A. Maurois; Louis XV, par P. Lafue; Les Suspects pendant la Révolution, par L. Jacob; Marie Tête d'Ange, par R. Christophe.

— Le dessinateur Lucien Laforge vient de mourir.

— La municipalité d'Eze a modernisé le vieux village, d'où protestations.

— Marcel Brion va publier chez Albin Michel un Léonard de Vinci; Alfred Colling, un Edgar Poë, et Pierre Benoit Le Prêtre Jean, roman.

— Jeanne Gauzy a reçu la commande de décoration d'une école.

— Charles Munch, qui avait été très malade, est entré en convalescence et dirigera, comme prévu, en mai, à Paris, l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston.

— M. Barreiro songerait à remonter une galerie.

COMBAT - PARIS

21 FEV 1952

Le programme européen de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston

On sait déjà depuis quelque temps que le « Boston Symphonic Orchestra » doit venir à Paris ce printemps. Voici son proramme :

6 MAI : à l'Opéra, sous la direction de Charles Munch (« Cinquième Symphonie » d'Arthur Honegger, « Daphnis et Chloé » de Maurice Ravel, ouverture de « L'Ecole du Scandale » de Samuel Barber, « Suite d'Amphion » d'Arthur Honegger, « Toccata » de Walter Piston, « La Mer » de Debussy).

8 MAI : au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous la direction de Pierre Monteux (« Fantasia » de Tallis, Seconde Suite de « Protée » de Darius Milhaud, « Troisième Symphonie » de William Schuman, « Rondes de Printemps » de Debussy, « Le Sacre du Printemps » de Stravinsky).

10 MAI : concert à La Haye.

11 MAI : concert à Amsterdam.

12 MAI : concert à Bruxelles.

17 MAI : concert à Strasbourg (ville natale de Charles Munch).

26 MAI : concert à Londres.

D'autres concerts sont également prévus en Italie et en Allemagne.

6 FÉ[illegible]

12 [illegible]

Münch à Paris

Au moment où nous mettons sous presse, nous apprenons une bonne nouvelle : Charles Münch viendra diriger à Paris l'Orchestre Symphonique de Paris, lors des concerts que celui-ci donnera sous le patronage du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture.

EN JUIN PROCHAIN, PATRICIA NEWAY

L'INCOMPARABLE CREATRICE DU "CONSUL"

CHANTERA "LA TOSCA" A L'OPÉRA

LA nouvelle est maintenant officielle : Patricia Neway, l'incomparable créatrice du Consul, chantera La Tosca en juin prochain sur la scène de l'Opéra.

Cet engagement — qui réjouira tous les amis de notre première scène lyrique — appelle un commentaire : il prouve que c'est toujours Paris, et Paris seul, qui donne à un artiste sa consécration définitive.

Née à Brooklyn, de parents américains — dont les ancêtres étaient les uns irlandais, les autres allemands, — Patricia Neway était encore à peu près inconnue quand Menotti la choisit pour chanter le rôle principal du Consul. Sans doute, le temps était loin déjà où elle se noircissait le visage pour paraître sur une scène de music-hall, plus loin encore celui où elle vendait des disques dans un grand magasin, mais elle était encore perdue dans la foule des choristes et des « petits rôles ». Sa création du Consul à Broadway fit d'elle une vedette, mais ne lui apporta pas de propositions intéressantes, et ses compatriotes ne voyaient pas encore en elle une artiste d'exception, une cantatrice « internationale », lorsqu'elle prit l'avion pour venir chanter la Consul à Paris.

Paris, à son tour, découvrit Patricia Neway, la presse célébra sa louange, Marcel Achard la proclamant « la plus grande tragédienne lyrique de l'époque », tandis que Sacha Guitry se contentait de dire qu'elle était « purement admirable ». Les critiques les plus enthousiastes de Broadway n'avaient « remué » personne. Le jugement de Paris, lui, provoqua des réactions heureuses, et c'est maintenant de tous les points du monde que la jeune artiste américaine reçoit des offres. Laurence Olivier l'invite à se rendre à Londres pour y jouer à ses côtés une comédie dramatique, elle est sollicitée par la Scala de Milan pour une série de représentations, et le Boston Symphony Orchestra, qui ne s'était point manifesté quand Patricia Neway chantait à New-York, lui demande de participer en soliste à plusieurs des concerts portés à son programme estival. Depuis Paris, Patricia Neway peut choisir.

Patricia Neway dans « Le Consul ».

Ses projets pour cet été sont déjà en grande partie arrêtés. Avant de l'applaudir en juin à l'Opéra, nous la retrouverons en mai au théâtre des Champs-Elysées où, dans le cadre des manifestations organisées par l'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle à l'occasion du congrès pour la liberté de la culture, nous la verrons dans Œdipe-Roi (sous la direction de Stravinsky et dans une mise en scène de Cocteau), et dans l'Erwachtung d'Arnold Schœnberg (dans lequel elle réalise le tour de force de rester seule en scène durant vingt-cinq minutes). En juillet, elle sera au festival d'Aix-en-Provence, où elle chantera Iphigénie en Tauride.

Et, entre temps, elle continuera d'être, sur différentes scènes, l'inoubliable Magda du Consul.

Ce qui laisse peu d'espoir, au moins pour cette année, à Laurence Olivier et au Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Musique et radio

Paris FEV 1952

L'ORCHESTRE DE BOSTON A PARIS

C'est en mai prochain que le réputé orchestre de Boston (104 exécutants) donnera plusieurs concerts à Paris, sous la direction de Charles Munch et de Pierre Monteux. D'autres concerts sont prévus à Bordeaux et Strasbourg avant une tournée en Suisse, Belgique, Hollande et Autriche. Rappelons que depuis 1949 Ch. Munch est devenu le directeur musical de cet orchestre.

[265]

Solinger Tageblatt

12 FEV 1952

161

Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit

Im Mai findet in Paris ein großer Kongreß für die Freiheit der Kultur statt, an welchem bedeutendste Kulturträger unserer Zeit teilnehmen werden. Jacques Maritain, Bertrand Russell, Benedetto Croce, John Dewey und Salvador de Madariaga sind die Ehrenpräsidenten der Veranstaltungen, die vom Sekretär Nicolas Nabokov organisiert werden. Als Zentrum dient das Théâtre des Champs Elysées. Der Kongreß bezweckt, die Absichten und Ziele des Künstlers und des Kunstwerkes des 20. Jahrhunderts abzustecken, und dabei die Freiheit des Abendlandes unter Beweis zu stellen. Es soll auf den Gebieten der Musik, der Oper, des Theaters, des Balletts, der Malerei, der Literatur und der Philosophie gezeigt werden, welche Werte in den ersten fünfzig Jahren des neuen Jahrhunderts geschaffen wurden. Im Zentrum der musikalischen Veranstaltungen steht das Werk und die persönliche Anwesenheit Igor Strawinskys. Strawinsky wird mit dem Bostoner Philharmonischen Orchester mehrere Konzerte geben und das Newyork City-Ballet vermittelt einen Ballett-Abend unter der Leitung von Georges Balanchine mit Werken von Strawinsky. Die Oper von Wien bringt Alban Berg's „Wozzeck" zur Darstellung. Im Théâtre des Champs Elysées gastieren folgende Orchester: Wiener Philharmoniker, Hallé Orchestra Manchester, Chor und Orchester der Santa Cecilia in Rom, die Chöre von St. Guillaume in Straßburg und Sheffield, das Rias-Sinfonie-Orchester Berlin, das Orchestre de la Suisse romande, das Orchestre du Conservatoire und das Orchestre National von Paris. Als Dirigenten wirken mit: Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Bruno Walter, Sir John Barbirolli, Igor Markevitch, Ferenc Fricsay, Ernest Ansermet, Fritz Münch und Carl Boehm. Eine Negertruppe wird Gertrude Steins und Virgile Thompsons Oper „Vier Heilige" (1934) zur Aufführung bringen.

Die Londoner Covent Garden Opera gastiert am 25. und 26. Mai unter der Leitung von Benjamin Britten. Als kleinere Opern sind Puccinis „Ginni Schicci", Federico Garcia Lorcas „Dom Pirlipiplim" und Gian-Carlo Menottis neue Fernseh-Oper geplant. Balanchine wird die Choreographie von zwei an Georges Auric und Henri Sauget vergebene neue Ballette besorgen. Eine Theatertruppe von Musikstudierenden der Konservatorien von Paris, Madrid, London und Wien werden die Opern von Puccini, Lorca und Menotti auch in der Provinz zur Aufführung bringen. Die Pariser Opéra nimmt auf Initiative des Direktors Lehmann neuere Werke wieder auf (Pelléas et Mélisande, L'Enfant et les fortilèges, Ariane et Barbe-Bleue), Antigone (von Honegger) und Salome (von Richard Strauß).

Für die Literatur und die Philosophie sind zwölf Sitzungen mit Debatten vorgesehen. Am „runden Tisch" werden Dichter und Philosophen aller Länder über das Hauptthema der Veranstaltung diskutieren: T. S. Eliot, Karl Jaspers, Rosamond Lehmann, Martin Heidegger, Aldous Huxley, Graham Greene, John Dos Passos, Blaise Cendrars, Jean Cassous, Albert Camus, Raymond Aron, Fr. Mauriac, Jean Paul Sartre, Ignazio Silone, Arnold Tynbee, Richard Wright u. a.

Im Musée d'Art Moderne wird eine repräsentative Ausstellung von Werken aus Privatsammlungen und Museen Europas und Amerikas einen Querschnitt durch die moderne bildende Kunst vermitteln. James Swence, René Huyghe und André Malraux haben sich als Deuter der Werke zur Verfügung gestellt und werden dem Publikum in einem Sondersaal das Wesen der modernen Malerei und Plastik erläutern. Die Veranstaltungen dürften dazu berufen sein, über die universellen Werte der modernen Kunst Aufschluß und Rechenschaft zu geben. Der Kongreß soll auch den Künstlern jenseits des „Eisernen Vorhanges" die Bedeutung des künstlerischen Schaffens in der Freiheit vor Augen führen (Arts, Paris).

OPERA
100, Rue Richelieu - 2e

6 FÉVRIER 1952

LE PONT DES ARTS
82, Avenue Parmentier - XIe

12 FÉVRIER 1952

10 FÉVRIER 1952

DE PAR LE MONDE...

— Ernest Fornairon prépare, en collaboration avec François Bonnery, une suite d'études, Histoires de l'Histoire.

— Chez Fayard, paraissent : Les Grands Capétiens, par Auguste Bailly; Le Roi des sables, par Pierre Apesteguy.

— Le tome II des Petits Musées et Joyaux de l'Ile-de-France, par Ph. Lefrançois et P. Boussel, va sortir aux Ed. Inter-nationales.

— Chez Hachette, sortent : Lélia, ou Vie de George Sand, par A. Maurois; Louis XV, par P. Lafue; Les Suspects pendant la Révolution, par L. Jacob; Marie Tête d'Ange, par R. Christophe.

— Le dessinateur Lucien Laforge vient de mourir.

— La municipalité d'Eze a modernisé le vieux village, d'où protestations.

— Marcel Brion va publier chez Albin Michel un Léonard de Vinci; Alfred Colling, un Edgar Poë, et Pierre Benoit Le Prêtre Jean, roman.

— Jeanne Gauzy a reçu la commande de décoration d'une école.

— Charles Munch, qui avait été très malade, est entré en convalescence et dirigera, comme prévu, en mai, à Paris, l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston.

— M. Barreiro songerait à remonter une galerie.

Münch à Paris

Au moment où nous mettons sous presse, nous apprenons une bonne nouvelle : Charles Münch viendra diriger à Paris l'Orchestre Symphonique de Paris, lors des concerts que celui-ci donnera sous le patronage du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture.

CE MATIN
6, Boul. Poissonnière, 2e

12 FÉVRIER

MANNHEIMER MORGEN

15 FEV 1952

Werke des zwanzigsten Jahrhunderts

Eine internationale Kundgebung in Paris

Der Kongreß für kulturelle Freiheit bereitet in Paris eine große internationale Kundgebung vor, die den „Werken des zwanzigsten Jahrhunderts" gewidmet sein soll und die in der Zeit zwischen dem 28. April und dem 31. Mai 1952 im Pariser Theater der Champs Elysées stattfinden wird. Die Veranstalter gehen dabei von der Idee aus, daß es gerade heute, in einer Zeit, in der eine zerstörerische Propaganda die Vitalität und die schöpferische Kraft unserer westlichen Kultur in Frage stellen will, von hoher Bedeutung ist, den Menschen und vor allem auch den jungen Künstlern unserer Generation Gelegenheit zu geben, einen Gesamtüberblick über die großen Schöpfungen der letzten fünfzig Jahre zu gewinnen, um dadurch der universellen Werte einer Kultur, die nur in der Freiheit entstehen konnte, voll bewußt zu werden.

Diese Kundgebung wird sowohl der Schöpfungen der Musik wie des Theaters oder der Malerei, und ebenso den wichtigsten Strömungen der Literatur und der Philosophie Rechnung tragen.

Das umfangreiche musikalische Programm sieht die Mitwirkung von Igor Strawinsky vor, der selbst einige seiner neuesten Kompositionen dirigieren wird. Das Philharmonische Orchester von Boston wird mehrere Konzerte geben. Aus den Vereinigten Staten kommt auch das New York City-Ballett unter Leitung von George Balachine nach Paris. Die Oper von Wien wird erstmalig Alban Bergs Oper „Wozek" in Paris vorstellen. Auch werden die Wiener Philharmoniker nach Paris kommen, weiter die Chöre und das Orchester der römischen Sankt Cäcilien Akademie und noch viele andere berühmte Orchester, ebenso wie die hervorragendsten Dirigenten der Welt. Aus Deutschland wird das Symphonie-Orchester des Berliner RIAS-Funks erwartet. Eine amerikanische Negertruppe wird die Oper Virgile Thompsons und Gertrude Steins „Vier Heilige in drei Akten", die 1934 in New York großen Erfolg hatte, zeigen.

Auf dem Gebiet der Literatur und der Philosophie sind 12 große Vortragsdebatten vorgesehen, zu denen Persönlichkeiten von Rang, wie T. S. Éliot, Karl Jaspers, Martin Heidegger, Aldous Huxley, Graham Greene, John Dos Passos, Jean-Paul Sartre, Ignazio Silone, Albert Camus, Richard Wright, Arnold Toynbee und viele andere eingeladen sind.

Gleichzeitig werden im Pariser Museum für Moderne Kunst 150 Meistergemälde, die zum großen Teil aus Privatsammlungen in Europa und den Vereinigten Staaten stammen, erstmalig einer größeren Oeffentlichkeit gezeigt werden, wobei Kunstkenner von Weltruf, wie zum Beispiel André Malraux, sich bereit erklärt haben, dem Publikum die großen Linien der modernen Kunst durch Vorträge nahezubringen. Die Vorbereitungen für diese wichtige künstlerische Manifestation werden vom Generalsekretär des Kongresses für Kulturelle Freiheit, Nikolas Nabosov, in die Wege geleitet.

Hubert v. Ranke

EN JUIN PROCHAIN, PATRICIA NEWAY
L'INCOMPARABLE CRÉATRICE DU "CONSUL"
CHANTERA "LA TOSCA" A L'OPÉRA

LA nouvelle est maintenant officielle : Patricia Neway, l'incomparable créatrice du Consul, chantera La Tosca en juin prochain sur la scène de l'Opéra.

Cet engagement — qui réjouira tous les amis de notre première scène lyrique — appelle un commentaire : il prouve que c'est toujours Paris, et Paris seul, qui donne à un artiste sa consécration définitive.

Née à Brooklyn, de parents américains — dont les ancêtres étaient les uns irlandais, les autres allemands, — Patricia Neway était encore à peu près inconnue quand Menotti la choisit pour chanter le rôle principal du Consul. Sans doute, le temps était loin déjà où elle se noircissait le visage pour paraître sur une scène de music-hall, plus loin encore celui où elle vendait des disques dans un grand magasin, mais elle était encore perdue dans la foule des choristes et des « petits rôles ». Sa création du Consul à Broadway fit d'elle une vedette, mais ne lui apporta pas de propositions intéressantes, et ses compatriotes ne voyaient pas encore en elle une artiste d'exception, une cantatrice internationale », lorsqu'elle prit l'avion pour venir chanter le Consul à Paris.

Paris, le soir [illegible], découvrit Patricia Neway, la presse célébra sa louange, Marcel Achard la proclamant « la plus grande tragédienne lyrique de l'époque », tandis que Sacha Guitry se contentait de dire qu'elle était « purement admirable ». Les critiques les plus enthousiastes de Broadway n'avaient « remué » personne. Le jugement de Paris, lui, provoqua des réactions heureuses, et c'est maintenant de tous les points du monde que la jeune artiste américaine reçoit des offres. Laurence Olivier l'invite à se rendre à Londres pour y jouer à ses côtés une comédie dramatique, elle est sollicitée par la Scala de Milan pour une série de représentations, et le Boston Symphony Orchestra, qui ne s'était point manifesté quand Patricia Neway chantait à New-York, lui demande de participer en soliste à plusieurs des concerts portés à son programme estival. Depuis Paris, Patricia Neway peut choisir.

Patricia Neway dans « Le Consul ».

Ses projets pour cet été sont déjà en grande partie arrêtés. Avant de l'applaudir en juin à l'Opéra, nous la retrouverons en mai au théâtre des Champs-Elysées où, dans le cadre des manifestations organisées par l'Œuvre du XXe siècle à l'occasion du congrès pour la liberté de la culture, nous la verrons dans Œdipe-Roi (sous la direction de Stravinsky et dans une mise en scène de Cocteau), et dans l'Erwachtung d'Arnold Schœnberg (dans lequel elle réalise le tour de force de rester seule en scène durant vingt-cinq minutes). En juillet, elle sera au festival d'Aix-en-Provence, où elle chantera Iphigénie en Tauride.

Et, entre temps, elle continuera d'être, sur différentes scènes, l'inoubliable Magda du Consul.

Ce qui laisse peu d'espoir, au moins pour cette année, à Laurence Olivier et au Boston Symphony Orchestra.

COMBAT - PARIS

21 FEV 1952

161

Le programme européen de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston

On sait déjà depuis quelque temps que le « Boston Symphonic Orchestra » doit venir à Paris ce printemps. Voici son proramme :

6 MAI : à l'Opéra, sous la direction de Charles Munch (« Cinquième Symphonie » d'Arthur Honegger, « Daphnis et Chloé » de Maurice Ravel, ouverture de « L'Ecole du Scandale » de Samuel Barber, « Suite d'Amphion » d'Arthur Honegger, « Toccata » de Walter Piston, « La Mer » de Debussy).

8 MAI : au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous la direction de Pierre Monteux (« Fantasia » de Tallis, Seconde Suite de « Protée » de Darius Milhaud, « Troisième Symphonie » de William Schuman, « Rondes de Printemps » de Débussy, « Le Sacre du Printemps » de Stravinsky).

10 MAI : concert à La Haye.

11 MAI : concert à Amsterdam.

12 MAI : concert à Bruxelles.

17 MAI : concert à Strasbourg (ville natale de Charles Munch).

26 MAI : concert à Londres.

D'autres concerts sont également prévus en Italie et en Allemagne.

Musique et Radio
Paris FEV 1952

L'ORCHESTRE DE BOSTON A PARIS

C'est en mai prochain que le réputé orchestre de Boston (104 exécutants) donnera plusieurs concerts à Paris, sous la direction de Charles Munch et de Pierre Monteux. D'autres concerts sont prévus à Bordeaux et Strasbourg avant une tournée en Suisse, Belgique, Hollande et Autriche. Rappelons que depuis 1949 Ch. Munch est devenu le directeur musical de cet orchestre.

[265]

Gazzetta del Mezzogiorno, Bari
12 FEV 1952

IN MAGGIO A PARIGI

Un grande Festival internazionale e convegno di artisti e intellettuali

Conferenza di Croce - La partecipazione dell'Orchestra di S. Cecilia

Parigi, 11 febbraio.

Nel prossimo mese di maggio si svolgerà a Parigi un Festival internazionale per «mostrare al mondo ciò che la mente libera dell'uomo ha conquistato nella prima metà del secolo XX».

Il Festival è stato organizzato dal Congresso internazionale per la libertà culturale diretto da Nicolas Nabakov, Segretario generale. A Parigi saranno esibiti i massimi capolavori dell'arte moderna, in tutti i campi, dalla sinfonia, dall'opera, dal balletto, al dramma, alla filosofia, all'arte, alla letteratura e così via. Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Igor Strawinsky e Bruno Walter dirigeranno famose orchestre, come la Boston Symphony Orchestra, la Vienna State Opera, la New York City Ballet Company e l'Orchestra del settore occidentale di Berlino. Le prime audizioni di opere raramente eseguite come di lavori classificati «decadenti» nell'Europa Orientale, saranno anch'esse eseguite.

Il concerto inaugurale avrà luogo il 29 aprile nella Chiesa di San Rocco di Parigi, ove il «St. Guillaume Chorus» di Strasburgo canterà il Magnificat di Bach, lo Stabat Mater di Francis Poulenc. Il 30 aprile, e nelle tre serate successive seguirà l'opera Wozzeck di Alban Berg, eseguita dal complesso dell'Opera di Vienna. L'Orchestra del Conservatorio Francese, diretta da Bruno Walter, presenterà Il Canto della Terra di Mahler, il Don Juan di Richard Strauss e Il pomeriggio di un Fauno di Debussy, il 5 maggio.

La Boston Symphony Orchestra, per la prima volta in Europa, con Charles Munch e Pierre Monteux come direttori, darà tre concerti. Il primo il 6 maggio, diretto da Charles Munch all'Opera di Parigi, il secondo diretto da Pierre Monteux, l'8 maggio al teatro di Champs Elysées. La terza rappresentazione avrà luogo il 21 maggio. La quarta esecuzione della Compagnia del Balletto di New York sotto la direzione di George Balanchine, avrà luogo dal 10 al 3 maggio con balletti di Stravinsky, come Apollo, l'Uccello di Fuoco, Jeux de Cartes, Orfeo, ecc. con le coreografie del ballerino americano Jerome Kobbins. Nel programma della compagnia si trovano anche Il valzer di Ravel, il Jinx di Benjamin Britten, I quattro temperamenti di Hindemith, il Eulenspiegel di Richard Strauss, il Figlio Prodigo di Prokofiev.

Due nuovi balletti, scritti appositamente per l'occasione dai compositori francesi Georges Auric e Henry Suaget saranno eseguiti il 14 ed il 15 maggio. Per il 16 maggio sarà eseguito l'Edipo Re, balletto di Igor Strawinsky narrato da Jean Cocteau, e costituirà dopo 13 anni la prima apparizione di Strawinsky davanti al pubblico francese. La stessa esecuzione avrà luogo il 19 maggio. Il 17 ed il 18 maggio saranno riservati all'orchestra della Suisse Romande, diretta da Ernest Ansermet, con lavori di Frank Martin, Debussy Honegger, Hindemith e Ravel. L'orchestra del settore occidentale di Berlino, eseguirà il 23 ed il 24 maggio opere di Bela Bartok, e due opere russe, come la Sesta Sinfonia di Prokoviev e Lady Macbeth of Mzensk di Shostakovich, ambedue criticato nell'Unione Sovietica come opere borghesi e decadenti.

La famosa Orchestra romana di «Santa Cecilia» sarà ascoltata a Parigi il 27 ed il 29 maggio con esecuzioni di opere di Strawinsky, Dallapiccola, Malipiero ed altri compositori italiani. Il 1° giugno avrà luogo il gran finale, e cioè un concerto eseguito a Palais de Chaillot sotto la direzione di Leopold Stokowsky.

Tutti questi concerti avranno luogo di sera, ma anche nel corso della giornata vi saranno interessanti manifestazioni. Infatti James John Sweeney, noto esperto d'arte, sta preparando una importante mostra di quadri, nella quale saranno presenti, tutte le attuali correnti artistiche. Saranno tenute, inoltre, conferenze e discussioni all'Università di Parigi, dai maggiori poeti, scrittori e filosofi del tempo, tra cui Benedetto Croce, John Dewey, Karl Jaspers, Salvator de Madariaga e Bertrand Russel. Sarà svolto, infine, anche un programma di drammi, films e mostre fotografiche.

12 FEV 1952

CHARLES MUNCH, RÉTABLI, SERA A PARIS EN MAI

Il n'y a rien à craindre : Charles Munch dirigera lui-même l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston lorsqu'il se produira à Paris, dans le cadre de « L'Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle », vaste exposition des arts organisée et patronnée par le Congrès pour la liberté de la Culture.

De Boston était parvenue, il y a plusieurs semaines, la nouvelle alarmante que le célèbre chef d'orchestre était sérieusement souffrant et que ses médecins lui avaient prescrit un repos complet. Il est maintenant entré dans la phase rassurante de la convalescence et, de New-York, où il habite momentanément, il a fait savoir que les progrès de son état de santé étaient très satisfaisants. Ce n'est plus qu'une question de jours. Bien avant de venir présenter le plus célèbre orchestre d'Amérique, dont il est depuis deux ans le chef d'orchestre, Charles Munch sera complètement rétabli.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 · TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Karlstads-Tidningen
Liberal
14 FEB 1952
/ 19

ARLSTADS-TIDNINGEN

Mästerverk i tjugonde århundradet

DEN INTERNATIONELLA festival för olika konstarter, som kommer att hållas i Paris i maj i år, kommer för första gången sedan kriget att återuppliva den stora, traditionella vårsäsongen i Paris och fyllas med nya uppförander av balett och musik i Diaghileffs anda. För första gången på många år har man lyckats samla många av Diaghileffs egna medarbetare, och de kommer att tillsammans medverka i festivalen.

"Mästerverk i Tjugonde Århundradet" anordnas av Kommittén för Kulturell Frihet och bland sina medverkande har den bl. a. Igor Stravinsky och George Balanchine som arbetade tillsammans med Diakhileff i många av hans mest berömda baletter; Pierre Monteux, som dirigerade det första framförandet av "Våroffer", Nicolas Nabokov — direktören för festivalen — som komponerade sin första balettmusik för Diaghileff.

Bland dem som redan befinner sig i Paris och väntar på sina gamla vänner är Georges Auric och Henri Sauguet, vilka båda har komponerat nya baletter för festivalen — baletter som skall dansas av the New York City Ballet i koreografi av Balanshine. Båda har tidigare skrivit balettmusik för Diaghileff. Jean Cocteau, som förr i tiden arbetade tillsammans med Stravinsky och Diaghileff, kommer i vår att vara berättaren i "Oedipus Rex". Stravinsky kommer själv att dirigera verket.

"Oedipus Rex" fick sitt första uppförande med Cocteau och Stravinsky i Paris år 1927, men då försökte man inte att ge ett fullständigt scenuppförande. Sedan dess har de väntat på ett lämpligt tillfälle att få ge verket så som det ursprungligen skrevs, d. v. s. med en 80-manna manskör, orkester, solister, berättare och en dansör som pantomimiskt framställer Oedipus levnad. Det stora problemet var hur man skulle få in alla de nödvändiga elementen på en scen. Det problemet har Jean Cocteau löst för de två föreställningarna i maj under "Mästerverk i Tjugonde Århundradet".

DET ÄR signifikativt att dessa Diaghileffs gamla medarbetare återförenas i vår inom ramen för denna unika demonstration av det bästa vårt århundrade kan visa upp inom olika konstarter, och som grundar sig på initiativtagarnas — d. v. s. Kommittén för Kulturell Frihet — starka tro på att det är nödvändigt att då och då påminna om och på nytt demonstrera de värden vår kultur skapat och äger för att hindra dem från att bli misskända till följd av politiska attacker.

Kommittén är en organisation av västerländska intellektuella, representerande alla politiska åskådningar, o. vilka alla har det gemensamt att de står i stark opposion till totalitära kontroller över människans skaparkraft. De har tagit initiativet till denna festival som ett svar på den totalitära kritiken, som påstår att den västerländska kulturen är dekadent formalistisk och att den inte längre kan producera något av värde.

Många av de verk, som kommer att framföras under festivalen, kom till i Paris under decenniet närmast efter det första världskriget.

Samtliga de verk, som skall presenteras under majfestivalen, har skapats under tjugonde århundradet, en period som Kommittén anser varit en tid av ovanligt rik produktivitet och av stora framsteg ifråga om skapandet av nya konstriktningar och ifråga om utvecklingen av de gamla. Festivalen vill försöka bevisa att sådana framsteg inom olika konstarter endast kan förekomma i ett klimat av fullkomlig intellektuell frihet sådan som vår tids skapande konstnärer har åtnjutit i den västerländska civilisationen

FESTIVALEN kommer att samla till Paris några av världens finaste musikaliska institutioner, t. ex. Wiens statsopera och filharmoniska orkester i två framföranden av Alban Bergs "Wozzeck", Bostons symfoniorkester med Charles Münch och Pierre Monteux som dirigerar, RIAS-orkestern från Berlin, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under ledning av Ernest Ansermet samt Paris egen Konservatorieorkester och Orchestre National under Bruno Walter. Det är möjligt att Santa Ceciliaakademins i Rom kör och orkester också kommer att deltaga.

Igor Stravinsky återvänder till Paris för första gången på 13 år för att dirigera sina egna verk. Han kommer att leda två föreställningar av "Oedipus Rex", sin balett "Eldfågeln", "Orpheus" och "Apollo" när the New York City Ballet dansar. Denna balett, som har Georg Balanshine till konstnärlig ledare, kommer också att dansa två nya verk av Sauguet och Auric.

Bland andra verk, som the New York City Ballet uppför, märks Hindemiths "Fyra temperament", Ravel's "La Valse" o. Richard Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel".

Planer håller också på att göras upp för olika serier med eftermiddagsföreläsningar av den fria världens mest framstående författare och filosofer. En av dessa serier kommer att ägnas pressfriheten — den frihet som först kommer att berövas oss i händelse av anfall på våra kulturella institutioner.

Andra planer rör framföranden i Paris av vårt århundrades största dramatiska verk med deltagande av de främsta personligheterna inom de dramatiska konsterna. Centrum för musik- och teaterfestivalen blir Théatre des Camps-Elysées.

I samband med festivalen säger Nicolas Nabokov att "den fritt skapande fantasien hos poeter, målare och kompositörer har frambragt en rik ström av mästerverk inom alla konstarter".

"MEN SAMTIDIGT", säger han, "har detta halva århundrade som en biprodukt av politiska omvälvningar fått vara vittne till en häftig reaktion mot den fria, skapande anden. Starka politiska rörelser har uppkommit, vilka försökt att undertrycka fria uttryck för de finaste skapande begåvningar".

"Stränga och inskränkande riktlinjer och lagar har försökt omforma konstnären till ett instrument för staten, ett instrument vars enda berättigande skulle vara att producera verk som kunde tillfredsställa de totalitära regimernas rent nyttighetsmässiga behov".

"De har försökt — och i viss utsträckning har de också lyckats — att i våra sinnen så tvivel på värdet, styrkan och livskraften i vår västerländska kultur".

Det är för att stilla dessa tvivel och för att komma med ett övertygande svar på denna propaganda, påpekar M. Nabokov, som Kommittén för Kulturell Frihet beslutat presentera festivalen "Mästerverk i Tjugonde Århundradet".

T. des C.-E.

La Gazetta del Mezzogiorno, Bari
12 FEV 1952

IN MAGGIO A PARIGI

Un grande Festival internazionale e convegno di artisti e intellettuali

Conferenza di Croce - La partecipazione dell'Orchestra di S. Cecilia

Parigi, 11 febbraio.

Nel prossimo mese di maggio si svolgerà a Parigi un Festival internazionale per «mostrare al mondo ciò che la mente libera dell'uomo ha conquistato nella prima metà del secolo XX».

Il Festival è stato organizzato dal Congresso internazionale per la libertà culturale diretto da Nicolas Nabakov, Segretario generale. A Parigi saranno esibiti i massimi capolavori dell'arte moderna, in tutti i campi, dalla sinfonia, dall'opera, dal balletto, al dramma, alla filosofia, all'arte, alla letteratura e così via. Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Igor Strawinsky e Bruno Walter dirigeranno famose orchestre, come la Boston Symphony Orchestra, la Vienna State Opera, la New York City Ballet Company e l'Orchestra del settore occidentale di Berlino. Le prime audizioni di opere raramente eseguite come di lavori classificati «decadenti» nell'Europa Orientale, saranno anch'esse eseguite.

Il concerto inaugurale avrà luogo il 29 aprile nella Chiesa di San Rocco di Parigi, ove il «St. Guillaume Chorus» di Strasburgo canterà il Magnificat di Bach, lo Stabat Mater di Francis Poulenc. Il 30 aprile, e nelle tre serate successive seguirà l'opera Wozzeck di Alban Berg, eseguita dal complesso dell'Opera di Vienna. L'Orchestra del Conservatorio Francese, diretta da Bruno Walter, presenterà Il Canto della Terra di Mahler, il Don Juan di Richard Strauss e Il pomeriggio di un Fauno di Debussy, il 5 maggio.

La Boston Symphony Orchestra, per la prima volta in Europa, con Charles Munch e Pierre Monteux come direttori, darà tre concerti. Il primo il 6 maggio, diretto da Charles Munch all'Opera di Parigi, il secondo diretto da Pierre Monteux, l'8 maggio al teatro di Champs Elysées. La terza rappresentazione avrà luogo il 21 maggio. La quarta esecuzione della Compagnia del Balletto di New York sotto la direzione di George Baanchine, avrà luogo dal 10 al 3 maggio con balletti di Stravinsky, come Apollo, l'Uccello di Fuoco, Jeux de Cartes, Orfeo, ecc. con le coreografie del ballerino americano Jerome Kobbins. Nel programma della compagnia si trovano anche Il valzer di Ravel, il Jinx di Benjamin Britten, I quattro temperamenti di Hindemith, il Eulenspiegel di Richard Strauss, il Figlio Prodigo di Prokofiev.

Due nuovi balletti, scritti appositamente per l'occasione dai compositori francesi Georges Auric e Henry Suaget saranno eseguiti il 14 ed il 15 maggio. Per il 16 maggio sarà eseguito l'Edipo Re, balletto di Igor Strawinsky narrato da Jean Cocteau, e costituirà dopo 13 anni la prima apparizione di Strawinsky davanti al pubblico francese. La stessa esecuzione avrà luogo il 19 maggio. Il 17 ed il 18 maggio saranno riservati all'orchestra della Suisse Romande, diretta da Ernest Ansermet, con lavori di Frank Martin, Debussy, Honegger, Hindemith e Ravel. L'orchestra del settore occidentale di Berlino, eseguirà il 23 ed il 24 maggio opere di Bela Bartok, e due opere russe, come la Sesta Sinfonia di Prokoviev e Lady Macbeth of Mzensk di Shostakovich, ambedue criticato nell'Unione Sovietica come opere borghesi e decadenti.

La famosa Orchestra romana di «Santa Cecilia» sarà ascoltata a Parigi il 27 ed il 29 maggio con esecuzioni di opere di Strawinsky, Dallapiccola, Malipiero ed altri compositori italiani. Il 1° giugno avrà luogo il gran finale, e cioè un concerto eseguito a Palais de Chaillot sotto la direzione di Leopold Stokowsky.

Tutti questi concerti avranno luogo di sera, ma anche nel corso della giornata vi saranno interessanti manifestazioni. Infatti James John Sweeney, noto esperto d'arte, sta preparando una importante mostra di quadri, nella quale saranno presenti, tutte le attuali correnti artistiche. Saranno tenute, inoltre, conferenze e discussioni all'Università di Parigi, dai maggiori poeti, scrittori e filosofi del tempo, tra cui Benedetto Croce, John Dewey, Karl Jaspers, Salvator de Madariaga e Bertrand Russel. Sarà svolto, infine, anche un programma di drammi, films e mostre fotografiche.

27 FEV 1952
NORD MATIN - LILLE

CHARLES MUNCH, RÉTABLI, SERA A PARIS EN MAI

Il n'y a rien à craindre : Charles Munch dirigera lui-même l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston lorsqu'il se produira à Paris, dans le cadre de « L'Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle », vaste exposition des arts organisée et patronnée par le Congrès pour la liberté de la Culture.

De Boston était parvenue, il y a plusieurs semaines, la nouvelle alarmante que le célèbre chef d'orchestre était sérieusement souffrant et que ses médecins lui avaient prescrit un repos complet. Il est maintenant entré dans la phase rassurante de la convalescence et, de New-York, où il habite momentanément, il a fait savoir que les progrès de son état de santé étaient très satisfaisants. Ce n'est plus qu'une question de jours. Bien avant de venir présenter le plus célèbre orchestre d'Amérique, dont il est depuis deux ans le chef d'orchestre, Charles Munch sera complètement rétabli.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 . TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Karlstads-Tidningen
Liberal
14 FEB 1952
/ 19

KARLSTADS-TIDNINGEN

Mästerverk i tjugonde århundradet

DEN INTERNATIONELLA festival för olika konstarter, som kommer att hållas i Paris i maj i år, kommer för första gången sedan kriget att återuppliva den stora, traditionella vårsäsongen i Paris och fyllas med nya uppförander av balett och musik i Diaghileffs anda. För första gången på många år har man lyckats samla många av Diaghileffs egna medarbetare, och de kommer att tillsammans medverka i festivalen.

"Mästerverk i Tjugonde Århundradet" anordnas av Kommittén för Kulturell Frihet och bland sina medverkande har den bl. a. Igor Stravinsky och George Balanchine, som arbetade tillsammans med Diakhileff i många av hans mest berömda baletter; Pierre Monteux, som dirigerade det första framförandet av "Våroffer", Nicolas Nabokov — direktören för festivalen — som komponerade sin första balettmusik för Diaghileff.

Bland dem som redan befinner sig i Paris och väntar på sina gamla vänner är Georges Auric och Henri Sauguet, vilka båda har komponerat nya baletter för festivalen — baletter som skall dansas av the New York City Ballet i koreografi av Balanshine. Båda har tidigare skrivit balettmusik för Diaghileff. Jean Cocteau, som förr i tiden arbetade tillsammans med Stravinsky och Diaghileff, kommer i vår att vara berättaren i "Oedipus Rex". Stravinsky kommer själv att dirigera verket.

"Oedipus Rex" fick sitt första uppförande med Cocteau och Stravinsky i Paris år 1927, men då försökte man inte att ge ett fullständigt scenuppförande. Sedan dess har de väntat på ett lämpligt tillfälle att få ge verket så som det ursprungligen skrevs, d. v. s. med en 80-manna manskör, orkester, solister, berättare och en dansör som pantomimiskt framställer Oedipus levnad. Det stora problemet var hur man skulle få in alla de nödvändiga elementen på en scen. Det problemet har Jean Cocteau löst för de två föreställningarna i maj under "Mästerverk i Tjugonde Århundradet".

DET ÄR signifikativt att dessa Diaghileffs gamla medarbetare återförenas i vår inom ramen för denna unika demonstration av det bästa vårt århundrade kan visa upp inom olika konstarter, och som grundar sig på initiativtagarnas — d. v. s. Kommittén för Kulturell Frihet — starka tro på att det är nödvändigt att då och då påminna om och på nytt demonstrera de värden vår kultur skapat och äger för att hindra dem från att bli misskända till följd av politiska attacker.

Kommittén är en organisation av västerländska intellektuella, representerande alla politiska åskådningar, o. vilka alla har det gemensamt att de står i stark opposion till totalitära kontroller över människans skaparkraft. De har tagit initiativet till denna festival som ett svar på den totalitära kritiken, som påstår att den västerländska kulturen är dekadent formalistisk och att den inte längre kan producera något av värde.

Många av de verk, som kommer att framföras under festivalen, kom till i Paris under decenniet närmast efter det första världskriget.

Samtliga de verk, som skall presenteras under majfestivalen, har skapats under tjugonde århundradet, en period som Kommittén anser varit en tid av ovanligt rik produktivitet och av stora framsteg ifråga om skapandet av nya konstriktningar och ifråga om utvecklingen av de gamla. Festivalen vill försöka bevisa att sådana framsteg inom olika konstarter endast kan förekomma i ett klimat av fullkomlig intellektuell frihet sådan som vår tids skapande konstnärer har åtnjutit i den västerländska civilisationen

FESTIVALEN kommer att samla till Paris några av världens finaste musikaliska institutioner, t. ex. Wiens statsopera och filharmoniska orkester i två framföranden av Alban Bergs "Wozzeck", Bostons symfoniorkester med Charles Münch och Pierre Monteux som dirigerar, RIAS-orkestern från Berlin, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under ledning av Ernest Ansermet samt Paris egen Konservatorieorkester och Orchestre National under Bruno Walter. Det är möjligt att Santa Ceciliaakademins i Rom kör och orkester också kommer att delta.

Igor Stravinsky återvänder till Paris för första gången på 13 år för att dirigera sina egna verk. Han kommer att leda två föreställningar av "Oedipus Rex", sin balett "Eldfågeln", "Orpheus" och "Apollo" när the New York City Ballet dansar. Denna balett, som har Georg Balanshine till konstnärlig ledare, kommer också att dansa två nya verk av Sauguet och Auric.

Bland andra verk, som the New York City Ballet uppför, märks Hindemiths "Fyra temperament", Ravel's "La Valse" o. Richard Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel".

Planer håller också på att göras upp för olika serier med eftermiddagsföreläsningar av den fria världens mest framstående författare och filosofer. En av dessa serier kommer att ägnas pressfriheten — den frihet som först kommer att berövas oss i händelse av anfall på våra kulturella institutioner.

Andra planer rör framförandet i Paris av vårt århundrades största dramatiska verk med deltagande av de främsta personligheterna inom de dramatiska konsterna. Centrum för musik- och teaterfestivalen blir Théatre des Camps-Elysées.

I samband med festivalen säger Nicolas Nabokov att "den fritt skapande fantasien hos poeter, målare och kompositörer har frambragt en rik ström av mästerverk inom alla konstarter".

"MEN SAMTIDIGT", säger han, "har detta halva århundrade som en biprodukt av politiska omvälvningar fått vara vittne till en häftig reaktion mot den fria, skapande anden. Starka politiska rörelser har uppkommit, vilka försökt att undertrycka fria uttryck för de finaste skapande begåvningar".

"Stränga och inskränkande riktlinjer och lagar har försökt omforma konstnären till ett instrument för staten, ett instrument vars ende berättigande skulle vara att producera verk som kunde tillfredsställa de totalitära regimernas rent nyttighetsmässiga behov".

"De har försökt — och i viss utsträckning har de också lyckats — att i våra sinnen så tvivel på värdet, styrkan och livskraften i vår västerländska kultur".

Det är för att stilla dessa tvivel och för att komma med ett övertygande svar på denna propaganda, påpekar M. Nabokov, som Kommittén för Kulturell Frihet beslutat presentera festivalen "Mästerverk i Tjugonde Århundradet".

T. des C.-E.

[266]

La Gazetta del Mezzogiorno, Bari
12 FEV 1952

IN MAGGIO A PARIGI

Un grande Festival internazionale

e convegno di artisti e intellettuali

Conferenza di Croce - La partecipazione dell'Orchestra di S. Cecilia

Parigi, 11 febbraio.

Nel prossimo mese di maggio si svolgerà a Parigi un Festival internazionale per «mostrare al mondo ciò che la mente libera dell'uomo ha conquistato nella prima metà del secolo XX».

Il Festival è stato organizzato dal Congresso internazionale per la libertà culturale diretto da Nicolas Nabakov, Segretario generale. A Parigi saranno esibiti i massimi capolavori dell'arte moderna, in tutti i campi, dalla sinfonia, dall'opera, dal balletto, al dramma, alla filosofia, all'arte, alla letteratura e così via. Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Igor Strawinsky e Bruno Walter dirigeranno famose orchestre, come la Boston Symphony Orchestra, la Vienna State Opera, la New York City Ballet Company e l'Orchestra del settore occidentale di Berlino. Le prime audizioni di opere raramente eseguite come di lavori classificati «decadenti» nell'Europa Orientale, saranno anch'esse eseguite.

Il concerto inaugurale avrà luogo il 29 aprile nella Chiesa di San Rocco di Parigi, ove il «St. Guillaume Chorus» di Strasburgo canterà il Magnificat di Bach, lo Stabat Mater di Francis Poulenc. Il 30 aprile, e nelle tre serate successive seguirà l'opera Wozzeck di Alban Berg, eseguita dal complesso dell'Opera di Vienna. L'Orchestra del Conservatorio Francese, diretta da Bruno Walter, presenterà Il Canto della Terra di Mahler, il Don Juan di Richard Strauss e Il pomeriggio di un Fauno di Debussy, il 5 maggio.

La Boston Symphony Orchestra, per la prima volta in Europa, con Charles Munch e Pierre Monteux come direttori, darà tre concerti. Il primo il 6 maggio, diretto da Charles Munch all'Opera di Parigi, il secondo diretto da Pierre Monteux, l'8 maggio al teatro di Champs Elysées. La terza rappresentazione avrà luogo il 21 maggio. La quarta esecuzione della Compagnia del Balletto di New York sotto la direzione di George Balanchine, avrà luogo dal 10 al 3 maggio con balletti di Stravinsky, come Apollo, l'Uccello di Fuoco, Jeux de Cartes, Orfeo, ecc. con le coreografie del ballerino americano Jerome Kobbins. Nel programma della compagnia si trovano anche Il valzer di Ravel, il Jinx di Benjamin Britten, I quattro temperamenti di Hindemith, il Eulenspiegel di Richard Strauss, il Figlio Prodigo di Prokofiev.

Due nuovi balletti, scritti appositamente per l'occasione dai compositori francesi Georges Auric e Henry Suaget saranno eseguiti il 14 ed il 15 maggio. Per il 16 maggio sarà eseguito l'Edipo Re, balletto di Igor Strawinsky narrato da Jean Cocteau, e costituirà dopo 13 anni la prima apparizione di Strawinsky davanti al pubblico francese. La stessa esecuzione avrà luogo il 19 maggio. Il 17 ed il 18 maggio saranno riservati all'orchestra della Suisse Romande, diretta da Ernest Ansermet, con lavori di Frank Martin, Debussy, Honegger, Hindemith e Ravel. L'orchestra del settore occidentale di Berlino, eseguirà il 23 ed il 24 maggio opere di Bela Bartok, e due opere russe, come la Sesta Sinfonia di Prokoviev e Lady Macbeth of Mzensk di Shostakovich, ambedue criticato nell'Unione Sovietica come opere borghesi e decadenti.

La famosa Orchestra romana di «Santa Cecilia» sarà ascoltata a Parigi il 27 ed il 29 maggio con esecuzioni di opere di Strawinsky, Dallapiccola, Malipiero ed altri compositori italiani. Il 1° giugno avrà luogo il gran finale, e cioè un concerto eseguito a Palais de Chaillot sotto la direzione di Leopold Stokowsky.

Tutti questi concerti avranno luogo di sera, ma anche nel corso della giornata vi saranno interessanti manifestazioni. Infatti James John Sweeney, noto esperto d'arte, sta preparando una importante mostra di quadri, nella quale saranno presenti, tutte le attuali correnti artistiche. Saranno tenute, inoltre, conferenze e discussioni all'Università di Parigi, dai maggiori poeti, scrittori e filosofi del tempo, tra cui Benedetto Croce, John Dewey, Karl Jaspers, Salvator de Madariaga e Bertrand Russel. Sarà svolto, infine, anche un programma di drammi, films e mostre fotografiche.

12 FEV 1952
NORD MATIN - LILLE

CHARLES MUNCH, RÉTABLI, SERA A PARIS EN MAI

Il n'y a rien à craindre : Charles Munch dirigera lui-même l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston lorsqu'il se produira à Paris, dans le cadre de « L'Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle », vaste exposition des arts organisée et patronnée par le Congrès pour la liberté de la Culture.

De Boston était parvenue, il y a plusieurs semaines, la nouvelle alarmante que le célèbre chef d'orchestre était sérieusement souffrant et que ses médecins lui avaient prescrit un repos complet. Il est maintenant entré dans la phase rassurante de la convalescence et, de New-York, où il habite momentanément, il a fait savoir que les progrès de son état de santé étaient très satisfaisants. Ce n'est plus qu'une question de jours. Bien avant de venir présenter le plus célèbre orchestre d'Amérique, dont il est depuis deux ans le chef d'orchestre, Charles Munch sera complètement rétabli.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 . TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Karlstads-Tidningen
Liberal
14 FEB 52
/ 19

ÅRLSTADS-TIDNINGEN

Mästerverk i tjugonde århundradet

DEN INTERNATIONELLA festival för olika konstarter, som kommer att hållas i Paris i maj i år, kommer för första gången sedan kriget att återuppliva den stora, traditionella vårsäsongen i Paris och fyllas med nya uppföranden av balett och musik i Diaghileffs anda. För första gången på många år har man lyckats samla många av Diaghileffs egna medarbetare, och de kommer att tillsammans medverka i festivalen.

"Mästerverk i Tjugonde Århundradet" anordnas av Kommittén för Kulturell Frihet och bland sina medverkande har den bl. a. Igor Stravinsky och George Balanchine, som arbetade tillsammans med Diakhileff i många av hans mest berömda baletter; Pierre Monteux, som dirigerade det första framförandet av "Våroffer", Nicolas Nabokov — direktören för festivalen — som komponerade sin första balettmusik för Diaghileff.

Bland dem som redan befinner sig i Paris och väntar på sina gamla vänner är Georges Auric och Henri Sauguet, vilka båda har komponerat nya baletter för festivalen — baletter som skall dansas av the New York City Ballet i koreografi av Balanshine. Båda har tidigare skrivit balettmusik för Diaghileff. Jean Cocteau, som förr i tiden arbetade tillsammans med Stravinsky och Diaghileff, kommer i vår att vara berättaren i "Oedipus Rex". Stravinsky kommer själv att dirigera verket.

"Oedipus Rex" fick sitt första uppförande med Cocteau och Stravinsky i Paris år 1927, men då försökte man inte att ge ett fullständigt scenuppförande. Sedan dess har de väntat på ett lämpligt tillfälle att få ge verket så som det ursprungligen skrevs, d. v. s. med en 80-manna manskör, orkester, solister, berättare och en dansör som pantomimiskt framställer Oedipus levnad. Det stora problemet var hur man skulle få in alla de nödvändiga elementen på en scen. Det problemet har Jean Cocteau löst för de två föreställningarna i maj under "Mästerverk i Tjugonde Århundradet".

DET ÄR signifikativt att dessa Diaghileffs gamle medarbetare återförenas i vår inom ramen för denna unika demonstration av det bästa vårt århundrade kan visa upp inom olika konstarter, och som grundar sig på initiativtagarnas — d. v. s. Kommittén för Kulturell Frihet — starka tro på att det är nödvändigt att då och då påminna om och på nytt demonstrera de värden vår kultur skapat och äger för att hindra dem från att bli misskända till följd av politiska attacker.

Kommittén är en organisation av västerländska intellektuella, representerande alla politiska åskådningar, o. vilka alla har det gemensamt att de står i stark opposion till totalitära kontroller över människans skaparkraft. De har tagit initiativet till denna festival som ett svar på den totalitära kritiken, som påstår att den västerländska kulturen är dekadent formalistisk och att den inte längre kan producera något av värde.

Många av de verk, som kommer att framföras under festivalen, kom till i Paris under decenniet närmast efter det första världskriget.

Samtliga de verk, som skall presenteras under majfestivalen, har skapats under tjugonde århundradet, en period som Kommittén anser varit en tid av ovanligt rik produktivitet och av stora framsteg ifråga om skapandet av nya konstriktningar och ifråga om utvecklingen av de gamla. Festivalen vill försöka bevisa att sådana framsteg inom olika konstarter endast kan förekomma i ett klimat av fullkomlig intellektuell frihet sådan som vår tids skapande konstnärer har åtnjutit i den västerländska civilisationen

FESTIVALEN kommer att samla till Paris några av världens finaste musikaliska institutioner, t. ex. Wiens statsopera och filharmoniska orkester i två framföranden av Alban Bergs "Wozzeck", Bostons symfoniorkester med Charles Münch och Pierre Monteux som dirigerar, RIAS-orkestern från Berlin, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under ledning av Ernest Ansermet samt Paris egen Konservatorieorkester och Orchestre National under Bruno Walter. Det är möjligt att Santa Ceciliaakademins i Rom kör och orkester också kommer att deltа.

Igor Stravinsky återvänder till Paris för första gången på 13 år för att dirigera sina egna verk. Han kommer att leda två föreställningar av "Oedipus Rex", sin balett "Eldfågeln", "Orpheus" och "Apollo" när the New York City Ballet dansar. Denna balett, som har Georg Balanshine till konstnärlig ledare, kommer också att dansa två nya verk av Sauguet och Auric.

Bland andra verk, som the New York City Ballet uppför, märks Hindemiths "Fyra temperament", Ravel's "La Valse" o. Richard Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel".

Planer håller också på att göras upp för olika serier med eftermiddagsföreläsningar av den fria världens mest framstående författare och filosofer. En av dessa serier kommer att ägnas pressfriheten — den frihet som först kommer att berövas oss i händelse av anfall på våra kulturella institutioner.

Andra planer rör framföranden i Paris av vårt århundrades största dramatiska verk med deltagande av de främsta personligheterna inom de dramatiska konsterna. Centrum för musik- och teaterfestivalen blir Théatre des Camps-Elysées.

I samband med festivalen säger Nicolas Nabokov att "den fritt skapande fantasien hos poeter, målare och kompositörer har frambragt en rik ström av mästerverk inom alla konstarter".

"MEN SAMTIDIGT", säger han, "har detta halva århundrade som en biprodukt av politiska omvälvningar fått vara vittne till en häftig reaktion mot den fria, skapande anden. Starka politiska rörelser har uppkommit, vilka försökt att undertrycka fria uttryck för de finaste skapande begåvningar".

"Stränga och inskränkande riktlinjer och lagar har försökt omforma konstnären till ett instrument för staten, ett instrument vars enda berättigande skulle vara att producera verk som kunde tillfredsställa de totalitära regimernas rent nyttighetsmässiga behov".

"De har försökt — och i viss utsträckning har de också lyckats — att i våra sinnen så tvivel på värdet, styrkan och livskraften i vår västerländska kultur".

Det är för att stilla dessa tvivel och för att komma med ett övertygande svar på denna propaganda, påpekar M. Nabokov, som Kommittén för Kulturell Frihet beslutat presentera festivalen "Mästerverk i Tjugonde Århundradet".

T. des C.-E.

Västgöta Demokraten
Borås

Socialdemokratisk

23 FEB 1957

...nkturutjämningsa... utgår vid export, för att få en pris- striens känslighet därför.

Kulturens festival

Den internationella festival för olika konstarter, som kommer att hållas i Paris i maj i år, kommer för första gången sedan kriget att återuppliva den stora, traditionella vårsäsongen i Paris och fyllas med nya uppföranden av balett och musik i Diaghileffs anda. För första gången på många år har man lyckats samla många av Diaghileffs egna medarbetare, och de kommer att tillsammans medverka i festivalen.

"Mästerverk i tjugonde århundradet" anordnas av kommittén för kulturell frihet och bland sina medverkande har den bl. a. Igor Stravinsky och George Balanchine, som arbetade tillsammans med Diaghileff i många av hans mest berömda baletter; Pierre Monteux, som dirigerade det första framförandet av "Våroffer"; Nicolas Nabokov — direktören för festivalen — som komponerade sin första balettmusik för Diaghileff.

Bland dem som redan befinner sig i Paris och väntar på sina gamla vänner är Georges Auric och Henri Sauguet, vilka båda har komponerat nya baletter för festivalen — baletter som skall dansas av the New York City Ballet i koreografi av Balanchine. Båda har tidigare skrivit balettmusik för Diaghileff. Jean Cocteau, som förr i tiden arbetade tillsammans med Stravinsky och Diaghileff, kommer i vår att vara berättaren i "Oedipus Rex". Stravinsky kommer själv att dirigera verket.

"Oedipus Rex" fick sitt första uppförande med Cocteau och Stravinsky i Paris år 1927, men då försökte man inte att ge ett fullständigt scenuppförande. Sedan dess har de väntat på ett lämpligt tillfälle att få ge verket så som det ursprungligen skrevs, dvs. med en 80-manna manskör, orkester, solister, berättare och en dansör, som pantomimiskt framställer Oedipus levnad.

Det är signifikativt att dessa Diaghileffs gamla medarbetare återförenas i vår inom ramen för denna unika demonstration av det bästa vårt århundrade kan visa upp inom olika konstarter, och som grundar sig på initiativtagarnas tro på att det är nödvändigt att då och då påminna om och på pressfriheten — den frihet som först kommer att berövas oss i händelse av anfall på våra kulturella institutioner.

...nytt demonstrera de värden vår kultur skapat och äger för att ...indra dem från att bli misskända till följd av politiska attacker.

Kommittén är en organisation av västerländska intellektuella, representerande alla politiska åskådningar, och vilka alla har det gemensamt att de står i opposition till totalitära kontroller över människans skaparkraft. De har tagit initiativet till denna festival som ett svar på den totalitära kritiken, som påstår att den västerländska kulturen är dekadent, formalistisk och att den inte längre kan producera något av värde.

Samtliga de verk, som skall presenteras under majfestivalen, har skapatsunder tjugonde århundradet. Festivalen vill försöka bevisa att framsteg inom olika konstorter endast kan förekomma i ett klimat av fullkomlig intellektuell frihet sådan som vår tids skapande konstnärer har åtnjutit i den västerländska civilisationen.

Festivalen kommer att samla till Paris några av världens finaste musikaliska institutioner, t. ex. Wiens statsopera och filharmoniska orkester i två framföranden av Alban Bergs "Wozzeck", Bostons symfoniorkester med Charles Munch och Pierre Monteux som dirigenter, RIAS-orkestern från Berlin, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under ledning av Ernest Ansermet samt Paris egen Konservatorieorkester och Orchestre National under Bruno Walter. Det är möjligt att Santa Cecilia-akademins i Rom kör och orkester också kommer att delta.

Igor Stravinsky återvänder till Rom för första gången på 13 år för att dirigera sina egna verk. Han kommer att leda två föreställningar av Oedipus Rex", sin balett "Eldfågeln", "Orpheus" och "Apollo" när the New York City Ballet dansar. Denna balett, som har George Balanchine till konstnärlig ledare, kommer också att dansa två nya verk av Sauguet och Auric.

Bland andra verk, som the New York City Ballet uppför, märks Hindemiths 'Fyra temperament", Ravel's "La Valse" och Richard Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel".

Planer håller också på att göras upp för olika serier med eftermiddagsföreläsningar av den fria världens mest framstående författare och filosofer. En av dessa serier kommer att ägnas

Andra planer rör framföranden i Paris av vårt århundrades största dramatiska verk med del...
...tagande av ...
...heterna in...

JARDIN des MODES
11, Rue St-Florentin (1er)
AVRIL 1952

Jai Claude Baignier...

Entendre ...

Paris sera, ce printemps, le centre de brillement de tous les grands musiciens que compte le monde. L'Europe, l'Amérique et même l'Afrique y délégueront leurs meilleurs spécialistes : il est bon de préparer à les recevoir, en disposant, comme l'exhorte Gide, notre âme à l'accueil, en jurant solennellement d'écouter impartialement les œuvres nouvelles qui seront présentées.

L'Opéra de Vienne ouvrira les feux au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées avec les opéras de Mozart. Rien ne sera donc révolutionnaire dans ce spectacle où ce n'est la qualité des interprètes, fidèles d'une tradition dont tous les échos lyriques du globe ont vainement tenté de dépouiller les subtils et savants secrets. Seulement, les célèbres interprètes chanteront une partition d'Alban Berg dont nous n'avons encore qu'une bien pâle idée, grâce à de rares disques. Il y a là de quoi faire [illegible] qui fera couler beaucoup d'encre puisqu'il participe du dogme dodécaphoniste tout en sacrifiant quelques-uns aux impératifs de la musique tonale, en l'un et lyrique parfois 1951). Au revers, le concerto en Ré mineur pour piano et orchestre K.466 par la même interprète, le même orchestre, sous la même direction. La première est tout joie. C'est à propos de son exécution que Mozart conte la fameuse anecdote lorsque l'auteur parut à l'Empereur, le chapeau à la main, lui adressa un compliment et cria : Bravo ! Monarch... Clara Haskil avait affaire à forte partie ; Lili Kraus, Edwin Fischer avaient déjà enregistré ces deux œuvres. Elle nous apparaît au niveau de ces deux grands interprètes. La

[26]

Il Tirreno
Livorno 25 febbraio 1952

GRANDE MOSTRA INTERNAZIONALE IN FRANCIA

IN PRIMAVERA A PARIGI i "capolavori del secolo XX,,

NOSTRO SERVIZIO

PARIGI, 24. — Con l'Esposizione Internazionale di Belle Arti, che si terrà per tutto il mese di maggio, si riaprirà la tradizionale «stagione primaverile di Parigi» interrotta nel 1939 dalla guerra. Fra gli avvenimenti che daranno particolare risalto a questa manifestazione indetta dal «Congresso per la Libertà della Cultura», e che si intitolerà ai «Capolavori del secolo XX», citeremo la presenza a Parigi di Igor Stravinski e di George Balanchine che collaborarono alla creazione delle più notevoli opere di Serge Diaghilev. Fra gli altri collaboratori citeremo anche Pierre Monteux, che diresse la prima esecuzione del «Sacre de Printemps» e Nicola Nabokov, direttore dell'Esposizione, che compose la musica per il primo balletto del Diaghilev.

«Oedipus Rex» rappresentato per la prima volta a Parigi nel 1927 da Jean Cocteau e da Stravinski che ne compose la musica, sarà nuovamente interpretato da Cocteau e diretto da Stravinski. Questa volta però, la rappresentazione sarà pienamente conforme agli intenti da un coro di 80 artisti, da una orchestra con solisti e da un narratore (Cocteau); un ballerino mimerà i diversi episodi della vita di Edipo. Il maggior problema che la regia doveva risolvere per un'opera di questo genere era di riunire tutti gli elementi necessari su una sola scena. Il fatto significativo è che tutti questi antichi collaboratori di Diaghilev si riuniranno per contribuire al successo di una straordinaria manifestazione artistica fondata sulla intensa fede degli animatori del «Congresso per la Libertà della Cultura», i quali ritengono necessario che siano messi in rilievo, in questo particolare momento, i valori della nostra cultura insidiati dalla propaganda politica.

Contro i totalitarismi

Il Congresso di cui si parla è un organismo fondato da intellettuali dell'Occidente, di diversa fede politica ma uniti dalla comune opposizione alle pretese totalitarie rivolte a controllare le facoltà creatrici dell'uomo. La Esposizione e le manifestazioni indette sotto gli auspici di tale organismo tendono a rintuzzare le critiche totalitarie che presentano la cultura occidentale come decadente, formalista ed improduttiva.

Molte delle opere che verranno presentate durante l'Esposizione videro la luce a Parigi nel corso del decennio che seguì la prima guerra mondiale. Tutte indistintamente le opere presentate sono creazioni del secolo XX, periodo che gli organizzatori ritengono straordinariamente fecondo e in cui le tecniche nuove, e le classiche hanno avuto notevole sviluppo. Anzi, si può dire che tanta feconda e tale sviluppo sono stati possibili soltanto in un ambiente di assoluta libertà intellettuale, di cui appunto han potuto usufruire gli artisti e creatori dell'Occidente.

Converranno a Parigi alcuni dei più noti complessi musicali del mondo, come l'Orchestra Filarmonica e l'Opera di Vienna che darà due rappresentazioni del capolavoro di Alban Berg «Wozzek»; l'Orchestra sinfonica di Boston che sarà diretta successivamente da Charles Munh e da Pierre Monteux; la «RIAS», orchestra della radio di Berlino; l'Orchestra svizzera di Ginevra, diretta da Ernest Ansermet; la Orchestra del Conservatorio e l'Orchestra nazionale di Parigi, dirette da Bruno Walter. Fra le partecipazioni probabili citeremo quella dei cori e dell'Orchestra dell'Accademia di S. Cecilia di Roma.

Stravinski ritornerà a Parigi per la prima volta dopo 13 anni per presiedere all'esecuzione delle proprie opere. Egli dirigerà due rappresentazioni di «Oedipus Rex» e l'esecuzione dei balletti «L'oiseau de feu», «The Cage», «Orpheus» ed «Apollon Musagète», interpretati dal «New York City Ballet». Questa compagnia, di cui George Balanchine assume la direzione artistica, interpreterà pure due nuove opere dei compositori francesi Henri Sauguet e Georges Auric. Il repertorio del «New York City Ballet» comprende pure «Four Temperaments» di Hindemith, «La Valse» di Ravel e «Till Eulenspiegel» di Strauss.

Una mostra polemica

Contemporaneamente al programma musicale, una grande Esposizione di arte pittorica avrà luogo al Museo d'Arte moderna di Parigi. La direzione ne è assunta da James Johnson Sweeney, ex direttore del «Museum of Modern Art» di New York e da René Huyghe, ex conservatore del Museo del Louvre. Eminenti scrittori e filosofi del mondo libero daranno il loro concorso con una serie di conferenze, una delle quali sarà consacrata alla libertà di stampa, prima libertà minacciata dall'eventuale offensiva contro le istituzioni culturali. Sono pure in corso trattative per la rappresentazione al teatro dei «Champs Elysées», ove si svolgeranno le manifestazioni musicali e teatrali, di alcune grandi opere drammatiche col concorso dei più noti artisti del teatro di prosa.

Parlando dell'Esposizione di cui è co-direttore, Nicola Nabokhov, segretario generale del «Congresso per la Libertà della Cultura», ha messo in rilievo che nella prima metà del secolo «il genio creatore dei poeti, pittori e compositori ha prodotto [illegible] componente di capolavo[illegible]».

[illegible]poraneamente, egli ha [illegible] i rivolgimenti politi[illegible]to primo cinquanten[illegible] provocato una violen[illegible]e contro la libertà [illegible]dello spirito. Impor[illegible]menti politici hanno [illegible]ostacolare la libera e[illegible] degli spiriti più no[illegible]uindi tentato, con di[illegible]rgoniane, di trasfor[illegible]sta in uno strumento [illegible]i imporre la creazio[illegible]e atte a soddisfare i [illegible]pagandistici dei regi[illegible]ri. Hanno tentato, e [illegible] un certo successo, di [illegible]n noi stessi il dubbio [illegible]ità, la forza e la vita[illegible] nostra cultura occi[illegible]

[illegible]ha concluso affer[illegible]è appunto per dissi[illegible]i dubbi e dare una ri[illegible]uriente alle insinua[illegible]a' propaganda, che il [illegible] per la Libertà della [illegible] deciso di presentare [illegible]Esposizione dei «Capo[illegible]secolo XX».

[illegible]an Louis Sarnette

ARGUS de la PRESSE
37, Rue Bergère, PARIS (9e)

N° de débit

Le Parisien Libéré
18, Rue Réaumur - IIe
7 AVRIL 1952

LA MUSIQUE

FÊTES DE PRINTEMPS

LE programme musical de l'œuvre du XXe siècle vient d'être décidé par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Il est d'u et promet de magnifiques joies artistiques. Pendant plus d'un mois, du 30 avril au 1er juin, les concerts et les représentations lyriques alterneront presque quotidiennement. Les ballets occuperont une place importante. Cordelia, de Henri Sauguet, va être créée au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, ainsi que Coup de feu, tiré par Georges Auric, et Don Perlimplin, un opéra animé par la musique du maître italien Vittorio Rieti.

On ne manquera pas d'apprécier au Palais Garnier la Valse de Ravel et la Bourrée fantasque de Chabrier, qui seront interprétées par le New York City Ballet, que dirigera Léon Barzin. Le jeune et déjà éminent compositeur anglais Benjamin Britten conduira sa pièce, Billy Budd, que l'Opéra royal de Covent-Garden mettra en valeur.

Ils seront tous là, les grands orchestres : ceux de la Suisse romande et de Berlin-ouest, de la Radiodiffusion française et de Boston, des Concerts Lamoureux et [illegible]ademia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia, dirigés par les premiers chefs d'orchestre du monde entier. Les meilleurs compositeurs de notre temps, qui ont enrichi le patrimoine international, et dont quelques-uns reposent dans la tombe, seront représentés par des œuvres importantes. Les Français, les étrangers qui vivent à Paris ou y viendront à cette occasion pourront passer d'inoubliables soirées, se familiariser avec le répertoire américain en écoutant Quatre saints en trois actes de Virgil Thomson, entendre le Fils prodigue de Serge Prokofiev, applaudir Œdipus Rex d'Igor Stravinsky, que le maître conduira lui-même, admirer les Choéphores, oratorio de Darius Milhaud.

W.-L. LANDOWSKI.

Turn →

...convenu. Alban Berg porte un coup fatal aux dodécaphonistes en renonçant systématiquement aux lois dès qu'il veut exprimer une émotion, un sentiment ou introduire une couleur. Il revient aux systèmes des douze sons lorsqu'il veut donner un certain ton, une impression de gaieté aux tableaux qu'il peint. Ce double jeu mécontente tous les doctrinaires, les mélomanes y voient, eux, une source de plaisirs esthétiques entièrement neufs et directement perceptibles.

Le 8 mai, l'Orchestre Symphonique de →

...les soirées et l'Orchestre Philharmonique de Vienne, sous la direction de H[illegible] [illegible] en longue durée authentique (1949-51). Au revers : Les Petits Riens de la [illegible] en do mineur K 388 pour huit instruments à vent. Ensemble

Västgöta Demokraten
Borås

Socialdemokratisk

23 FEB 1957

...ränkturutjämningsavgift utgår vid export, för att få en prisstriens känslighet därför.

Kulturens festival

Den internationella festival för olika konstarter, som kommer att hållas i Paris i maj i år, kommer för första gången sedan kriget att återuppliva den stora, traditionella vårsäsongen i Paris och fyllas med nya uppföranden av balett och musik i Diaghileffs anda. För första gången på många år har man lyckats samla många av Diaghileffs egna medarbetare, och de kommer att tillsammans medverka i festivalen.

"Mästerverk i tjugonde århundradet" anordnas av kommittén för kulturell frihet och bland sina medverkande har den bl. a. Igor Stravinsky och George Balanchine, som arbetade tillsammans med Diaghileff i många av hans mest berömda baletter; Pierre Monteux, som dirigerade det första framförandet av "Våroffer"; Nicolas Nabokov — direktören för festivalen — som komponerade sin första balettmusik för Diaghileff.

Bland dem som redan befinner sig i Paris och väntar på sina gamla vänner är Georges Auric och Henri Sauguet, vilka båda har komponerat nya baletter för festivalen — baletter som skall dansas av the New York City Ballet i koreografi av Balanchine. Båda har tidigare skrivit balettmusik för Diaghileff. Jean Cocteau, som förr i tiden arbetade tillsammans med Stravinsky och Diaghileff, kommer i vår att vara berättaren i "Oedipus Rex". Stravinsky kommer själv att dirigera verket.

"Oedipus Rex" fick sitt första uppförande med Cocteau och Stravinsky i Paris år 1927, men då försökte man inte att ge ett fullständigt scenuppförande. Sedan dess har de väntat på ett lämpligt tillfälle att få ge verket så som det ursprungligen skrevs, dvs. med en 80-manna manskör, orkester, solister, berättare och en dansör, som pantomimiskt framställer Oedipus levnad.

Det är signifikativt att dessa Diaghileffs gamla medarbetare återförenas i vår inom ramen för denna unika demonstration av det bästa vårt århundrade kan visa upp inom olika konstarter, och som grundar sig på initiativtagarnas tro på att det är nödvändigt att då och då påminna om och på pressfriheten — den frihet som först kommer att berövas oss i händelse av anfall på våra kulturella institutioner.

...nytt demonstrera de värden vår kultur skapat och äger för att ...hindra dem från att bli misskända till följd av politiska attacker.

Kommittén är en organisation av västerländska intellektuella, representerande alla politiska åskådningar, och vilka alla har det gemensamt att de står i opposition till totalitära kontroller över människans skaparkraft. De har tagit initiativet till denna festival som ett svar på den totalitära kritiken, som påstår att den västerländska kulturen är dekadent, formalistisk och att den inte längre kan producera något av värde.

Samtliga de verk, som skall presenteras under majfestivalen, har skapatsunder tjugonde århundradet. Festivalen vill försöka bevisa att framsteg inom olika konstorter endast kan förekomma i ett klimat av fullkomlig intellektuell frihet sådan som vår tids skapande konstnärer har åtnjutit i den västerländska civilisationen.

Festivalen kommer att samla till Paris några av världens finaste musikaliska institutioner, t. ex. Wiens statsopera och filharmoniska orkester i två framföranden av Alban Bergs "Wozzeck", Bostons symfoniorkester med Charles Münch och Pierre Monteux som dirigenter, RIAS-orkestern från Berlin, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under ledning av Ernest Ansermet samt Paris egen Konservatorieorkester och Orchestre National under Bruno Walter. Det är möjligt att Santa Cecilia-akademins i Rom kör och orkester också kommer att delta.

Igor Stravinsky återvänder till Rom för första gången på 13 år för att dirigera sina egna verk. Han kommer att leda två föreställningar av Oedipus Rex", sin balett "Eldfågeln", "Orpheus" och "Apollo" när the New York City Ballet dansar. Denna balett, som har George Balanchine till konstnärlig ledare, kommer också att dansa två nya verk av Sauguet och Auric.

Bland andra verk, som the New York City Ballet uppför, märks Hindemiths 'Fyra temperament", Ravel's "La Valse" och Richard Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel".

Planer håller också på att göras upp för olika serier med eftermiddagsföreläsningar av den fria världens mest framstående författare och filosofer. En av dessa serier kommer att ägnas

Andra planer rör framföranden i Paris av vårt århundrades största dramatiska verk med del...tagande av ...beterna in...

JARDIN des MODES
11, Rue St-Florentin (1er)
AVRIL 1952

Mlle Claude Baignières

Il Tirreno
Livorno 25 [illegible] 1952

GRANDE MOSTRA INTERNAZIONALE IN FRANCIA

IN PRIMAVERA A PARIGI i "capolavori del secolo XX"

NOSTRO SERVIZIO

PARIGI, 24. — Con l'Esposizione Internazionale di Belle Arti, che si terrà per tutto il mese di maggio, si riaprirà la tradizionale «stagione primaverile di Parigi» interrotta nel 1939 dalla guerra. Fra gli avvenimenti che daranno particolare risalto a questa manifestazione indetta dal «Congresso per la Libertà della Cultura», e che si intitolerà ai «Capolavori del secolo XX», citeremo la presenza a Parigi di Igor Stravinski e di George Balanchine che collaborarono alla creazione delle più notevoli opere di Serge Diaghilev. Fra gli altri collaboratori citeremo anche Pierre Monteux, che diresse la prima esecuzione del «Sacre de Printemps» e Nicola Nabokov, direttore dell'Esposizione, che compose la musica per il primo balletto del Diaghilev.

«Oedipus Rex» rappresentato per la prima volta a Parigi nel 1927 da Jean Cocteau e da Stravinski che ne compose la musica, sarà nuovamente interpretato da Cocteau e diretto da Stravinski. Questa volta però, la rappresentazione sarà pienamente conforme agli intenti da un coro di 80 artisti, da una gli autori e verrà interpretata orchestra con solisti e da un narratore (Cocteau); un ballerino mimerà i diversi episodi della vita di Edipo. Il maggior problema che la regia doveva risolvere per un'opera di questo genere era di riunire tutti gli elementi necessari su una sola scena. Il fatto significativo è che tutti questi antichi collaboratori di Diaghilev si riuniranno per contribuire al successo di una straordinaria manifestazione artistica fondata sulla intensa fede degli animatori del «Congresso per la Libertà della Cultura», i quali ritengono necessario che siano messi in rilievo, in questo particolare momento, i valori della nostra cultura insidiati dalla propaganda politica.

Contro i totalitarismi

Il Congresso di cui si parla è un organismo fondato da intellettuali dell'Occidente, di diversa fede politica ma uniti dalla comune opposizione alle pretese totalitarie rivolte a controllare le facoltà creatrici dell'uomo. La Esposizione e le manifestazioni indette sotto gli auspici di tale organismo tendono a rintuzzare le critiche totalitarie che presentano la cultura occidentale come decadente, formalista ed improduttiva.

Molte delle opere che verranno presentate durante l'Esposizione videro la luce a Parigi nel corso del decennio che seguì la prima guerra mondiale. Tutte indistintamente le opere presentate sono creazioni del secolo XX, periodo che gli organizzatori ritengono straordinariamente fecondo e in cui le tecniche nuove, e le classiche hanno avuto notevole sviluppo. Anzi, si può dire che tanta fecondità e tale sviluppo sono stati possibili soltanto in un ambiente di assoluta libertà intellettuale, di cui appunto han potuto usufriure gli artisti e creatori dell'Occidente.

Converranno a Parigi alcuni dei più noti complessi musicali del mondo, come l'Orchestra Filarmonica e l'Opera di Vienna che darà due rappresentazioni del capolavoro di Alban Berg «Wozzek»; l'Orchestra sinfonica di Boston che sarà diretta successivamente da Charles Munh e da Pierre Monteux; la «RIAS», orchestra della radio di Berlino; l'Orchestra svizzera di Ginevra, diretta da Ernest Ansermet; la Orchestra del Conservatorio e l'Orchestra nazionale di Parigi, dirette da Bruno Walter. Fra le partecipazioni probabili citeremo quella dei cori e dell'Orchestra dell'Accademia di S. Cecilia di Roma.

Stravinski ritornerà a Parigi per la prima volta dopo 13 anni per presiedere all'esecuzione delle proprie opere. Egli dirigerà due rappresentazioni di «Oedipus Rex» e l'esecuzione dei balletti «L'oiseau de feu», «The Cage», «Orpheus» ed «Apollon Musagète», interpretati dal «New York City Ballet». Questa compagnia, di cui George Balanchine assume la direzione artistica, interpreterà pure due nuove opere dei compositori francesi Henri Sauguet e Georges Auric. Il repertorio del «New York City Ballet» comprende pure «Four Temperaments» di Hindemith, «La Valse» di Ravel e «Till Eulenspiegel» di Strauss.

Una mostra polemica

Contemporaneamente al programma musicale, una grande Esposizione di arte pittorica avrà luogo al Museo d'Arte moderna di Parigi. La direzione ne è assunta da James Johnson Sweeney, ex direttore del «Museum of Modern Art» di New York e da René Huyghe, ex conservatore del Museo del Louvre. Eminenti scrittori e filosofi del mondo libero daranno il loro concorso con una serie di conferenze, una delle quali sarà consacrata alla libertà di stampa, prima libertà minacciata dall'evenuale offensiva contro le istituzioni culturali. Sono pure in corso trattative per la rappresentazione al teatro dei «Champs Elysées», ove si svolgeranno le manifestazioni musicali e teatrali, di alcune grandi opere drammatiche col concorso dei più noti artisti del teatro di prosa.

Parlando dell'Esposizione di cui è co-direttore, Nicola Nabokov, segretario generale del «Congresso per la Libertà della Cultura», ha messo in rilievo che nella prima metà del secolo il genio creatore dei poeti, pittori, musicisti ha prodotto componente di capolavoporaneamente, egli ha i rivolgimenti politito primo cinquantenprovocato una violene contro la libertà dello spirito. Impormenti politici hanno ostacolare la libera edegli spiriti più nouindi tentato, con diraconiane, di trasforta in uno strumento i imporre la creazioe atte a soddisfare i pagandistici dei regi. Hanno tentato, e un certo successo, di noi stessi il dubbio tà, la forza e la vitanostra cultura occi-

ha concluso afferè appunto per dissidubbi e dare una riuriente alle insinuapropaganda, che il per la Libertà della deciso di presentare sposizione dei «Capotecolo XX».

an Louis Sarnette

ARGUS de la PRESSE
37, Rue Bergère, PARIS (9e)

N° de débit

Le Parisien Libéré
18, Rue Réaumur - IIe
7 AVRIL 1952

LA MUSIQUE

FÊTES DE PRINTEMPS

Le programme musical de l'œuvre du XXe siècle vient d'être décidé par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Il est d'ru et promet de magnifiques joies artistiques. Pendant plus d'un mois, du 30 avril au 1er juin, les concerts et les représentations lyriques alterneront presque quotidiennement. Les ballets occuperont une place importante. Cordella, de Henri Sauguet, va être créée au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, ainsi que Coup de feu, tiré par Georges Auric, et Don Perlimplin, un opéra animé par la musique du maître italien Vittorio Rieti.

On ne manquera pas d'apprécier au Palais Garnier la Valse de Ravel et la Bourrée fantasque de Chabrier, qui seront interprétées par le New York City Ballet, que dirigera Léon Barzin. Le jeune et déjà éminent compositeur anglais Benjamin Britten conduira sa pièce. Billy Budd, que l'Opera royal de Covent-Garden mettra en valeur.

Ils seront tous là, les grands orchestres : ceux de la Suisse romande et de Berlin-ouest, de la Radiodiffusion française et de Boston, des Concerts Lamoureux et [illegible]cademia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia, dirigés par les premiers chefs d'orchestre du monde entier. Les meilleurs compositeurs de notre temps, qui ont enrichi le patrimoine international, et dont quelques-uns reposent dans la tombe, seront représentés par des œuvres importantes. Les Français, les étrangers qui vivent à Paris ou y viendront à cette occasion pourront passer d'inoubliables soirées, se familiariser avec le répertoire américain en écoutant Quatre saints en trois actes de Virgil Thomson, entendre le Fils prodigue de Serge Prokofiev, applaudir Œdipus Rex d'Igor Stravinsky, que le maître conduira lui-même, admirer les Choéphores, oratorio de Darius Milhaud.

W.-L. LANDOWSKI.

A Entendre

Paris aura, ce printemps, le dernier de tailleur de tous les grands musiciens que compte le monde. L'Europe, l'Amérique et même l'Afrique y délégueront leurs meilleurs spécialistes : il est bon de se préparer à les recevoir, en disposant, comme le faisait Gœthe, notre âme à l'accueil, en jurant solennellement d'écouter impartialement les œuvres nouvelles qui seront présentées. [illegible]

L'Opéra de Vienne ouvrira [illegible] au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées avec les opéras de Mozart. Rien ne sera donc révolutionnaire dans ce spectacle si ce n'est la qualité des interprètes. Quant à Paris, capitale dont tous les [illegible] du globe ont vainement tenté de découvrir les subtils et fuyants secrets. Bernstein, les solistes interprètes chanteront une [illegible] Alban Berg dont nous n'avons encore [illegible] Grande que des échos, grâce à la Radio. Si l'opéra de ce Mozart qui fera couler [illegible] beaucoup d'encre puisqu'il participe du dogme dodécaphoniste tout en sacrifiant [illegible] aux impératifs de la musique tonale, est d'un art lyrique parfois

1951). Au revers, le concerto en Ré mineur pour piano et orchestre K. 466 par la même interprète, le même orchestre, sous la même direction. La première est toute joie. C'est à propos de son exécution que Mozart conte la fameuse anecdote classique : l'auteur paraît à l'Empereur, le chapeau à la main, lui adresse un compliment et crie : Bravo ! Mozart !...

Clara Haskil avait affaire à forte partie ; Lili Kraus, Edwina Fischer avaient déjà enregistré ces deux œuvres. Elle nous apparaît au niveau de ces deux grands interprètes. La convenance. Alban Berg porte un coup fatal [illegible] dodécaphonistes en renonçant systématiquement à tout lois dès qu'il veut exprimer une opinion, un sentiment ou introduire une [illegible]. Il revient aux systèmes des durées sous lesquels il veut donner un certain sens, une explication de [illegible] aux tableaux qu'il peint. Ce double jeu mécontente tous les [illegible] irrémédiablement les mélomanes y trouvent une source de plaisirs esthétiques entièrement [illegible] perceptibles.

[illegible] admirables artistes de notre temps.

Autres enregistrements de Mozart : le concerto pour deux violons et orchestre K. 190 par les solistes et l'Orchestre Philharmonique de Vienne, sous la direction de H[illegible] (une [illegible] 30 cm. longue durée [illegible]). Au revers : [illegible] Rêve La 12e Sérénade en do mineur K. 388 pour huit instruments à vent. Ensemble

Västgöta Demokraten
Borås

Socialdemokratisk

23 FEB 1952

funkturutjämningsav... utgår vid export, för att få en pris- sriens känslighet därför.

Kulturens festival

Den internationella festival för olika konstarter, som kommer att hållas i Paris i maj i år, kommer för första gången sedan kriget att återuppliva den stora, traditionella vårsäsongen i Paris och fyllas med nya uppföranden av balett och musik i Diaghileffs anda. För första gången på många år har man lyckats samla många av Diaghileffs egna medarbetare, och de kommer att tillsammans medverka i festivalen.

"Mästerverk i tjugonde århundradet" anordnas av kommittén för kulturell frihet och bland sina medverkande har den bl. a. Igor Stravinsky och George Balanchine, som arbetade tillsammans med Diaghileff i många av hans mest berömda baletter; Pierre Monteux, som dirigerade det första framförandet av "Våroffer"; Nicolas Nabokov — direktören för festivalen — som komponerade sin första balettmusik för Diaghileff.

Bland dem som redan befinner sig i Paris och väntar på sina gamla vänner är Georges Auric och Henri Sauguet, vilka båda har komponerat nya baletter för festivalen — baletter som skall dansas av the New York City Ballet i koreografi av Balanchine. Båda har tidigare skrivit balettmusik för Diaghileff. Jean Cocteau, som förr i tiden arbetade tillsammans med Stravinsky och Diaghileff, kommer i vår att vara berättaren i "Oedipus Rex". Stravinsky kommer själv att dirigera verket.

"Oedipus Rex" fick sitt första uppförande med Cocteau och Stravinsky i Paris år 1927, men då försökte man inte att ge ett fullständigt scenuppförande. Sedan dess har de väntat på ett lämpligt tillfälle att få ge verket så som det ursprungligen skrevs, dvs. med en 80-manna manskör, orkester, solister, berättare och en dansör, som pantomimiskt framställer Oedipus levnad.

Det är signifikativt att dessa Diaghileffs gamla medarbetare återförenas i vår inom ramen för denna unika demonstration av det bästa vårt århundrade kan visa upp inom olika konstarter, och som grundar sig på initiativtagarnas tro på att det är nödvändigt att då och då påminna om och på pressfriheten — den frihet som först kommer att berövas oss i händelse av anfall på våra kulturella institutioner.

...t demonstrera de värden vår ...äger för att ...isskända till följd av politiska attacker.

Kommittén är en organisation av västerländska intellektuella, representerande alla politiska åskådningar, och vilka alla har det gemensamt att de står i opposition till totalitära kontroller över människans skaparkraft. De har tagit initiativet till denna festival som ett svar på den totalitära kritiken, som påstår att den västerländska kulturen är dekadent, formalistisk och att den inte längre kan producera något av värde.

Samtliga de verk, som skall presenteras under majfestivalen; har skapatsunder tjugonde århundradet. Festivalen vill försöka bevisa att framsteg inom olika konstorter endast kan förekomma i ett klimat av fullkomlig intellektuell frihet sådan som vår tids skapande konstnärer har åtnjutit i den västerländska civilisationen.

Festivalen kommer att samla till Paris några av världens finaste musikaliska institutioner, t. ex. Wiens statsopera och filharmoniska orkester i två framföranden av Alban Bergs "Wozzeck", Bostons symfoniorkester med Charles Münch och Pierre Monteux som dirigenter, RIAS-orkestern från Berlin, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under ledning av Ernest Ansermet samt Paris egen Konservatorieorkester och Orchestre National under Bruno Walter. Det är möjligt att Santa Cecilia-akademins i Rom kör och orkester också kommer att delta.

Igor Stravinsky återvänder till Rom för första gången på 13 år för att dirigera sina egna verk. Han kommer att leda två föreställningar av Oedipus Rex", sin balett "Eldfågeln", "Orpheus" och "Apollo" när the New York City Ballet dansar. Denna balett, som har George Balanchine till konstnärlig ledare, kommer också att dansa två nya verk av Sauguet och Auric.

Bland andra verk, som the New York City Ballet uppför, märks Hindemiths 'Fyra temperament", Ravel's "La Valse" och Richard Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel".

Planer håller också på att göras upp för olika serier med eftermiddagsföreläsningar av den fria världens mest framstående författare och filosofer. En av dessa serier kommer att ägnas de se soumettre aux lois implacables du destin. Cette Symphonie traduit avec une magistrale puissance d'expression la grandeur et la misère de l'homme.

Andra planer rör framföranden i Paris av vårt århundrades största dramatiska verk med deltagande av de främsta personligheterna inom de dramatiska konserna. Centrum för musik- och teaterfestivalen blir Théatre des Champs-Elysées.

En mai, Stravinsky sera à Paris. Il y dirigera trois concerts à la tête du New York City Ballet et fera exécuter son oratorio Oedipus Rex et un ballet, Apollon Musagète, qui datent de ses débuts. Ces deux œuvres, données à Paris en 1927 par les Ballets russes de Serge Diaghilev, marquèrent une étape importante dans l'évolution du compositeur. Stravinsky y a créé un style dépouillé et sévère, qui a exercé une influence profonde sur toute la musique contemporaine. Cette double reprise sera pour le public parisien l'occasion de mesurer le chemin parcouru depuis par le compositeur. Il ne doute pas à démontrer le contraire.

Il Tirreno
Livorno 25 [illegible] 1952

GRANDE MOSTRA INTERNAZION

IN PRIMAVERA i "capolavori del s

NOSTRO SERVIZIO

PARIGI, 24. — Con l'Esposizione Internazionale di Belle Arti, che si terrà per tutto il mese di maggio, si riaprirà la tradizionale «stagione primaverile di Parigi» interrotta nel 1939 dalla guerra. Fra gli avvenimenti che daranno particolare risalto a questa manifestazione indetta dal «Congresso per la Libertà della Cultura», e che si intitolerà ai «Capolavori del secolo XX», citeremo la presenza a Parigi di Igor Stravinski e di George Balanchine che collaborarono alla creazione delle più notevoli opere di Serge Diaghilev. Fra gli altri collaboratori citeremo anche Pierre Monteux che diresse la prima esecuzione del «Sacre de Printemps» e Nicola Nabokov, direttore dell'Esposizione, che compose la musica per il primo balletto del Diaghilev.

«Oedipus Rex» rappresentato per la prima volta a Parigi nel 1927 da Jean Cocteau e da Stravinski che ne compose la musica, sarà nuovamente interpretato da Cocteau e diretto da Stravinski. Questa volta però, la rappresentazione sarà pienamente conforme agli intenti deda un coro di 80 artisti, da u... gli autori e verrà interpreta... orchestra con solisti e da ... narratore (Cocteau); un balle... no mimerà i diversi episodi d... la vita di Edipo. Il maggior pr... blema che la regia doveva riso... vere per un'opera di questo g... nere era di riunire tutti gli el... menti necessari su una sola sc... na. Il fatto significativo è ch... tutti questi antichi collaborat... ri di Diaghilev si riuniranno p... contribuire al successo di u... straordinaria manifestazione a... tistica fondata sulla intensa f... de degli animatori del «Congre... so per la Libertà della Cultura... i quali ritengono necessario ch... siano messi in rilievo, in ques... particolare momento, i valo... della nostra cultura insidiati da... la propaganda politica.

Contro i totalitarismi

Il Congresso di cui si parla ... un organismo fondato da intel... lettuali dell'Occidente, di diver... sa fede politica ma uniti dalla... comune opposizione alle pretese... totalitarie rivolte a controllare... le facoltà creatrici dell'uomo. La... Esposizione e le manifestazioni... indette sotto gli auspici di tale... organismo tendono a rintuzzare...

ARGUS de la PRESSE
37, Rue Bergère, PARIS (9e)

N° de débit

Le Parisien Libéré
(1... Rue Réaumur - IIe
7 AVRIL 1952

LA MUSIQUE

FÊTES DE PRINTEMPS

Le programme musical de l'œuvre du XXe siècle vient d'être décidé par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Il est dru et promet de magnifiques joies artistiques. Pendant plus d'un mois, du 30 avril au 1er juin, les concerts et les représentations lyriques alterneront presque quotidiennement. Les ballets occuperont une place importante. Cordelia, de Henri Sauguet, va être créée au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, ainsi que Coup de feu, tiré par Georges Auric, et Don Perlimplin, un opéra animé par la musique du maître italien Vittorio Rieti.

On ne manquera pas d'apprécier au Palais Garnier la Valse de Ravel et la Bourrée fantasque de Chabrier, qui seront interprétées par le New York City Ballet, que dirigera Léon Barzin. Le jeune et déjà éminent compositeur anglais Benjamin Britten conduira sa pièce, Billy Budd, que l'Opéra royal de Covent-Garden mettra en valeur.

Ils seront tous là, les grands orchestres : ceux de la Suisse romande et de Berlin-ouest, de la Radiodiffusion française et de Boston, des Concerts Lamoureux et [illegible]ccademia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia, dirigés par les premiers chefs d'orchestre du monde entier. Les meilleurs compositeurs de notre temps, qui ont enrichi le patrimoine international, et dont quelques-uns reposent dans la tombe, seront représentés par des œuvres importantes. Les Français, les étrangers qui vivent à Paris ou y viendront à cette occasion pourront passer d'inoubliables soirées, se familiariser avec le répertoire américain en écoutant Quatre saints en trois actes de Virgil Thomson, entendre le Fils prodigue de Serge Prokofiev, applaudir Œdipus Rex d'Igor Stravinsky, que le maître conduira lui-même, admirer les Choéphores, oratorio de Darius Milhaud.

W.-L. LANDOWSKI.

Baigneur

Västgöta Demokraten
Borås

Socialdemokratisk

23 FEB 1952

funkturutjämningsavgift utgår vid export, för att få en prisstrens känslighet därför.

Kulturens festival

Den internationella festival för olika konstarter, som kommer att hållas i Paris i maj i år, kommer för första gången sedan kriget att återuppliva den stora, traditionella vårsäsongen i Paris och fyllas med nya uppföranden av balett och musik i Diaghileffs anda. För första gången på många år har man lyckats samla många av Diaghileffs egna medarbetare, och de kommer att tillsammans medverka i festivalen.

"Mästerverk i tjugonde århundradet" anordnas av kommittén för kulturell frihet och bland sina medverkande har den bl. a. Igor Stravinsky och George Balanchine, som arbetade tillsammans med Diaghileff i många av hans mest berömda baletter; Pierre Monteux, som dirigerade det första framförandet av "Våroffer"; Nicolas Nabokov — direktören för festivalen — som komponerade sin första balettmusik för Diaghileff.

Bland dem som redan befinner sig i Paris och väntar på sina gamla vänner är Georges Auric och Henri Sauguet, vilka båda har komponerat nya baletter för festivalen — baletter som skall dansas av the New York City Ballet i koreografi av Balanchine. Båda har tidigare skrivit balettmusik för Diaghileff. Jean Cocteau, som förr i tiden arbetade tillsammans med Stravinsky och Diaghileff, kommer i vår att vara berättaren i "Oedipus Rex". Stravinsky kommer själv att dirigera verket.

"Oedipus Rex" fick sitt första uppförande med Cocteau och Stravinsky i Paris år 1927, men då försökte man inte att ge ett fullständigt scenuppförande. Sedan dess har de väntat på ett lämpligt tillfälle att få ge verket så som det ursprungligen skrevs, dvs. med en 80-manna manskör, orkester, solister, berättare och en dansör, som pantomimiskt framställer Oedipus levnad.

Det är signifikativt att dessa Diaghileffs gamla medarbetare återförenas i vår inom ramen för denna unika demonstration av det bästa vårt århundrade kan visa upp inom olika konstarter, och som grundar sig på initiativtagarnas tro på att det är nödvändigt att då och då påminna om och på pressfriheten — den frihet som först kommer att berövas oss i händelse av anfall på våra kulturella institutioner.

Att demonstrera de värden vår [illegible] äger för att [illegible] misskända till följd av politiska attacker.

Kommittén är en organisation av västerländska intellektuella, representerande alla politiska åskådningar, och vilka alla har det gemensamt att de står i opposition till totalitära kontroller över människans skaparkraft. De har tagit initiativet till denna festival som ett svar på den totalitära kritiken, som påstår att den västerländska kulturen är dekadent, formalistisk och att den inte längre kan producera något av värde.

Samtliga de verk, som skall presenteras under majfestivalen; har skapatsunder tjugonde århundradet. Festivalen vill försöka bevisa att framsteg inom olika konstorter endast kan förekomma i ett klimat av fullkomlig intellektuell frihet sådan som vår tids skapande konstnärer har åtnjutit i den västerländska civilisationen.

Festivalen kommer att samla till Paris några av världens finaste musikaliska institutioner, t. ex. Wiens statsopera och filharmoniska orkester i två framföranden av Alban Bergs "Wozzeck", Bostons symfoniorkester med Charles Münch och Pierre Monteux som dirigenter, RIAS-orkestern från Berlin, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under ledning av Ernest Ansermet samt Paris egen Konservatorieorkester och Orchestre National under Bruno Walter. Det är möjligt att Santa Cecilia-akademins i Rom kör och orkester också kommer att delta.

Igor Stravinsky återvänder till Rom för första gången på 13 år för att dirigera sina egna verk. Han kommer att leda två föreställningar av Oedipus Rex", sin balett "Eldfågeln", "Orpheus" och "Apollo" när the New York City Ballet dansar. Denna balett, som har George Balanchine till konstnärlig ledare, kommer också att dansa två nya verk av Sauguet och Auric.

Bland andra verk, som the New York City Ballet uppför, märks Hindemiths "Fyra temperament", Ravel's "La Valse" och Richard Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel".

Planer håller också på att göras upp för olika serier med eftermiddagsföreläsningar av den fria världens mest framstående författare och filosofer. En av dessa serier kommer att ägnas

Andra planer rör framföranden i Paris av vårt århundrades största dramatiska verk med deltagande av de främsta personligheterna inom de dramatiska konsterna. Centrum för musik- och teaterfestivalen blir Théatre des Champs-Elysées.

Il Tirreno
Livorno 25 febbraio 1952

GRANDE MOSTRA INTERNAZION

IN PRIMAVERA i "capolavori del s

NOSTRO SERVIZIO

PARIGI, 24. — Con l'Esposizione Internazionale di Belle Arti, che si terrà per tutto il mese di maggio, si riaprirà la tradizionale «stagione primaverile di Parigi» interrotta nel 1939 dalla guerra. Fra gli avvenimenti che daranno particolare risalto a questa manifestazione indetta dal «Congresso per la Libertà della Cultura», e che si intitolerà ai «Capolavori del secolo XX», citeremo la presenza a Parigi di Igor Stravinski e di George Balanchine che collaborarono alla creazione delle più notevoli opere di Serge Diaghilev. Fra gli altri collaboratori citeremo anche Pierre Monteux, che diresse la prima esecuzione del «Sacre de Printemps» e Nicola Nabokov, direttore dell'Esposizione, che compose la musica per il primo balletto del Diaghilev.

«Oedipus Rex» rappresentato per la prima volta a Parigi nel 1927 da Jean Cocteau e da Stravinski che ne compose la musica, sarà nuovamente interpretato da Cocteau e diretto da Stravinski. Questa volta però, la rappresentazione sarà pienamente conforme agli intenti de-

da un coro di 80 artisti, da u gli autori e verrà interpreta orchestra con solisti e da narratore (Cocteau); un balle no mimerà i diversi episodi d la vita di Edipo. Il maggior pr blema che la regia doveva ris vere per un'opera di questo g nere era di riunire tutti gli el menti necessari su una sola sc na. Il fatto significativo è ch tutti questi antichi collaborat ri di Diaghilev si riuniranno p contribuire al successo di u straordinaria manifestazione a tistica fondata sulla intensa f de degli animatori del «Congre so per la Libertà della Cultura i quali ritengono necessario ch siano messi in rilievo, in ques particolare momento, i valo della nostra cultura insidiati da la propaganda politica.

Contro i totalitarismi

Il Congresso di cui si parla un organismo fondato da intel lettuali dell'Occidente, di diver sa fede politica ma uniti dalla comune opposizione alle pretes totalitarie rivolte a controllare le facoltà creatrici dell'uomo. L Esposizione e le manifestazion indette sotto gli auspici di tale organismo tendono a rintuzzare

ARGUS de la PRESSE
37, Rue Bergère, PARIS (9e)

N° de débit

Le Parisien Libéré
18, Rue Réaumur - IIe
7 AVRIL 1952

LA MUSIQUE

FÊTES DE PRINTEMPS

Le programme musical de l'œuvre du XXe siècle vient d'être décidé par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Il est riche et promet de magnifiques joies artistiques. Pendant plus d'un mois, du 30 avril au 1er juin, les concerts et les représentations lyriques alterneront presque quotidiennement. Les ballets occuperont une place importante. Cordelia, de Henri Sauguet, va être créée au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, ainsi que Coup de feu, tiré par Georges Auric, et Don Perlimplin, un opéra animé par la musique du maître italien Vittorio Rieti.

On ne manquera pas d'apprécier au Palais Garnier la Valse de Ravel et la Bourrée fantasque de Chabrier, qui seront interprétées par le New York City Ballet, que dirigera Léon Barzin. Le jeune et déjà éminent compositeur anglais Benjamin Britten conduira sa pièce, Billy Budd, que l'Opéra royal de Covent-Garden mettra en valeur.

Ils seront tous là, les grands orchestres : ceux de la Suisse romande et de Berlin-ouest, de la Radiodiffusion française et de Boston, des Concerts Lamoureux et de l'Académia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia, dirigés par les premiers chefs d'orchestre du monde entier. Les meilleurs compositeurs de notre temps, qui ont enrichi le patrimoine international, et dont quelques-uns reposent dans la tombe, seront représentés par des œuvres importantes. Les Français, les étrangers qui vivent à Paris ou y viendront à cette occasion pourront passer d'inoubliables soirées, se familiariser avec le répertoire américain en écoutant Quatre saints en trois actes de Virgil Thomson, entendre le Fils prodigue de Serge Prokofiev, applaudir Œdipus Rex d'Igor Stravinsky, que le maître conduira lui-même, admirer les Choéphores, oratorio de Darius Milhaud.

W.-L. LANDOWSKI.

Wagner

[267]

Västgöta Demokraten
Borås

Socialdemokratisk

23 FEB 1957

funkturutjämningsav... utgår vid export, för att få en pris-

...striens känslighet därför.

Kulturens festival

Den internationella festival för olika konstarter, som kommer att hållas i Paris i maj i år, kommer för första gången sedan kriget att återuppliva den stora, traditionella vårsäsongen i Paris och fyllas med nya uppföranden av balett och musik i Diaghileffs anda. För första gången på många år har man lyckats samla många av Diaghileffs egna medarbetare, och de kommer att tillsammans medverka i festivalen.

"Mästerverk i tjugonde århundradet" anordnas av kommittén för kulturell frihet och bland sina medverkande har den bl. a. Igor Stravinsky och George Balanchine, som arbetade tillsammans med Diaghileff i många av hans mest berömda baletter; Pierre Monteux, som dirigerade det första framförandet av "Våroffer"; Nicolas Nabokov — direktören för festivalen — som komponerade sin första balettmusik för Diaghileff.

Bland dem som redan befinner sig i Paris och väntar på sina gamla vänner är Georges Auric och Henri Sauguet, vilka båda har komponerat nya baletter för festivalen — baletter som skall dansas av the New York City Ballet i koreografi av Balanchine. Båda har tidigare skrivit balettmusik för Diaghileff. Jean Cocteau, som förr i tiden arbetade tillsammans med Stravinsky och Diaghileff, kommer i vår att vara berättaren i "Oedipus Rex". Stravinsky kommer själv att dirigera verket.

"Oedipus Rex" fick sitt första uppförande med Cocteau och Stravinsky i Paris år 1927, men då försökte man inte att ge ett fullständigt scenuppförande. Sedan dess har de väntat på ett lämpligt tillfälle att få ge verket så som det ursprungligen skrevs, dvs. med en 80-manna manskör, orkester, solister, berättare och en dansör, som pantomimiskt framställer Oedipus levnad.

Det är signifikativt att dessa Diaghileffs gamla medarbetare återförenas i vår inom ramen för denna unika demonstration av det bästa vårt århundrade kan visa upp inom olika konstarter, och som grundar sig på initiativtagarnas tro på att det är nödvändigt att då och då påminna om och på pressfriheten — den frihet som först kommer att berövas oss i händelse av anfall på våra kulturella institutioner.

nytt demonstrera de värden vår ...läger för att ...isskända ...till följd av politiska attacker.

Kommittén är en organisation av västerländska intellektuella, representerande alla politiska åskådningar, och vilka alla har det gemensamt att de står i opposition till totalitära kontroller över människans skaparkraft. De har tagit initiativet till denna festival som ett svar på den totalitära kritiken, som påstår att den västerländska kulturen är dekadent, formalistisk och att den inte längre kan producera något av värde.

Samtliga de verk, som skall presenteras under majfestivalen; har skapatsunder tjugonde århundradet. Festivalen vill försöka bevisa att framsteg inom olika konstorter endast kan förekomma i ett klimat av fullkomlig intellektuell frihet sådan som vår tids skapande konstnärer har åtnjutit i den västerländska civilisationen.

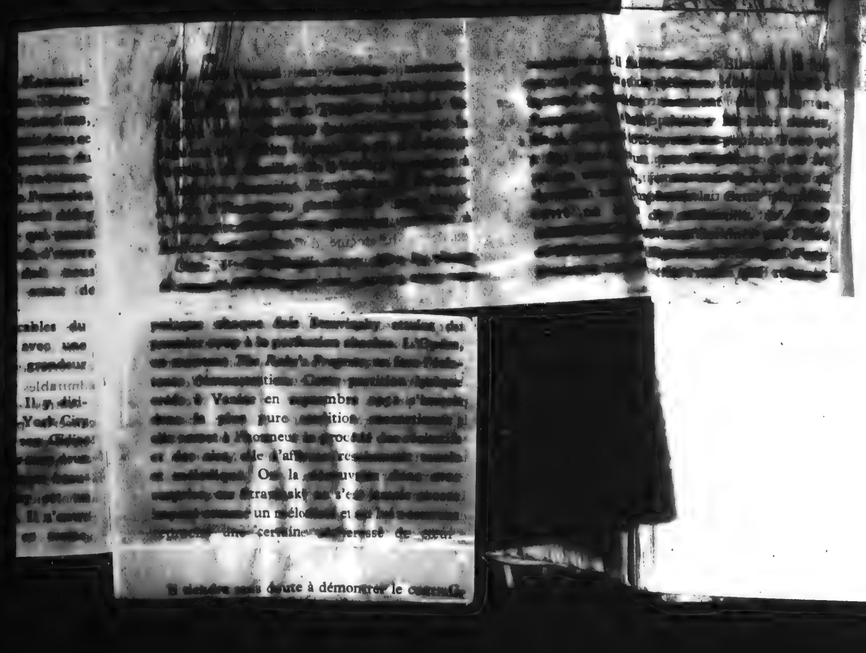
Festivalen kommer att samla till Paris några av världens finaste musikaliska institutioner, t. ex. Wiens statsopera och filharmoniska orkester i två framföranden av Alban Bergs "Wozzeck", Bostons symfoniorkester med Charles Münch och Pierre Monteux som dirigenter, RIAS-orkestern från Berlin, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under ledning av Ernest Ansermet samt Paris egen Konservatorieorkester och Orchestre National under Bruno Walter. Det är möjligt att Santa Cecilia-akademins i Rom kör och orkester också kommer att delta.

Igor Stravinsky återvänder till Rom för första gången på 13 år för att dirigera sina egna verk. Han kommer att leda två föreställningar av Oedipus Rex", sin balett "Eldfågeln", "Orpheus" och "Apollo" när the New York City Ballet dansar. Denna balett, som har George Balanchine till konstnärlig ledare, kommer också att dansa två nya verk av Sauguet och Auric.

Bland andra verk, som the New York City Ballet uppför, märks Hindemiths 'Fyra temperament", Ravel's "La Valse" och Richard Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel".

Planer håller också på att göras upp för olika serier med eftermiddagsföreläsningar av den fria världens mest framstående författare och filosofer. En av dessa serier kommer att ägnas

Andra planer rör framföranden i Paris av vårt århundrades största dramatiska verk med deltagande av de främsta personligheterna inom de dramatiska konsterna. Centrum för musik- och teaterfestivalen blir Théatre des Champs-Elysées.



Il Tirreno
Livorno 25 aprile 1952

3

GRANDE MOSTRA INTERNAZIONALE IN FRANCIA

IN PRIMAVERA A PARIGI i "capolavori del secolo XX"

NOSTRO SERVIZIO

PARIGI, 24. — Con l'Esposizione Internazionale di Belle Arti, che si terrà per tutto il mese di maggio, si riaprirà la tradizionale «stagione primaverile di Parigi» interrotta nel 1939 dalla guerra. Fra gli avvenimenti che daranno particolare risalto a questa manifestazione indetta dal «Congresso per la Libertà della Cultura», e che si intitolerà ai «Capolavori del secolo XX», citeremo la presenza a Parigi di Igor Stravinski e di George Balanchine che collaborarono alla creazione delle più notevoli opere di Serge Diaghilev. Fra gli altri collaboratori citeremo anche Pierre Monteux, che diresse la prima esecuzione del «Sacre de Printemps» e Nicola Nabokov, direttore dell'Esposizione, che compose la musica per il primo balletto del Diaghilev.

«Oedipus Rex» rappresentato per la prima volta a Parigi nel 1927 da Jean Cocteau e da Stravinski che ne compose la musica, sarà nuovamente interpretato da Cocteau e diretto da Stravinski. Questa volta però, la rappresentazione sarà pienamente conforme agli intenti degli autori e verrà interpretata da un coro di 80 artisti, da una orchestra con solisti e da un narratore (Cocteau); un ballerino mimerà i diversi episodi della vita di Edipo. Il maggior problema che la regia doveva risolvere per un'opera di questo genere era di riunire tutti gli elementi necessari su una sola scena. Il fatto significativo è che tutti questi antichi collaboratori di Diaghilev si riuniranno per contribuire al successo di una straordinaria manifestazione artistica fondata sulla intensa fede degli animatori del «Congresso per la Libertà della Cultura», i quali ritengono necessario che siano messi in rilievo, in questo particolare momento, i valori della nostra cultura insidiati dalla propaganda politica.

Contro i totalitarismi

Il Congresso di cui si parla è un organismo fondato da intellettuali dell'Occidente, di diversa fede politica ma uniti dalla comune opposizione alle pretese totalitarie rivolte a controllare le facoltà creatrici dell'uomo. La Esposizione e le manifestazioni indette sotto gli auspici di tale organismo tendono a rintuzzare le critiche totalitarie che presentano la cultura occidentale come decadente, formalista ed improduttiva.

Molte delle opere che verranno presentate durante l'Esposizione videro la luce a Parigi nel corso del decennio che seguì la prima guerra mondiale. Tutte indistintamente le opere presentate sono creazioni del secolo XX, periodo che gli organizzatori ritengono straordinariamente fecondo e in cui le tecniche nuove, e le classiche hanno avuto notevole sviluppo. Anzi, si può dire che tanta fecondità e tale sviluppo sono stati possibili soltanto in un ambiente di assoluta libertà intellettuale, di cui appunto han potuto usufriure gli artisti e creatori dell'Occidente.

Converranno a Parigi alcuni dei più noti complessi musicali del mondo, come l'Orchestra Filarmonica e l'Opera di Vienna che darà due rappresentazioni del capolavoro di Alban Berg «Wozzek»; l'Orchestra sinfonica di Boston che sarà diretta successivamente da Charles Munh e da Pierre Monteux; la «RIAS», orchestra della radio di Berlino; l'Orchestra svizzera di Ginevra, diretta da Ernest Ansermet; la Orchestra del Conservatorio e l'Orchestra nazionale di Parigi, dirette da Bruno Walter. Fra le partecipazioni probabili citeremo quella dei cori e dell'Orchestra dell'Accademia di S. Cecilia di Roma.

Stravinski ritornerà a Parigi per la prima volta dopo 13 anni per presiedere all'esecuzione delle proprie opere. Egli dirigerà due rappresentazioni di «Oedipus Rex» e l'esecuzione dei balletti «L'oiseau de feu», «The Cage», «Orpheus» ed «Apollon Musagète», interpretati dal «New York City Ballet». Questa compagnia, di cui George Balanchine assume la direzione artistica, interpreterà pure due nuove opere dei compositori francesi Henri Sauguet e Georges Auric. Il repertorio del «New York City Ballet» comprende pure «Four Temperaments» di Hindemith, «La Valse» di Ravel e «Till Eulenspiegel» di Strauss.

Una mostra polemica

Contemporaneamente al programma musicale, una grande Esposizione di arte pittorica avrà luogo al Museo d'Arte moderna di Parigi. La direzione ne è assunta da James Johnson Sweeney, ex direttore del «Museum of Modern Art» di New York e da René Huyghe, ex conservatore del Museo del Louvre. Eminenti scrittori e filosofi del mondo libero daranno il loro concorso con una serie di conferenze, una delle quali sarà consacrata alla libertà di stampa, prima libertà minacciata dall'eventuale offensiva contro le istituzioni culturali. Sono pure in corso trattative per la rappresentazione al teatro dei «Champs Elysées», ove si svolgeranno le manifestazioni musicali e teatrali, di alcune grandi opere drammatiche col concorso dei più noti artisti del teatro di prosa.

Parlando dell'Esposizione di cui è co-direttore, Nicola Nabokov, segretario generale del «Congresso per la Libertà della Cultura», ha messo in rilievo che nella prima metà del secolo «il genio creatore dei poeti, pittori e compositori ha prodotto una mole imponente di capolavori artistici».

«Contemporaneamente, egli ha soggiunto, i rivolgimenti politici di questo primo cinquantennio hanno provocato una violenta reazione contro la libertà creatrice dello spirito. Importanti movimenti politici hanno tentato di ostacolare la libera espressione degli spiriti più noti. Si è quindi tentato, con disposizioni draconiane, di trasformare l'artista in uno strumento statale, e di imporre la creazione di opere atte a soddisfare i bisogni propagandistici dei regimi totalitari. Hanno tentato, e non senza un certo successo, di suscitare in noi stessi il dubbio sulla validità, la forza e la vitalità della nostra cultura occidentale».

Nabohov ha concluso affermando che è appunto per dissipare questi dubbi e dare una risposta esauriente alle insinuazioni della propaganda, che il Congresso per la Libertà della Cultura ha deciso di presentare la grande Esposizione dei «Capolavori del secolo XX».

Jean Louis Sarnette

ARGUS de la PRESSE
37, Rue Bergère, PARIS (9e)

N° de débit

Le Parisien Libéré
(14, Rue Réaumur - IIe
7 AVRIL 1952

LA MUSIQUE

FÊTES DE PRINTEMPS

LE programme musical de l'œuvre du XXe siècle vient d'être décidé par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Il est d'u et promet de magnifiques joies artistiques. Pendant plus d'un mois, du 30 avril au 1er juin, les concerts et les représentations lyriques alterneront presque quotidiennement. Les ballets occuperont une place importante. Cordelia, de Henri Sauguet, va être créée au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, ainsi que Coup de feu, tiré par Georges Auric, et Don Perlimplin, un opéra animé par la musique du maître italien Vittorio Rieti.

On ne manquera pas d'apprécier au Palais Garnier la Valse de Ravel et la Bourrée fantasque de Chabrier, qui seront interprétées par le New York City Ballet, que dirigera Leon Barzin. Le jeune et déjà éminent compositeur anglais Benjamin Britten conduira sa pièce, Billy Budd, que l'Opéra royal de Covent-Garden mettra en valeur.

Ils seront tous là, les grands orchestres : ceux de la Suisse romande et de Berlin-ouest, de la Radiodiffusion française et de Boston, des Concerts Lamoureux et de l'Accademia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia, dirigés par les premiers chefs d'orchestre du monde entier. Les meilleurs compositeurs de notre temps, qui ont enrichi le patrimoine international, et dont quelques-uns reposent dans la tombe, seront représentés par des œuvres importantes. Les Français, les étrangers qui vivent à Paris ou y viendront à cette occasion pourront passer d'inoubliables soirées, se familiariser avec le répertoire américain en écoutant Quatre saints en trois actes de Virgil Thomson, entendre le Fils prodigue de Serge Prokofiev, applaudir Œdipus Rex d'Igor Stravinsky, que le maître conduira lui-même, admirer les Choéphores, oratorio de Darius Milhaud.

W.-L. LANDOWSKI.

[26-]

Extract from

"THE SCOTSMAN"

EDINBURGH

Date .....
(See information overleaf.) 12

MODERN MASTERPIECES

Composers to Conduct Own Works in Paris

From Our Own Reporter

LONDON, Monday

BENJAMIN BRITTEN and Igor Stravinsky are to conduct their own works during a 15-day Paris exposition under the title "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century," which begins on April 30. At a reception here this evening given by the Congress for Cultural Freedom—a body of intellectuals of various countries—some details of the programme were given.

Charles Munch is to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Boehm will conduct the Vienna Opera and Philharmonic Orchestra in "Wozzeck"—recently performed at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden—and the New York City Ballet will dance ballets by Igor Stravinsky with the French composer conducting.

There are also to be art exhibitions in the Musée d'Art Moderne at which some Henry Moore sculptures will be seen and a series of six "literary discussions" which, it is hoped, will be attended by Stephen Spender and W. H. Auden.

Bertrand Russell (Lord Russell) is an honorary chairman of the Congress for Cultural Freedom, which has among its objects the preservation of freedom for writers, thinkers, composers, artists, and philosophers.

In the initial notices a closing concert conducted by Leopold Stokowsky at the Palais de Chaillot was announced, but it is understood that the conductor will not now take part.

PARIS-PRESSE

2 AVR 1952

POUR SON FESTIVAL GEANT DU XX[e] SIECLE

Paris cherche une réplique à la Colombe de Picasso

CASSANDRE ne dort plus: Jour et nuit, le fameux décorateur est hanté par la colombe de Picasso. C'est à cette colombe dont les communistes ont fait l'emblème de toutes leur propagande auprès des intellectuels que Cassandre est chargé de trouver une réplique. Et cette réplique sera l'emblème de la plus grande manifestation culturelle des temps modernes : « L'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle ».

Ce Festival, le Festival des Festivals, est une manifestation grandiose organisée le mois prochain à Paris par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture.

Le programme musical est le plus brillant que le monde ait connu : Charles Munch reviendra à Paris diriger le fameux orchestre symphonique de Boston. L'Opéra de Covent Garden, l'Opéra et l'Orchestre philharmonique de Vienne, l'Academia Santa Cecilia de Rome, l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande, celui de Berlin viendront s'ajouter aux meilleurs orchestres français.

Enfin, l'opéra noir de Gertrude Stein et Virgil Thomson « Quatre Saints en trois actes » sera créé pour la première fois à Paris où il fut pourtant composé en 1933.

La partie chorégraphique du Festival sera aussi remarquable : George Balanchine, le directeur du fameux New-York City Ballet donnera avec sa troupe six soirées de ballets qu'il est venu mettre au point à Paris le mois dernier.

Le ballet « Orphée » de Stravinsky sera dirigé par Stravinsky lui-même. C'est la première fois depuis treize ans que le grand compositeur paraîtra en public à Paris.

Autre réapparition de Stravinsky : il dirigera lui même la première représentation à Paris de son « Œdipus-Rex ».

Dans le domaine de la peinture, une exposition réunira au musée d'Art moderne des tableaux de maîtres qui sortiront à cette occasion pour la première fois des collections privées où ils se dissimulaient depuis des années.

Le programme dramatique qui n'est pas encore entièrement au point verra déjà une participation notable : celle de William Faulkner qui viendra mettre en scène la création mondiale de sa pièce « Requiem for a Nun ».

COMBAT - PARIS

12 AVR 1952

CHARLES MUNCH arrivera à Paris le 27 avril

Il sera accompagné d'un certain nombre de musiciens de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston

Un avion spécial d'Air France transportera, le dimanche 27 avril, de Boston à Paris, un certain nombre de musiciens de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, accompagnés du chef d'orchestre Charles Münch.

Les femmes des exécutants participeront également au voyage.

Les instruments seront acheminés à bord du même avion L'orchestre donnera son dernier concert à Boston le 26 avril, et pourra commencer ses répétitions à Paris dans la matinée du 28. Au total, 104 musiciens de la célèbre formation traverseront l'Atlantique à la fin du mois, par air ou par mer, et donneront plusieurs concerts dans le cadre de l' « Œuvre du XX[e] siècle », organisée pendant le mois de mai par le Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture.

LE MONDE. — 23 avril 1952. —

— C'est la chorale Saint-Guillaume de Strasbourg, que dirige Fritz Münch (le frère de Charles Münch), qui interprétera les œuvres prévues au programme du concert inaugural de l'Œuvre du vingtième siècle. Débutant avec le Magnificat de Bach et la Cantate n° 6, ce programme se terminera sur le Stabat Mater de Poulenc, qui n'a encore jamais été joué à Paris. C'est à l'église Saint-Roch que ce concert se déroulera en hommage aux victimes des tyrannies du siècle et en présence d'une centaine de membres de la Fédération nationale des déportés et internés de la Résistance.

LE FIGARO — 30

LES SPECTACLES

Charles Münch et Igor Stravinsky à Orly

Suite de la première page

« Stravinsky, lui, ne faisait qu'une brève escale à Paris : « Je dois, ce soir même, me dit-il, diriger à Genève une répétition de The Rake's Progress, mais je suis très ému de rentrer en France pour la première fois depuis que les événements de la dernière guerre nous ont séparés...

» Et puis quelle joie immense de pouvoir faire entendre à mes amis français, grâce aux dévoués organisateurs du Festival de l'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle, quelques-unes de mes plus récentes compositions, et de retrouver ici les magnifiques orchestres que j'ai toujours aimés et appréciés. »

Igor Stravinsky saisit alors un micro

IGOR STRAVINSKY

pour faire une brève déclaration ; puis il le tend à Charles Münch : « Voilà notre bâton de maréchal... Je suis un peu abasourdi par tant d'heures de vol ».

Charles Münch me dit à son tour sa joie de retrouver Paris : « Pour moi ce sont déjà presque des vacances ; je dois retourner aux U.S.A. en juillet, mais je reviendrai passer le mois de septembre en France. Avant de me reposer j'espère que nous ferons tous ici du bon travail pour démontrer l'exceptionnelle valeur du XX[e] siècle musical.

Quant à Vittorio Rieti, il contemple l'inscription italienne gravée au-dessus de la salle d'attente et que l'on peut traduire « Salle de l'Espérance ». Il me la désigne : « N'est-ce pas là, en effet, mieux que tout autre discours, exprimer très exactement l'idéal du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture ? »

CHARLES MUNCH

Claude Baignères.

Jean Vilar veut nous montrer un Harpagon sympathique

LE Théâtre National Populaire présentera, ce soir, au Palais de Chaillot, son nouveau spectacle : L'Avare. Triples débuts pour Jean Vilar : c'est la première fois qu'il monte une pièce de Molière, la première fois qu'il met en scène une œuvre comique, et la première fois qu'il joue le rôle principal d'un spectacle monté par lui.

Jean Vilar sera donc Harpagon. Mais ayant étudié la question de très près il a décidé de rendre son héros sympathique. Harpagon est un être normal, pense-t-il, dont la bonhomie et la gentillesse ne font pas de doute, mais qui est possédé d'un vice. Il est avare comme d'autres sont opiomanes. D'autre part, Vilar a pris le parti de donner aux décors et aux costumes un certain luxe, car Harpagon menait un grand train de vie: il a de nombreux domestiques, et les dix mille écus dont il parle, et qui ne sont qu'une partie de sa fortune, représentent soixante-quinze millions de francs.

Mais le problème le plus difficile à résoudre a été celui de la présentation scénique. Jouer L'Avare sur un plateau de vingt-huit mètres sur trente eût été une folie. Jean Vilar a tourné la difficulté en montant au milieu de la scène de Chaillot un deuxième plateau, sorte de praticable haut de près d'un mètre sur lequel joueront les acteurs.

M. R.

4-12-1951

Paris-presse-l'intransigeant

LE JOURNAL DE LA MUSIQUE

Pour le printemps prochain

" LE FESTIVAL DE PARIS SE PRÉPARE "

DANS les milieux musicaux bien informés, on chuchote qu'il est question d'organiser, au printemps prochain, un « Festival de Paris ». Naturellement, celui-ci, pour être valable, devra avoir un éclat incomparable. Pour l'instant, il n'y a que de beaux projets. Parmi ceux-ci figure une série de concerts d'œuvres de Strawinsky, dirigées par lui-même, avec, comme clou, une représentation de son récent opéra « The Rakes progress ». Les discussions ont lieu autour de quelques milliers de dollars. Personne n'ignore, en effet, que Igor Strawinsky est le musicien le plus cher du monde (il toucha 25.000 dollars à Venise pour y venir créer son opéra).

D'autre part, il est question de faire venir l'orchestre de Philadelphie au grand complet avec son chef Eugène Ormandy. Là encore des milliers de dollars sont en jeu. L'affaire pourrait se faire, car plusieurs grandes villes européennes sont disposées à participer aux frais d'une grandes tournée de cet orchestre, à condition, toutefois, que le gouvernement américain fasse cadeau du transport, ce qui n'a pas l'air de l'enthousiasmer spécialement.

On dit aussi que l'orchestre de Boston, dirigé par Charles Munch, est aussi sur les rangs. Qui viendra en Europe, de Boston ou de Philadelphie ? Peut-être ni l'un ni l'autre.

On saura malgré tout, bientôt, si ce « Festival de Paris » aura lieu ou non.

pas, se présente en robe du soir, comme une virtuose quelconque, et joue des castagnettes accoudée au piano de son accompagnateur, Robert Machado. Le 7 décembre, outre Machado, la harpiste Lily Laskine accompagnera Soledad Agnès. Quand on lui proposa de jouer avec une « joueuse de castagnettes », Lily Laskine crut à une plaisanterie. Néanmoins, elle demanda à entendre Soledad Agnès. Elle fut si enthousiaste qu'elle est en train d'apprendre quatre pièces d'Albeniz qu'elle ne connaissait pas pour pouvoir accompagner les castagnettes.

Extrait du Journal : Luzerner Tagblatt
Luzern

24 April 1952

Pariser Musikfestwochen

30. April bis 1. Juni 1952

Das musikalische Programm der vom «Congrès pour la liberté de la culture» in Paris organisierten Veranstaltung «L'Oeuvre du vingtième siècle» ist endgültig festgesetzt worden. Es enthält eine solche Fülle von Ereignissen, daß nur auf einige der wesentlichsten hingewiesen werden kann. Das Eröffnungskonzert in der Kirche St-Roch bringt «Stabat Mater» von Francis Poulenc mit Renée Defraiteur, Lucie Rauh, Ernst Häfliger, Pierre Mollet und dem Organisten Charles Mueller unter der Leitung von Charles Munch. An Opern werden dargeboten: «Wozzek» mit Wiener Kräften unter Oscar Fritz Schuh; «Don Perlimplin» von Lorca (Musik: Vittorio Rieti) mit Maria Morales; «Billy Budd» von Britten (Königliche Oper von Covent Garden unter Leitung des Komponisten); «Vier Heilige in drei Akten», Buch: Gertrud Stein, Musik: Virgil Thomson (American National Theatre and Academy). Auf choreographischem Gebiet sind zu erwarten: «Cordelia» von Henri Sauguet und «Coup de feu» von Georges Auric (Grand Ballet du Marquis de Cuevas); «Der Käfig» von Strawinsky, «Die vier Temperamente» von Hindemith, «Till Eulenspiegel» von Richard Strauß, «Das Wunderkind» von Prokofjew, «Orpheus» von Strawinsky (New-York-City Ballet). Unter den sinfonischen Werken seien genannt: «Das Lied von der Erde» mit Kathleen Ferrier und Lorenz Fehenberger unter Bruno Walter (Orchester der Großen Oper); 2. Sinfonie von Honegger unter Charles Munch (Boston Symphony Orchestra), 5. Sinfonie von Honegger und Concerto für Violine und Orchester von Frank Martin (Orchestre de la Suisse romande unter Ansermet); Konzertsuite aus der Oper «Jekaterina Izmailowa» von Schostakowitsch (Orchester Rias aus Westberlin unter Ferenc Fricsay). Von Oratorien sind zu erwähnen: «Oedipus Rex» von Strawinsky, nach dem Text von Jean Cocteau unter Leitung des Komponisten, «Erwartung» von Arnold Schönberg unter Hans Rosbaud, «Les Choéphores», und «Finale der Eumeniden» von Darius Milhaud (Accademia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia unter Igor Markewitch). Schließlich sind Schöpfungen von Strawinsky und Bartók gewidmete Abende vorgesehen.

E. S.

EN AVANT-GARDE de «l'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle»

STRAVINSKY et Charles MUNCH sont arrivés hier à Orly

ILS NOUS DISENT LEUR JOIE DE RETROUVER LA FRANCE

C'EST à Orly que le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture, représenté par MM. Nabokov et Dujardin, tenait hier ses assises pour recevoir à quelques minutes d'intervalle trois de ses plus ardents défenseurs...

Au début de l'après-midi, l'orchestre de Boston avait débarqué en force sur l'aérodrome écrasé sous un soleil de plomb. Deux heures plus tard, son chef, Charles Münch, arrivait en compagnie du compositeur italien Vittorio Rieti, tandis que l'avion qui amenait Stravinsky apparaissait déjà à l'horizon...

(Suite page 7, col. 1 et 2)

EN PAGE 7 :

PREFACE A « L'ŒUVRE DU XX[e] SIECLE »

par Denis de ROUGEMONT

LE MONDE

[illegible] AVRIL 1952

L'OPÉRA DANS LE CADRE DE L'ŒUVRE DU VINGTIÈME SIÈCLE

C'est durant tout le mois de mai que se dérouleront au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées les manifestations artistiques organisées par le congrès pour la liberté de la culture sous le titre significatif de l'Œuvre du vingtième siècle.

Soucieux de faire rentrer les deux scènes dont il est responsable dans l'esprit de ces manifestations, M. Maurice Lehmann, administrateur de la réunion des théâtres lyriques nationaux, a consacré leurs programmes pour mai à la reprise de chefs-d'œuvre contemporains.

C'est ainsi que l'Opéra-Comique reprendra le 30 avril et les 8, 14 et 22 mai Pelléas et Mélisande, de Debussy, à l'occasion du cinquantième anniversaire de la création, et le 15, Madame Bovary, de Bondeville. Le 23 et le 26 l'Opéra affichera la Salomé de Richard Strauss. Un concert festival Honegger, avec Jeanne au bûcher et Antigone au programme, se déroulera le 16 au palais Garnier tandis qu'un festival Ravel aura lieu le 29 en la salle Favart.

Enfin, c'est à l'Opéra, en soirée de gala, que seront donnés le premier concert du Boston Symphony Orchestra et le premier spectacle du New York City Ballet de George Balanchine.

Extract from

"THE SCOTSMAN"

EDINBURGH

Date ..... APR 1952
(See information overleaf.)

MODERN MASTERPIECES

Composers to Conduct Own Works in Paris

167 From Our Own Reporter

LONDON, Monday

BENJAMIN BRITTEN and Igor Stravinsky are to conduct their own works during a 15-day Paris exposition under the title "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century," which begins on April 30. At a reception here this evening given by the Congress for Cultural Freedom—a body of intellectuals of various countries—some details of the programme were given.

Charles Munch is to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Karl Boehm will conduct the Vienna Opera and Philharmonic Orchestra in "Wozzeck"—recently performed at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden—and the New York City Ballet will dance ballets by Igor Stravinsky with the French composer conducting.

There are also to be art exhibitions in the Musée d'Art Moderne at which some Henry Moore sculptures will be seen and a series of six "literary discussions" which, it is hoped, will be attended by Stephen Spender and W. H. Auden.

Bertrand Russell (Lord Russell) is an honorary chairman of the Congress for Cultural Freedom, which has among its objects the preservation of freedom for writers, thinkers, composers, artists, and philosophers.

In the initial notices a closing concert conducted by Leopold Stokowsky at the Palais de Chaillot was announced, but it is understood that the conductor will not now take part.

PARIS-PRESSE

2 AVR 1952

POUR SON FESTIVAL GEANT DU XX[e] SIECLE

161

Paris cherche une réplique à la Colombe de Picasso

CASSANDRE ne dort plus. Jour et nuit, le fameux décorateur est hanté par la colombe de Picasso. C'est à cette colombe dont les communistes ont fait l'emblème de toutes leur propagande auprès des intellectuels que Cassandre est chargé de trouver une réplique. Et cette réplique sera l'emblème de la plus grande manifestation culturelle des temps modernes : « L'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle ».

Ce Festival, le Festival des Festivals, est une manifestation grandiose organisée le mois prochain à Paris par le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture.

Le programme musical est le plus brillant que le monde ait connu : Charles Munch reviendra à Paris diriger le fameux orchestre symphonique de Boston. L'Opéra de Covent Garden, l'Opéra et l'Orchestre philharmonique de Vienne, l'Academia Santa Cecilia de Rome, l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande, celui de Berlin viendront s'ajouter aux meilleurs orchestres français.

Enfin, l'opéra noir de Gertrude Stein et Virgil Thomson « Quatre Saints en trois actes » sera créé pour la première fois à Paris où il fut pourtant composé en 1933.

La partie chorégraphique du Festival sera aussi remarquable : George Balanchine, le directeur du fameux New-York City Ballet donnera avec sa troupe six soirées de ballets qu'il est venu mettre au point à Paris le mois dernier.

Le ballet « Orphée » de Stravinsky sera dirigé par Stravinsky lui-même. C'est la première fois depuis treize ans que le grand compositeur paraîtra en public à Paris.

Autre réapparition de Stravinsky : il dirigera lui même la première représentation à Paris de son « Œdipus-Rex ».

Dans le domaine de la peinture, une exposition réunira au musée d'Art moderne des tableaux de maîtres qui sortiront à cette occasion pour la première fois des collections privées où ils se dissimulaient depuis des années.

Le programme dramatique qui n'est pas encore entièrement au point verra déjà une participation notable : celle de William Faulkner qui viendra mettre en scène la création mondiale de sa pièce « Requiem for a Nun ».

COMBAT - PARIS

12 AVR 1952

CHARLES MUNCH arrivera à Paris le 27 avril

13/a

Il sera accompagné d'un certain nombre de musiciens de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston

Un avion spécial d'Air France transportera, le dimanche 27 avril, de Boston à Paris, un certain nombre de musiciens de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, accompagnés du chef d'orchestre Charles Münch.

Les femmes des exécutants participeront également au voyage.

Les instruments seront acheminés à bord du même avion. L'orchestre donnera son dernier concert à Boston le 26 avril, et pourra commencer ses répétitions à Paris dans la matinée du 28. Au total, 104 musiciens de la célèbre formation traverseront l'Atlantique à la fin du mois, par air ou par mer, et donneront plusieurs concerts dans le cadre de l' « Œuvre du XX[e] siècle », organisée pendant le mois de mai par le Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture.

LE MONDE. — 23 avril 1952.

— C'est la chorale Saint-Guillaume de Strasbourg, que dirige Fritz Münch (le frère de Charles Münch), qui interprétera les œuvres prévues au programme du concert inaugural de l'Œuvre du vingtième siècle. Débutant avec le Magnificat de Bach et la Cantate n° 6, ce programme se terminera sur le Stabat Mater de Poulenc, qui n'a encore jamais été joué à Paris. C'est à l'église Saint-Roch que ce concert se déroulera en hommage aux victimes des tyrannies du siècle et en présence d'une centaine de membres de la Fédération nationale des déportés et internés de la Résistance.

LE FIGARO — 30

LES SPECTACLES

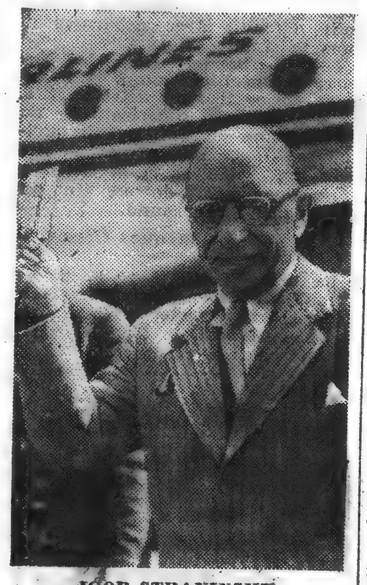
Charles Münch et Igor Stravinsky à Orly

Suite de la première page

« Stravinsky, lui, ne faisait qu'une brève escale à Paris : « Je dois, ce soir même, me dit-il, diriger à Genève une répétition de The Rake's Progress, mais je suis très ému de rentrer en France pour la première fois depuis que les événements de la dernière guerre nous ont séparés...

» Et puis quelle joie immense de pouvoir faire entendre à mes amis français, grâce aux dévoués organisateurs du Festival de l'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle, quelques-unes de mes plus récentes compositions, et de retrouver ici les magnifiques orchestres que j'ai toujours aimés et appréciés. »

Igor Stravinsky saisit alors un micro



IGOR STRAVINSKY

pour faire une brève déclaration ; puis il le tend à Charles Münch : « Voilà notre bâton de maréchal... Je suis un peu abasourdi par tant d'heures de vol ».

Charles Münch me dit à son tour sa joie de retrouver Paris : « Pour moi ce sont déjà presque des vacances ; je dois retourner aux U.S.A. en juillet, mais je reviendrai passer le mois de septembre en France. Avant de me reposer j'espère que nous ferons tous ici du bon travail pour démontrer l'exceptionnelle valeur du XX[e] siècle musical.

Quant à Vittorio Rieti, il contemple l'inscription italienne gravée au-dessus de la salle d'attente et que l'on peut traduire « Salle de l'Espérance ». Il me la désigne : « N'est-ce pas là, en effet, mieux que tout autre discours, exprimer très exactement l'idéal du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture ? »

CHARLES MUNCH

Claude Baignères.

Jean Vilar veut nous montrer un Harpagon sympathique

LE Théâtre National Populaire présentera, ce soir, au Palais de Chaillot, son nouveau spectacle : L'Avare. Triples débuts pour Jean Vilar : c'est la première fois qu'il monte une pièce de Molière, la première fois qu'il met en scène une œuvre comique, et la première fois qu'il joue le rôle principal d'un spectacle monté par lui.

Jean Vilar sera donc Harpagon. Mais ayant étudié la question de très près il a décidé de rendre son héros sympathique. Harpagon est un être normal, pense-t-il, dont la bonhomie et la gentillesse ne font pas de doute, mais qui est possédé d'un vice. Il est avare comme d'autres sont opiomanes. D'autre part, Vilar a pris le parti de donner aux décors et aux costumes un certain luxe, car Harpagon menait un grand train de vie: il a de nombreux domestiques, et les dix mille écus dont il parle, et qui ne sont qu'une partie de sa fortune, représentent soixante-quinze millions de francs.

Mais le problème le plus difficile à résoudre a été celui de la présentation scénique. Jouer L'Avare sur un plateau de vingt-huit mètres sur trente eût été une folie. Jean Vilar a tourné la difficulté en montant au milieu de la scène de Chaillot un deuxième plateau, sorte de praticable haut de près d'un mètre sur lequel joueront les acteurs.

M. R.

4-12-1951

Paris-presse-l'intransigeant

LE JOURNAL DE LA MUSIQUE

Pour le printemps prochain

" LE FESTIVAL DE PARIS SE PRÉPARE "

DANS les milieux musicaux bien informés, on chuchote qu'il est question d'organiser, au printemps prochain, un « Festival de Paris ». Naturellement, celui-ci, pour être valable, devra avoir un éclat incomparable. Pour l'instant, il n'y a que de beaux projets. Parmi ceux-ci figure une série de concerts d'œuvres de Strawinsky, dirigées par lui-même, avec, comme clou, une représentation de son récent opéra « The Rakes progress ». Les discussions ont lieu autour de quelques milliers de dollars. Personne n'ignore, en effet, que Igor Strawinsky est le musicien le plus cher du monde (il toucha 25.000 dollars à Venise pour y venir créer son opéra).

D'autre part, il est question de faire venir l'orchestre de Philadelphie au grand complet avec son chef Eugène Ormandy. Là encore des milliers de dollars sont en jeu. L'affaire pourrait se faire, car plusieurs grandes villes européennes sont disposées à participer aux frais d'une grandes tournée de cet orchestre, à condition, toutefois, que le gouvernement américain fasse cadeau du transport, ce qui n'a pas l'air de l'enthousiasmer spécialement.

On dit aussi que l'orchestre de Boston, dirigé par Charles Munch, est aussi sur les rangs. Qui viendra en Europe de Boston ou de Philadelphie ? Peut-être ni l'un ni l'autre.

On saura malgré tout, bientôt, si ce « Festival de Paris » aura lieu ou non.

pas, se présente en robe du soir, comme une virtuose quelconque, et joue des castagnettes accoudée au piano de son accompagnateur, Robert Machado. Le 7 décembre, outre Machado, la harpiste Lily Laskine accompagnera Soledad Agnès. Quand on lui proposa de jouer avec une « joueuse de castagnettes », Lily Laskine crut à une plaisanterie. Néanmoins, elle demanda à entendre Soledad Agnès. Elle fut si enthousiaste qu'elle est en train d'apprendre quatre pièces d'Albeniz qu'elle ne connaissait pas pour pouvoir accompagner les castagnettes.

EN AVANT-GARDE de « l'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle »

STRAVINSKY et Charles MUNCH sont arrivés hier à Orly

ILS NOUS DISENT LEUR JOIE DE RETROUVER LA FRANCE

C'EST à Orly que le Congrès pour la liberté de la culture, représenté par MM. Nabokov et Dujardin, tenait hier ses assises pour recevoir à quelques minutes d'intervalle trois de ses plus ardents défenseurs...

Au début de l'après-midi, l'orchestre de Boston avait débarqué en force sur l'aérodrome écrasé sous un soleil de plomb. Deux heures plus tard, son chef, Charles Münch, arrivait en compagnie du compositeur italien Vittorio Rieti, tandis que l'avion qui amenait Stravinsky apparaissait déjà à l'horizon...

(Suite page 7, col. 1 et 2)

EN PAGE 7 :

PREFACE A « L'ŒUVRE DU XX[e] SIECLE »

par Denis de ROUGEMONT

LE MONDE
5, rue des Italiens, IX[e]

11 AVRIL 1952

L'OPÉRA DANS LE CADRE DE L'ŒUVRE DU VINGTIÈME SIÈCLE

C'est durant tout le mois de mai que se dérouleront au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées les manifestations artistiques organisées par le congrès pour la liberté de la culture sous le titre significatif de l'Œuvre du vingtième siècle.

Soucieux de faire rentrer les deux scènes dont il est responsable dans l'esprit de ces manifestations, M. Maurice Lehmann, administrateur de la réunion des théâtres lyriques nationaux, a consacré leurs programmes pour mai à la reprise de chefs-d'œuvre contemporains.

C'est ainsi que l'Opéra-Comique reprendra le 30 avril et les 8, 14 et 22 mai Pelléas et Mélisande, de Debussy, à l'occasion du cinquantième anniversaire de la création, et le 15, Madame Bovary, de Bondeville. Le 23 et le 26 l'Opéra affichera la Salomé de Richard Strauss. Un concert festival Honegger, avec Jeanne au bûcher et Antigone au programme, se déroulera le 16 au palais Garnier tandis qu'un festival Ravel aura lieu le 29 en la salle Favart.

Enfin, c'est à l'Opéra, en soirée de gala, que seront donnés le premier concert du Boston Symphony Orchestra et le premier spectacle du New York City Ballet de George Balanchine.

Ausschnitt aus dem Journal: Luzerner Tagblatt
Luzern

24 April 1952

Pariser Musikfestwochen

30. April bis 1. Juni 1952

Das musikalische Programm der vom «Congrès pour la liberté de la culture» in Paris organisierten Veranstaltung «L'Oeuvre du vingtième siècle» ist endgültig festgesetzt worden. Es enthält eine solche Fülle von Ereignissen, daß nur auf einige der wesentlichsten hingewiesen werden kann. Das Eröffnungskonzert in der Kirche St-Roch bringt «Stabat Mater» von Francis Poulenc mit Renée Defraiteur, Lucie Rauh, Ernst Häfliger, Pierre Mollet und dem Organisten Charles Mueller unter der Leitung von Charles Munch. An Opern werden dargeboten: «Wozzek» mit Wiener Kräften unter Oscar Fritz Schuh; «Don Perlimplin» von Lorca (Musik: Vittorio Rieti) mit Maria Morales; «Billy Budd» von Britten (Königliche Oper von Covent Garden unter Leitung des Komponisten); «Vier Heilige in drei Akten», Buch: Gertrud Stein, Musik: Virgil Thomson (American National Theatre and Academy). Auf choreographischem Gebiet sind zu erwarten: «Cordelia» von Henri Sauguet und «Coup de feu» von Georges Auric (Grand Ballet du Marquis de Cuevas); «Der Käfig» von Strawinsky, «Die vier Temperamente» von Hindemith, «Till Eulenspiegel» von Richard Strauß, «Das Wunderkind» von Prokofjew, «Orpheus» von Strawinsky (New-York-City Ballet). Unter den sinfonischen Werken seien genannt: «Das Lied von der Erde» mit Kathleen Ferrier und Lorenz Fehenberger unter Bruno Walter (Orchester der Großen Oper); 2. Sinfonie von Honegger unter Charles Munch (Boston Symphony Orchestra), 5. Sinfonie von Honegger und Concerto für Violine und Orchester von Frank Martin (Orchestre de la Suisse romande unter Ansermet); Konsertsuite aus der Oper «Jekaterina Ismailowa» von Schostakowitsch (Orchester Rias aus Westberlin unter Ferenc Fricsay). Von Oratorien sind zu erwähnen: «Oedipus Rex» von Strawinsky, nach dem Text von Jean Cocteau unter Leitung des Komponisten, «Erwartung» von Arnold Schönberg unter Hans Rosbaud, «Les Choéphores», und «Finale der Eumeniden» von Darius Milhaud (Accademia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia unter Igor Markewitch). Schließlich sind Schöpfungen von Strawinsky und Bartók gewidmete Abende vorgesehen.

E. S.

Extrait du journal: Journal de Genève
Genève
25 Avril 1952

A PARIS EN MAI

Eblouissant programme de « L'œuvre du XXe siècle »

Paris, avril.

C'est dans moins d'une semaine que débutera la série de représentations données sous le titre « L'œuvre du XXe siècle », exposition des arts et de la pensée, qui se tiendra à Paris pendant le mois de mai 1952.

Déjà, nous avons signalé ici même cette manifestation en annonçant certains de ses spectacles particulièrement saillants. Tous le sont également et il faudrait en donner la liste entière pour ne pas commettre d'injustice. Nous ne pouvons le faire malheureusement.

Ce sera d'abord le vendredi 2, au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, « Wozzeck », l'opéra d'Alban Berg donné avec l'Orchestre philharmonique de Vienne et les chœurs de l'Opéra de Vienne. Le mardi 6, Charles Munch conduira l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston: au programme figureront, notamment, la Symphonie No 2 de Honegger et la Suite No 2 de « Daphnis et Chloé » de Ravel. Le jeudi 8 mai, le même ensemble se fera entendre, mais sous la direction cette fois de Pierre Monteux.

Deux ballets et un opéra en un acte seront créés le mercredi 7. « Dom Perlimplin », sur un livret de Lorca, que joua naguère la Comédie des Champs-Elysées, mis en musique par Vittorio Rieti, sera représenté dans des décors d'Antoni Clavé et sur une mise en scène d'Yves Robert.

Le Grand Ballet du marquis de Cuévas créera une œuvre de Sauguet, « Cordélia », dans une chorégraphie de John Taras et des décors de Jacques Dupont. Sa seconde création sera « Coup de feu », musique de Georges Auric, argument et décors de Cassandre, chorégaphie d'Aurélio Milloss.

Mais l'événement qui passera en sensationnel tous les autres c'est incontestablement la venue à Paris, pour la première fois, du New-York City Ballet, sous la direction artistique du chorégraphe Georges Balanchine.

Nous aurons la révélation de « La cage », musique de Strawinsky, chorégraphie de Robbins et de

Cinéma RIO

3 séances permanentes
14 h. — 16 h. 30
2 séances numérotées
20 h. — 22 h. 30

RAIMU — CHARPIN — GINETTE LECLERC
dans
LA FEMME DU BOULANGER
Le triomphal et immortel chef-d'œuvre de
MARCEL PAGNOL
4 47 44

toutes les chorégraphies de Balanchine sur des musiques d'Hindemith — « Les quatre tempéraments » — Strawinsky — « L'oiseau de feu » dans les décors de Chagall — Ravel — « La valse » — Tchaïkowsky — « Le Lac des cygnes » — etc... Le New-York City Ballet dansera six fois: du 10 au 15, avant de revenir à Paris en juin.

Ensuite, les vendredi 16 et samedi 17, très attendu, l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande, sous la direction de son chef Ernest Ansermet, donnera deux concerts, dont voici le programme, le 16: Symphonie No 5 d'Honegger, Nobilissima Visione » d'Hindemith, « Sonata di camera » pour violoncelle et orchestre de Bohuslav Martinu (soliste: Henri Honegger) et enfin la « Rapsodie espagnole » de Ravel. Le second jour, le public entendra la « Suite en fa » de Roussel, le Concerto pour violon et orchestre de Frank Martin, dont ce sera la première audition à Paris, avec Joseph Szigeti, et pour finir « Trois images » de Claude Debussy.

Le lundi 19, soirée Strawinsky avec « Oedipus-Rex », opéra-oratorio pour récitant, six solistes, chœur d'hommes et orchestre symphonique. C'est Jean Cocteau qui reprendra en cette occasion le rôle du récitant qu'il tenait à la création.

Le lundi 26, c'est l'opéra de B. Britten « Billy Budd », sur un livret de Forster et Crozier d'après Hermann Melville, que donnera l'Opéra royal de Covent-Garden.

Sous la direction d'Igor Markevitch on entendra, le mercredi 28, l'Accademia di Santa Cecilia.

Enfin, le vendredi 30, une troupe de chanteurs noirs présenteront l'opéra de Gertrud Stein et Virgil Thomson, « Quatre saints en trois actes ».

Sept concerts de musique de chambre seront donnés à la Comédie des Champs-Elysées, à 17 h. 30, les 7, 9, 13, 15, 21, 24 et 29 mai.

Une grande exposition de peinture est organisée le Musée d'Art Moderne et ce nous sera l'occasion d'admirer des toiles aussi peu connues que la « Jeune femme se poudrant » de Seurat, « La Bohémienne endormie » du douanier Rousseau, « Enlèvement d'Europe », par Bonnard.

Enfin, un programme littéraire complétera ces manifestations. Une cinquantaine d'écrivains ont accepté de participer à une série de débats et de conférences. Citons, entre autres, Malvaux, Faulkner, W. H. Auden, Rosamund Lehman, Ignazio Silone, E. R. Curtius, Denis de Rougemont, Marguerite Yourcenar, Lionello Venturi...

LES DERNIÈRES NOUVELLES DU
HAUT-RHIN
COLMAR

30 AVRIL 1952

Charles Munch se rend en Europe avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra » pour une tournée de concerts

M. Charles Munch a quitté New-York lundi pour Paris par la voie aérienne avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra » qu'il dirige et qui doit, sous sa conduite, donner des concerts en Europe. L'orchestre se produira en premier lieu à Paris le 6 mai. L'ensemble, qui comprend 104 musiciens, jouera également sous la direction de M. Pierre Monteux, chef d'orchestre du « San Francisco Symphony Orchestra ». Il se produira dans plusieurs pays étrangers et en France donnera des concerts en province, notamment à Metz, Strasbourg et Bordeaux.

L'ESPOIR
NICE
29 AVRIL 1952

Charles Munch se rend en Europe avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra »
pour une tournée de concerts

NEW-YORK. — M. Charles Munch a quitté New-York hier pour Paris par la voie aérienne avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra » qu'il dirige et qui doit, sous sa conduite, donner des concerts en Europe. L'orchestre se produira en premier lieu à Paris, le 6 mai. L'ensemble, qui comprend 104 musiciens, jouera également sous la direction de M. Pierre Monteux, chef d'orchestre du « San Francisco Symphony Orchestra ». Il se produira dans plusieurs pays étrangers et en France donnera des concerts en province notamment à Metz, Strasbourg et Bordeaux.

LE MONDE - PARIS
29 AVRIL 1952

DIRECTEUR DU BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Charles Münch arrive à Paris

L'avion dans lequel s'est embarqué à New-York M. Charles Münch arrivera cet après-midi, à 16 h. 5, à Orly. Après une longue absence il revient parmi nous afin de nous présenter le Boston Symphony Orchestra, qu'il dirige depuis deux ans.

C'est dans le cadre du Festival du XXe siècle, qui doit se dérouler à Paris pendant tout le mois de mai, que cette formation va se produire. Jamais, malgré sa réputation, elle n'a quitté le nouveau continent. « Et pourtant c'est une des grandes spécialités américaines, déclare M. Nabokov, directeur du festival, au même titre que les gratte-ciel et le jazz... »

Paris est donc la première étape d'une longue tournée qui doit emmener l'orchestre de Boston en Hollande, en Allemagne, en Italie, à Strasbourg (ville natale de son chef d'orchestre), à Lille, à Dublin et à Londres. Que notre capitale ait été la première à recevoir la visite du Boston Symphony Orchestra semble tout naturel. La musique et les musiciens français y ont toujours été en faveur. Trois de ses chefs d'orchestre depuis sa création, qui remonte à la fin du siècle dernier, étaient de chez nous : Henri Rabaud, qui y fut appelé à la fin de la première guerre mondiale; Pierre Monteux, qui le dirigea de 1919 à 1924, et Charles Münch. Quant à Serge Koussevitzky, dont le règne dura vingt-cinq ans, il avait acquis la nationalité française et fut le champion le plus ardent de notre patrimoine musical.

Le premier concert du Boston Symphony Orchestra aura lieu à l'Opéra le 6 mai. Il sera présidé par M. Vincent Auriol et dirigé par Charles Münch. Au programme la Deuxième Symphonie de Honegger, la Mer de Debussy, Daphnis et Chloé de Ravel. Le 8 mai un second concert aura lieu au théâtre des Champs-Elysées. A cette occasion Pierre Monteux montera au pupitre. Et cet événement sera un anniversaire: car trente-neuf ans auparavant, jour pour jour, il dirigeait le Sacre du printemps, de Strawinsky. Le scandale de cette création est célèbre : on se souvient qu'au milieu des cris et des sifflets cinquante spectateurs, afin de prouver leur indignation, s'étaient déshabillés au milieu de l'orchestre... Le concert du 8 mai sera sûrement plus calme...

Les Allobroges
GRENOBLE
30 AVRIL 1952

Le monde en bref...

UN CONSEIL RESTREINT a délibéré hier soir sur la réponse à faire au memorandum adressé le 20 mars par le Sultan du Maroc. Aucune décision n'a été communiquée. Ce matin, au Conseil des Ministres, exposé de M. Schuman sur la situation internationale.

MOUVEMENT DIPLOMATIQUE. M. Louis Joxe est nommé ambassadeur de France à Moscou. Son prédécesseur, M. Chataigneau, va occuper un nouveau poste. M. Maurice De-Jean est élevé au rang d'ambassadeur de France à Tokio. M. Kumao Nishimura est nommé par Tokio, ambassadeur du Japon en France.

LE GENERAL EISENHOVER est arrivé à Hanovre ; il s'est rendu à Coblence, sera aujourd'hui à Francfort et demain à Paris.

A CHATEAUNEUF-DE-GALAURE (Drôme), 91 nouvelles signatures pour un Pacte de Paix à cinq ; 20 signatures pour la libération d'Henri Martin.

RECETTES BUDGETAIRES en France pour janvier-février 1952 : 432 milliards (plus-value de 125 milliards sur 1951).

LE MINOTIER HILAIRE, meurtrier de Christiane Paget a été à nouveau entendu par M. Jacquinot, juge d'instruction.

AUTOBUS CONTRE TRAMWAY, dans un tunnel, à Rio-de-Janeiro (Brésil) : six morts, treize blessés.

A VALLAURIS (Alpes-Maritimes) ont été inaugurés les nouveaux aménagements du centre helio-marin construit par la Caisse nationale de Sécurité sociale. Le centre de rééducation des malades en sana est l'un des plus modernes d'Europe.

SUJET A DES CRISES NERVEUSES et à de violents maux de tête, Alfred Lemoine, 23 ans, de Masny (Nord), martyrisait son bébé âgé de 5 mois, et battait sa femme. Il a été arrêté.

CHARLES MUNCH, le célèbre chef d'orchestre, a quitté New-York pour Paris, par avion, avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra », qui donnera des concerts en Europe sous sa direction.

LA MALADIE DE PANAMA, causée par un champignon microscopique, contre lequel on ne connaît aucun remède, dévaste les plantations bananières de l'Afrique Orientale.

M. DANIEL LEVI est nommé ambassadeur à Prague. Il était ambassadeur à la Nouvelle-Delhi.

LES CHASSEURS DE L'ESCADRILLE sont abattus en combat aérien, au matin, au-dessus de Middleton-St-George (Grande-Bretagne). Les deux pilotes sont morts.

LUIGI VILLORESI : L'état du coureur automobiliste italien accidenté, s'est aggravé, on ne sait s'il pourra courir les « Mille milles ».

LE ROI FAROUK d'Egypte aurait été blessé à la cuisse, le mois dernier, dans un attentat. C'est du moins ce qu'affirme une agence américaine.

INVITE PAR M. PINAY, M. Foster Dulles, qui fut à l'origine de la guerre de Corée, partira jeudi pour Paris.

Imprimerie spéciale des « Allobroges »

L'ESPOIR
SAINT-ETIENNE
30 AVRIL

Charles Munch se rend en Europe avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra » pour une tournée de concerts. — M. Charles Munch a quitté New-York pour Paris par la voie aérienne avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra » qu'il dirige et qui doit, sous sa conduite, donner des concerts en Europe. L'orchestre se produira en premier lieu à Paris le 6 mai. L'ensemble, qui comprend 104 musiciens, jouera également sous la direction de M. Pierre Monteux, chef d'orchestre du « San Francisco Symphony Orchestra ». Il se produira dans plusieurs pays étrangers et en France donnera des concerts en province, notamment à Metz, Strasbourg et Bordeaux.

PARIS
100
26 AVR

SPECTACLE DU MONDE ★ SPECTACLE DU MONDE

En mai prochain au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées

« L'œuvre du vingtième siècle »

Lorsque, en avril dernier, le président Auriol rendit visite au président Truman, il félicita Charles Munch, directeur musical de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston venu jouer spécialement pour lui à Washington. Il demanda même au chef d'orchestre de venir présenter ses musiciens en France.

Ce vœu deviendra en mai prochain une réalité grâce au Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture qui organise, sur le thème « L'œuvre du vingtième siècle », un grand Festival d'art au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées.

Trois concerts de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston (Charles Munch Pierre Monteux)

Au programme, trois concerts donnés par les 104 musiciens de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston sous la direction de Charles Munch ou de Pierre Monteux.

Neuf chefs ont dirigé cet orchestre depuis sa fondation en 1881. Pierre Monteux, après des études musicales à Paris où il est né, vint aux Etats-Unis avec les Ballets russes de Serge de Diaghilev et s'y fixa. Passé au Metropolitan Opera de New York, il dirigea, de 1919 à 1924, l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston. Actuellement, il dirige, jusqu'en avril prochain, l'Orchestre symphonique de San Francisco.

Les musiciens de Boston s'embarqueront pour l'Europe le 26 avril après leur saison de printemps au Symphony Hall. Ils comptent rester une quinzaine de jours en Europe pour se produire, après leurs trois concerts parisiens, à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich et, peut-être, en Belgique, en Hollande et en Autriche.

Igor Strawinsky au pupitre avec le « New-York City Ballet »

Au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, nous verrons également le « New York City Ballet », de Georges Balanchine, qui tiendra six fois l'affiche, avec, pour la première fois à Paris depuis 1939, Igor Strawinsky au pupitre lorsqu'on dansera sa musique.

En outre, il est très probable qu'une troupe noire jouera « Quatre Saints en trois actes », l'opéra de Virgil Thompson et Gertrude Stein, qui fut mis en scène par John Houseman et joué quarante-huit fois au Théâtre de la 44e rue à New York en 1934.

200 tableaux

James Johnson Sweeney, ancien directeur du Musée d'Art Moderne de New York, organisera une exposition de 200 tableaux de maîtres contemporains français, hollandais et américains, que l'on n'a pas vus à Paris depuis très longtemps.

Voilà pour la participation américaine à ces festivités.

Opéra de Vienne, concerts et conférence

L'Opéra de Vienne viendra jouer « Nozzeck », d'Alban Berg, et une série de concerts seront donnés par l'Orchestre philharmonique de Vienne, les chœurs et l'Orchestre de l'Académie Sainte-Cécile de Rome, la R.I.A.S. (orchestre de Berlin-Ouest), l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, de Genève, l'Orchestre du Conservatoire et l'Orchestre national de Paris.

Enfin, conférences et réunions compléteront dans le domaine des lettres ces rencontres internationales avec le public.

★

Teresa et Luisillo prolongent leur séjour

Devant le succès qu'ils remportent actuellement à l'Empire, les Ballets espagnols de Teresa et Luisillo ont décidé de prolonger la série de leurs représentations.

Locations à Edouard-VII

En raison de l'affluence du public à son bureau de location, le Théâtre Edouard-VII annonce qu'à partir d'aujourd'hui il louera 15 jours à l'avance afin de permettre à chacun de trouver des places pour la comédie de Jacques Deval, « Ombre chère », dans laquelle Robert Lamoureux fait des débuts très remarqués de grand comédien. Location ouverte tous les jours de 11 heures à 18 heures.

Orphée à l'Empire

Sept représentations exceptionnelles de l' « Orphée », opéra-ballet de Glück, avec le concours de Maria Feres, seront données à l'Empire les 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22 et 23 janvier. Chorale Elizabeth Brasseur et orchestre sous la direction de D. E. Ingelbrecht. Location ouverte.

Matinée gratuite au Gymnase

Mme Paule Rolle, directrice du Théâtre du Gymnase, les auteurs et les artistes de « J'y suis, j'y reste » offrent, le vendredi 4 janvier en matinée, une représentation gratuite aux économiquement faibles du Xe arrondissement.

Cette représentation étant organisée sous les auspices du Comité des Fêtes du Xe arrondissement, c'est ce comité qui s'est chargé de la répartition des places.

Le nouveau programme de l'A B C

A partir du 4 janvier aura lieu à l'A.B.C., pour une durée de trois semaines, le Festival International de Variétés, avec le concours de José Torres et Marianne Yvanof, June Richmond, Colette Mars, Jacqueline Moreau, les Ramsès, les Fredianis, Clifton, Chuck Brown et Rita, Philippe Clay, les Bérardy et une autre grande vedette internationale dont on attend un télégramme annonçant son arrivée.

[269]

Quarante ans après, Pierre Monteux revient diriger « Le Sacre du Printemps »

Pierre Monteux, le fameux chef d'orchestre qui présida, pendant dix-sept ans, aux destinées de l'Orchestre Symphonique de San-Francisco, revient à Paris, en tournée, à la tête du Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Il dirigera, le 8 mai, au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, un concert qui sera retransmis sur la Chaîne nationale, à 21 heures. Au programme, des œuvres de Schuman, Darius Milhaud, et Le Sacre du Printemps, de Stravinsky. Il s'agira presque d'un anniversaire. C'est le 28 mai 1913, en effet, que Pierre Monteux créait ce même Sacre du Printemps, au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, qui allait se terminer, pour les spectateurs, en bataille rangée.

Extrait du journal: Journal de Genève
Genève
25-Avril 1952

A PARIS EN MAI

Eblouissant programme de « L'œuvre du XXe siècle »

Paris, avril.

C'est dans moins d'une semaine que débutera la série de représentations données sous le titre « L'œuvre du XXe siècle », exposition des arts et de la pensée, qui se tiendra à Paris pendant le mois de mai 1952.

Déjà, nous avons signalé ici même cette manifestation en annonçant certains de ses spectacles particulièrement saillants. Tous le sont également et il faudrait en donner la liste entière pour ne pas commettre d'injustice. Nous ne pouvons le faire malheureusement.

Ce sera d'abord le vendredi 2, au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, « Wozzeck », l'opéra d'Alban Berg donné avec l'Orchestre philharmonique de Vienne et les chœurs de l'Opéra de Vienne. Le mardi 6, Charles Munch conduira l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston: au programme figureront, notamment, la Symphonie No 2 de Honegger et la Suite No 2 de « Daphnis et Chloé » de Ravel. Le jeudi 8 mai, le même ensemble se fera entendre, mais sous la direction cette fois de Pierre Monteux.

Deux ballets et un opéra en un acte seront créés le mercredi 7. « Dom Perlimplin », sur un livret de Lorca, que joua naguère la Comédie des Champs-Elysées, mis en musique par Vittorio Rieti, sera représenté dans des décors d'Antoni Clavé et sur une mise en scène d'Yves Robert.

Le Grand Ballet du marquis de Cuévas créera une œuvre de Sauguet, « Cordélia », dans une chorégraphie de John Taras et des décors de Jacques Dupont. Sa seconde création sera « Coup de feu », musique de Georges Auric, argument et décors de Cassandre, chorégaphie d'Aurélio Milloss.

Mais l'événement qui passera en sensationnel tous les autres c'est incontestablement la venue à Paris, pour la première fois, du New-York City Ballet, sous la direction artistique du chorégraphe Georges Balanchine.

Nous aurons la révélation de « La cage », musique de Strawinsky, chorégraphie de Robbins et de

Cinéma RIO

3 séances permanentes
14 h. — 16 h. 30
2 séances numérotées
20 h. — 22 h. 30

RAIMU — GÉRARD PHILIPE — GINETTE LECLERC
dans
LA FEMME DU BOULANGER
Le triomphal et immortel chef-d'œuvre de
MARCEL PAGNOL
4 47 44

toutes les chorégraphies de Balanchine sur des musiques d'Hindemith — « Les quatre tempéraments » — Strawinsky — « L'oiseau de feu » dans les décors de Chagall — Ravel — « La valse » — Tchaïkowsky — « Le Lac des cygnes » — etc... Le New-York City Ballet dansera six fois: du 10 au 15, avant de revenir à Paris en juin.

Ensuite, les vendredi 16 et samedi 17, très attendu, l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande, sous la direction de son chef Ernest Ansermet, donnera deux concerts, dont voici le programme, le 16: Symphonie No 5 d'Honegger, Nobilissima Visione » d'Hindemith, « Sonata di camera » pour violoncelle et orchestre de Bohuslav Martinu (soliste: Henri Honegger) et enfin la « Rapsodie espagnole » de Ravel. Le second jour, le public entendra la « Suite en fa » de Roussel, le Concerto pour violon et orchestre de Frank Martin, dont ce sera la première audition à Paris, avec Joseph Szigeti, et pour finir « Trois images » de Claude Debussy.

Le lundi 19, soirée Strawinsky avec « Oedipus-Rex », opéra-oratorio pour récitant, six solistes, chœur d'hommes et orchestre symphonique. C'est Jean Cocteau qui reprendra en cette occasion le rôle du récitant qu'il tenait à la création.

Le lundi 26, c'est l'opéra de B. Britten « Billy Budd », sur un livret de Forster et Crozier d'après Hermann Melville, que donnera l'Opéra royal de Covent-Garden.

Sous la direction d'Igor Markevitch on entendra, le mercredi 28, l'Accademia di Santa Cecilia.

Enfin, le vendredi 30, une troupe de chanteurs noirs présenteront l'opéra de Gertrud Stein et Virgil Thomson, « Quatre saints en trois actes ».

Sept concerts de musique de chambre seront donnés à la Comédie des Champs-Elysées, à 17 h. 30, les 7, 9, 13, 15, 21, 24 et 29 mai.

Une grande exposition de peinture est organisée le Musée d'Art Moderne et ce nous sera l'occasion d'admirer des toiles aussi peu connues que la « Jeune femme se poudrant » de Seurat, « La Bohémienne endormie » du douanier Rousseau, « Enlèvement d'Europe », par Bonnard.

Enfin, un programme littéraire complétera ces manifestations. Une cinquantaine d'écrivains ont accepté de participer à une série de débats et de conférences. Citons, entre autres, Malvaux, Faulkner, W. H. Auden, Rosamund Lehman, Ignazio Silone, E. R. Curtius, Denis de Rougemont, Marguerite Yourceinar, Lionello Venturi...

LES DERNIÈRES NOUVELLES DU
HAUT-RHIN
COLMAR

30 AVRIL 1952

Charles Munch se rend en Europe avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra » pour une tournée de concerts

Culture

M. Charles Munch a quitté New-York lundi pour Paris par la voie aérienne avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra » qu'il dirige et qui doit, sous sa conduite, donner des concerts en Europe. L'orchestre se produira en premier lieu à Paris le 6 mai. L'ensemble, qui comprend 104 musiciens, jouera également sous la direction de M. Pierre Monteux, chef d'orchestre du « San Francisco Symphony Orchestra ». Il se produira dans plusieurs pays étrangers et en France donnera des concerts en province, notamment à Metz, Strasbourg et Bordeaux.

L'ESPOIR
NICE

29 AVRIL 1952

Charles Munch se rend en Europe avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra » pour une tournée de concerts

Culture

NEW-YORK. — M. Charles Munch a quitté New-York hier pour Paris par la voie aérienne avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra » qu'il dirige et qui doit, sous sa conduite, donner des concerts en Europe. L'orchestre se produira en premier lieu à Paris, le 6 mai. L'ensemble, qui comprend 104 musiciens, jouera également sous la direction de M. Pierre Monteux, chef d'orchestre du « San Francisco Symphony Orchestra ». Il se produira dans plusieurs pays étrangers et en France donnera des concerts en province notamment à Metz, Strasbourg et Bordeaux.

LE MONDE - PARIS

29 AVRIL 1952

DIRECTEUR DU BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Charles Münch arrive à Paris

161

L'avion dans lequel s'est embarqué à New-York M. Charles Münch arrivera cet après-midi, à 16 h. 5, à Orly. Après une longue absence il revient parmi nous afin de nous présenter le Boston Symphony Orchestra, qu'il dirige depuis deux ans.

C'est dans le cadre du Festival du XXe siècle, qui doit se dérouler à Paris pendant tout le mois de mai, que cette formation va se produire. Jamais, malgré sa réputation, elle n'a quitté le nouveau continent. « Et pourtant c'est une des grandes spécialités américaines, déclare M. Nabokov, directeur du festival, au même titre que les gratte-ciel et le jazz... »

Paris est donc la première étape d'une longue tournée qui doit emmener l'orchestre de Boston en Hollande, en Allemagne, en Italie, à Strasbourg (ville natale de son chef d'orchestre), à Lille, à Dublin et à Londres. Que notre capitale ait été la première à recevoir la visite du Boston Symphony Orchestra semble tout naturel. La musique et les musiciens français y ont toujours été en faveur. Trois de ses chefs d'orchestre depuis sa création, qui remonte à la fin du siècle dernier, étaient de chez nous : Henri Rabaud, qui y fut appelé à la fin de la première guerre mondiale; Pierre Monteux, qui le dirigea de 1919 à 1924, et Charles Münch. Quant à Serge Koussevitzky, dont le règne dura vingt-cinq ans, il avait acquis la nationalité française et fut le champion le plus ardent de notre patrimoine musical.

Le premier concert du Boston Symphony Orchestra aura lieu à l'Opéra le 6 mai. Il sera présidé par M. Vincent Auriol et dirigé par Charles Münch. Au programme la Deuxième Symphonie de Honegger, la Mer de Debussy, Daphnis et Chloé de Ravel. Le 8 mai un second concert aura lieu au théâtre des Champs-Elysées. A cette occasion Pierre Monteux montera au pupitre. Et cet événement sera un anniversaire : car trente-neuf ans auparavant, jour pour jour, il dirigeait le Sacre du printemps de Stravinsky. Le scandale de cette création est célèbre : on se souvient qu'au milieu des cris et des sifflets cinquante spectateurs, afin de prouver leur indignation, s'étaient déshabillés au milieu de l'orchestre... Le concert du 8 mai sera sûrement plus calme...

Les Allobroges
GRENOBLE

30 AVRIL 1952

Le monde en bref...

Culture

UN CONSEIL RESTREINT a délibéré hier soir sur la réponse à faire au mémorandum adressé le 20 mars par le Sultan du Maroc. Aucune décision n'a été communiquée. Ce matin, au Conseil des Ministres, exposé de M. Schuman sur la situation internationale.

MOUVEMENT DIPLOMATIQUE. M. Louis Joxe est nommé ambassadeur de France à Moscou. Son prédécesseur, M. Chataigneau, va occuper un nouveau poste. M. Maurice De-Jean est élevé au rang d'ambassadeur de France à Tokio. M. Kumao Nishimura est nommé par Tokio, ambassadeur du Japon en France.

LE GÉNÉRAL EISENHOWER est arrivé à Hanovre ; il s'est rendu à Cobience, sera aujourd'hui à Francfort et demain à Paris.

A CHATEAUNEUF-DE-GALAURE (Drôme), 91 nouvelles signatures pour un Pacte de Paix à cinq ; 20 signatures pour la libération d'Henri Martin.

RECETTES BUDGETAIRES en France pour janvier-février 1952: 432 milliards (plus-value de 126 milliards sur 1951).

LE MINOTIER HILAIRE, meurtrier de Christiane Pagès a été à nouveau entendu par M. Jacquinot, juge d'instruction.

AUTOBUS CONTRE TRAMWAY, dans un tunnel, à Rio-de-Janeiro (Brésil) : six morts, treize blessés.

A VALLAURIS (Alpes-Maritimes) ont été inaugurés les nouveaux aménagements du centre helio-marin construit par la Caisse nationale de Sécurité sociale. Le centre de réadaptation des malades en sana est l'un des plus modernes d'Europe.

SUJET A DES CRISES NERVEUSES et à de violents maux de tête, Alfred Lemoine, 29 ans, de Maubeuge (Nord), martyrisait son bébé âgé de 8 mois, et battait sa femme. Il a été arrêté.

CHARLES MUNCH, le célèbre chef d'orchestre, a quitté New-York pour Paris, par avion, avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra », qui donnera des concerts en Europe sous sa direction.

LA MALADIE DE PANAMA, causée par un champignon microscopique, contre lequel on ne connaît aucun remède, dévaste les plantations bananières de l'Amérique Orientale.

M. DANIEL LEVI est nommé ambassadeur à Prague. Il était ambassadeur à la Nouvelle-Delhi.

DEUX CHASSEURS DE RÉACTION sont tombés en [illegible] ce matin, au-dessus de [illegible] (Grande-Bretagne). Les deux pilotes sont morts.

LUIGI VILLORESI : L'état du coureur automobiliste italien accidenté, s'est aggravé, on ne sait s'il pourra courir les « Mille milles ».

LE ROI FAROUK d'Egypte aurait été blessé à la cuisse, le mois dernier, dans un attentat. C'est du moins ce qu'affirme une agence américaine.

INVITE PAR M. PINAY, M. Foster Dulles, qui fut à l'origine de la guerre de Corée, partira jeudi pour Paris.

Imprimerie spéciale des « Allobroges »

L'ESPOIR
SAINT-ETIENNE

30 AVRIL 19[illegible]

Charles Munch se rend en Europe avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra » pour une tournée de concerts. — M. Charles Munch a quitté New-York pour Paris par la voie aérienne avec le « Boston Symphony Orchestra » qu'il dirige et qui doit, sous sa conduite, donner des concerts en Europe. L'orchestre se produira en premier lieu à Paris le 6 mai. L'ensemble, qui comprend 104 musiciens

PARIS-PRESSE
L'INTRANSIGEANT
100, rue de Réaumur

26 AVRIL 1952

ÉDITION

Quarante ans après, Pierre Monteux revient diriger « Le Sacre du Printemps »

Culture

Pierre Monteux, le fameux chef d'orchestre qui présida, pendant dix-sept ans, aux destinées de l'Orchestre Symphonique de San-Francisco, revient à Paris, en tournée, à la tête du Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Il dirigera, le 8 mai, au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, un concert qui sera retransmis sur la Chaîne nationale, à 21 heures. Au programme, des œuvres de Schuman, Darius Milhaud, et Le Sacre du Printemps, de Stravinsky. Il s'agira presque d'un anniversaire. C'est le 28 mai 1913, en effet, que Pierre Monteux créait ce même Sacre du Printemps, au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, qui allait se terminer, pour les spectateurs, en bataille rangée.

SPECTACLE DU MONDE ★ SPECTACLE DU MONDE

En mai prochain au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées

« L'œuvre du vingtième siècle »

Lorsque, en avril dernier, le président Auriol rendit visite au président Truman, il félicita Charles Munch, directeur musical de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston venu jouer spécialement pour lui à Washington. Il demanda même au chef d'orchestre de venir présenter ses musiciens en France.

Ce vœu deviendra en mai prochain une réalité grâce au Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture qui organise, sur le thème « L'œuvre du vingtième siècle », un grand Festival d'art au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées.

Trois concerts de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston (Charles Munch Pierre Monteux)

Au programme, trois concerts donnés par les 104 musiciens de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston sous la direction de Charles Munch ou de Pierre Monteux.

Neuf chefs ont dirigé cet orchestre depuis sa fondation en 1881. Pierre Monteux, après des études musicales à Paris où il est né, vint aux Etats-Unis avec les Ballets russes de Serge de Diaghilev et s'y fixa. Passé au Metropolitan Opera de New York, il dirigea, de 1919 à 1924, l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston. Actuellement, il dirige, jusqu'en avril prochain, l'Orchestre symphonique de San Francisco.

Les musiciens de Boston s'embarqueront pour l'Europe le 26 avril après leur saison de printemps au Symphony Hall. Ils comptent rester une quinzaine de jours en Europe pour se produire, après leurs trois concerts parisiens, à Bordeaux, Strasbourg, Zurich et, peut-être, en Belgique, en Hollande et en Autriche.

Igor Strawinsky au pupitre avec le « New-York City Ballet »

Au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, nous verrons également le « New York City Ballet », de Georges Balanchine, qui tiendra six fois l'affiche, avec, pour la première fois à Paris depuis 1939, Igor Strawinsky, au pupitre lorsqu'on dansera sa musique.

En outre, il est très probable qu'une troupe noire jouera « Quatre Saints en trois actes », l'opéra de Virgil Thompson et Gertrude Stein, qui fut mis en scène par John Houseman et joué quarante-huit fois au Théâtre de la 44e rue à New York en 1934.

200 tableaux

James Johnson Sweeney, ancien directeur du Musée d'Art Moderne de New York, organisera une exposition de 200 tableaux de maîtres contemporains français, hollandais et américains, que l'on n'a pas vus à Paris depuis très longtemps.

Voilà pour la participation américaine à ces festivités.

Opéra de Vienne, concerts et conférences

L'Opéra de Vienne viendra jouer « Nozseck », d'Alban Berg, et une série de concerts seront donnés par l'Orchestre philharmonique de Vienne, les chœurs et l'Orchestre de l'Académie Sainte-Cécile de Rome, la R.I.A.S. (orchestre de Berlin-Ouest), l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, de Genève, l'Orchestre du Conservatoire et l'Orchestre national de Paris.

Enfin, conférences et réunions compléteront dans le domaine des lettres ces rencontres internationales avec le public.

★

Teresa et Luisillo prolongent leur séjour

Devant le succès qu'ils remportent actuellement à l'Empire, les Ballets espagnols de Teresa et Luisillo ont décidé de prolonger la série de leurs représentations.

Locations à Edouard-VII

En raison de l'affluence du public à son bureau de location, le Théâtre Edouard-VII annonce qu'à partir d'aujourd'hui il louera 15 jours à l'avance afin de permettre à chacun de trouver des places pour la comédie de Jacques Deval, « Ombre chère », dans laquelle Robert Lamoureux fait des débuts très remarqués de grand comédien. Location ouverte tous les jours de 11 heures à 18 heures.

Orphée à l'Empire

Sept représentations exceptionnelles de l' « Orphée », opéra-ballet de Glück, avec le concours de Maria Feres, seront données à l'Empire les 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22 et 23 janvier. Chorale Elizabeth Brasseur et orchestre sous la direction de D. E. Ingelbrecht. Location ouverte.

Matinée gratuite au Gymnase

Mme Paule Rolle, directrice du Théâtre du Gymnase, les auteurs et les artistes de « J'y suis, j'y reste » offrent, le vendredi 4 janvier en matinée, une représentation gratuite aux économiquement faibles du Xe arrondissement.

Cette représentation étant organisée sous les auspices du Comité des Fêtes du Xe arrondissement, c'est ce comité qui s'est chargé de la répartition des places.

Le nouveau programme de l'A B C

A partir du 4 janvier aura lieu à l'A.B.C., pour une durée de trois semaines, le Festival International de Variétés, avec le concours de José Torres et Marianne Yvanof, June Richmond, Colette Mars, Jacqueline Moreau, les Ramsès, les Fredianis, Clifton, Chuck Brown et Rita, Philippe Clay, les Bérardy et une autre grande vedette internationle dont on attend un télégramme annonçant son arrivée.

[269]

LE RÉPUBLICAIN LORRAIN
Metz

30 AVRIL 1952

ARTS ET SPECTACLES

Evénement musical sensationnel

Culture 2

Le Boston Symphony Orchestra à Metz

Trois villes de France auront l'honneur d'accueillir le célèbre orchestre symphonique de Boston après un premier concert à l'Opéra de Paris, qui ouvrira le cycle de sa tournée en Europe.

Ce n'est pas sans fierté que la Ville de Metz se voit placer au rang de ces trois cités privilégiées, aux côtés de Lyon et de Strasbourg, l'ensemble orchestral de Boston étant l'un des plus célèbres du monde.

Le concert, prévu pour le 18 mai prochain à l'Hôtel des Mines, sera véritablement l'événement musical le plus sensationnel auquel auront été conviés d'assister les mélomanes lorrains depuis de nombreuses années. Il est à prévoir d'ailleurs que parmi les quelque 2.000 auditeurs que contiendra ce jour-là la vaste salle de l'avenue Foch, à Metz, beaucoup seront venus non seulement de tout le département de la Moselle, mais encore, de Meurthe-et-Moselle, de Mense, du Luxembourg, etc...

En prévision du concert, un aménagement spécial de la salle est en voie de réalisation, qui permettra une audition pure et homogène des cent-dix exécutants du célèbre Symphony Orchestra de Boston.

L'orchestre, sous la direction du prestigieux chef Charles Munch, interprètera notamment la « Symphonie Fantastique de Berlioz », « Daphnis et Chloé », de Maurice Ravel, la « Quatrième Symphonie », de Brahms, et une ouverture d'un compositeur américain, donnée en première audition en Europe. Programme, on le voit, extrêmement solide et riche, équilibrant les plus authentiques chefs-d'œuvre de la musique romantique et contemporaine.

Nous avons déjà parlé du brillant passé de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston et de ses actuelles activités. Les plus éminents chefs d'orchestre l'ont conduit depuis sa fondation, en 1881, et parmi eux, Charles Rabaud, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky. Le maître Charles Munch, qui le dirige depuis 1949, a la charge écrasante d'organiser annuellement une saison d'hiver qui ne comporte pas moins de 70 concerts, donnés alternativement au Symphony-Hall de Boston, à l'Université de Harvard et à Washington.

C'est la première fois que l'orchestre se produira en Europe, notamment en Allemagne où il est attendu avec fièvre.

Des détails seront ultérieurement donnés sur la mise en location des places pour le concert du 18 mai. Les prix de ces places s'échelonneront entre 600 et 1.500 francs, des réductions étant accordées aux abonnés des concerts du Conservatoire de Metz.

La location débutera dans les tout prochains jours.

Places réservées aux J.M.F.

La délégation régionale des Jeunesses Musicales de France a pu obtenir, des organisateurs du concert du 18 mai, que des places soient réservées à ses adhérents.

A cet effet, tous les JMF désirant assister au concert devront se faire connaître avant le mardi 6 mai, à la permanence JMF à Metz, Maison Dauge, 8, rue de l'Esplanade (tél. 25.48). Ils devront donner leurs nom, prénoms et numéro de carte d'adhérent.

Cette inscription sera considérée comme engagement irrévocable d'assister au concert.

Les prix des places pour les JMF sont respectivement de : 400, 600, 800, 1.000 et 1.200 fr.

M. Charles MUNCH dirigeant une répétition du Boston Symphony Orchestra.

C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-99

NEW YORK TIMES 9 MAI

Notes of Discord Mar Festival in Paris; Communists Call It 'Caricature of Culture'

161

PARIS, April 30 (AP)—The "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century," a festival of music, art and literature designed to show the wares of Western culture, opened tonight with only a couple of dissonant notes.

An overflow crowd attended the opening concert in the old Church of St. Roch. It was dedicated to victims of tyranny in the twentieth century, symbolized by 200 former prisoners of the Germans, Russians and Franco Spain as guests of honor.

Classic Bach and a new composition by Francis Poulenc, French composer, were sung and played by the St. Guillaume Chorale of Strasbourg and the Orchestre des Concerts Lamoureux of Paris, conducted by Fritz Munch.

The discords came before the concert—one by the Communists, the other by Serge Lifar, ballet dancer. Both were aimed at the United States.

Lifar, who once danced with the famed Diaghilev Ballet in Russia, complained that his Paris Opera Ballet wasn't asked to contribute to the festival. He doled out faint praise for the New York City Ballet, which is the centerpiece of the dancing portion of the festival, but said—in a letter to a Paris newspaper—that "low intrigue" kept the opera ballet out.

The Communist paper L'Humanité described the festival as American, and said it was "a caricature of culture." Its aim, the newspaper declared gravely, is to facilitate ideologic occupation of France by the United States.

The month-long festival is sponsored by the Congress for Cultural Freedom, a group of intellectuals whose members include John Dewey, Bendetto Croce, Jacques Maritain, Arthur Koestler and Bertrand Russell.

Julius Fleischmann, American yeast leader, raised through private sources and from his family's Fleischmann Foundation about $500,000 needed to float the festival.

Various Governments, including the French, have contributed to the expenses of sending orchestras or choruses to the festival, which is pointedly anti-Communist and pro-Western.

The 104-man Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux, is the star offering. Later it will tour Europe, giving fourteen concerts. The New York City Ballet of sixty-five members will do two new ballets specially written by Georges Auric and Henri Sauguet.

Ethel Linder Reiner, associated with the American National Theatre and Academy, has underwritten the cost of flying an entire troupe to Paris from New York to do the opera, "Four Saints in Three Acts," by Gertrude Stein. Virgil Thomson, who wrote the music, will conduct the performance. The cast is all-Negro.

Paris Festival Of Music, Art Starts April 30

Masterpieces of 20th Century to Emphasize Importance of Freedom

The first, and most important, item on the calendar for the 1952 Paris season is the Masterpieces of the 20th Century, an international exposition of the arts which will open April 30 and continue through the entire month of May.

The exposition, which is sponsored by the two-year-old Congress for Cultural Freedom, aims at demonstrating the importance of freedom to creative thinking and presents the finest modern achievements of Western civilization in the fields of music, drama, painting, sculpture, cinema and photography.

Heading the crowded program of cultural exhibits will be a series of concerts and performances at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées by leading symphony orchestras, opera companies, choirs and ballets.

In order that students, young musicians and workers may benefit from this exceptional opportunity, prices have been kept down to the minimum. For each concert, 200 seats will be available to students and young musicians at 150 francs, while such groups may purchase seats for the operas and ballets at 50 francs. In addition, music students will be allowed to attend rehearsals of the great orchestras participating.

Seats Available

For the New York City Ballet's performance of May 15, 500 seats at 250 francs each will be available to members of La Jeunesse Musicale de France. The closing concert, with Pierre Monteux conducting the Orchestre des Concerts Lamoureux at the Palais de Chaillot, will be a popular one, with all seats priced at 300 francs.

In addition to the operatic and musical phases of the exposition, there will be an important exhibition of modern painting, opening at the Musée d'Art Moderne, Pavillon de New York, May 7, and a literary conference, which will open at the Sorbonne May 15.

Among the important works to be displayed at the Musee d'Art Moderne are the Douanier Rousseau's "The Sleeping Gipsy," Seurat's "Jeune Femme se Poudrant," Duchamp's "Nude Descending a Staircase," Bonnard's "The Rape of Europe," Modigliani's "Portrait of Jacques Lipschitz," and numerous canvases by Van Gogh, Picasso, Paul Klee, Soutine, Juan Gris, Léger, Miro, James Ensor, Marc Chagall and Kandinsky, as well as sculptures by Lipschitz, Moore, Giacometti and others.

The program of the first concerts, operas and ballets follows (all performances not otherwise noted to be given at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, where tickets may also be purchased):

Wednesday, April 30 (at Eglise St. Roch, Paris). Inaugural concert, dedicated to the memory of all 20th-century victims of oppression. St. Guillaume Chorus, Strasbourg, France; conductor Fritz Munch. Lamoureux Concert Orchestra Paris. "Magnificat," by J. S. Bach. Soloist: Ernest Haefliger. "Stabat Mater," by Francis Poulenc. Soloist: Geneviève Moyan. (First performance in Paris.)

Friday, May 2, and Saturday, May 3—Vienna State Opera and Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra; conductor Karl Boehm. "Wozzeck," opera by Alban Berg; libretto by Georg Buchner; decor by Caspar Neher; produced by Oscar Fritz Schuh. (The 1951 Salzburg Festival production—first performance in France.)

Monday, May 5—Paris Opéra Orchestra; conductor Bruno Walter. "Don Juan," by Richard Strauss, "Prélude à l'Après-Midi d'un Faune," by Claude Debussy. "Das Lied von der Erde," by Gustav Mahler. Soloist: Kathleen Ferrier, contralto.

Tuesday, May 6 (at Paris Opéra House)—Boston Symphony Orchestra; conductor Charles Munch, musical direction. (First performance in Europe.) Overture, "The School for Scandal," by Samuel Barber; "Toccata," by Walter Piston; "Symphony for String Orchestra No. 2, by Arthur Honegger; "La Mer," by Claude Debussy; "Daphnis and Chloe," Suite No. 2, by Maurice Ravel.

Wednesday, May 7, and Friday, May 9—"Don Perlimplin," opera in one act by Vittorio Rieti; libretto by F. Garcia Lorca (world première). World premiere of two ballets choreographed and danced by the Grand Ballet du Marquis de Cuevas: "Cordelia," ballet with music by Henri Sauguet; decor by Jacques Dupont. "Coup de Feu," ballet with music by Georges Auric; decor by A. M. Cassandre.

Thursday, May 8—Boston Symphony Orchestra; conductor Pierre Monteux. Symphony by Willem Pijper; "Protée," Suite No. 2, by Darius Milhaud; "Symphony No. 3," by William Schuman; "Le Sacre du Printemps," by Igor Stravinsky.

Saturday, May 10 (at Opéra)—New York City Ballet Company; artistic director, George Balanchine; conductor: Leon Barzin, musical director. (First performance in Paris.) "Swan Lake," music by Peter Tchaikovsky; choreography by George Balanchine after Lev Ivanov; scenery and costumes by Cecil Beaton. "La Valse," music by Maurice Ravel; choreography by George Balanchine; costumes by Karinska. "The Cage," music by Ivor Stravinsky ("Concerto in D for Strings"); choreography by Jerome Robbins; costumes by Ruth Sobotka. "Bourrée Fantasque," music by Emmanuel Chabrier; choreography by George Balanchine; costumes by Karinska.

Sunday, May 11—New York City Ballet Company. Program will includs "Till Fire Bird," music by Igor Stravinsky; scenery by Marc Chagall; choreography by George Balanchine; conducted by Léon Barzin.

Monday, May 12—New York City Ballet Company. Program will include "Till Eulenspiegel," music by Richard Strauss; scenery by Esteban Frances; choreography by George Balanchine; conducted by Léon Barzin.

Tuesday, May 13—New York City Ballet Company. Program will include repeat performances of "The Fire Bird" and "Till Eulenspiegel."

Wednesday, May 14.—New York City Ballet. Program will include first Paris performance of "Orpheus," music by Igor Stravinsky; choreography by George Balanchine; scenery and costumes by Isamu Noguchi; conducted by Igor Stravinsky.

Thursday, May 15—New York City Ballet. Program will include repeat performance of "Orpheus," conducted by Léon Barzin.

[270]

Paris Festival Of Music, Art Starts April 30

Masterpieces of 20th Century' to Emphasize Importance ofFreedom

The first, and most important, event on the calendar for the 1952 Paris season is the Masterpieces of the 20th Century, an international exposition of the arts which will open April 30 and continue through the enfire month of May.

The exposition, which is sponsored by the two-year-old Congress for Cultural Freedom, aims at demonstrating the importance of freedom to creative thinking by presenting the finest modern achievements of Western civilization in the fields of music, drama, painting, sculpture, cinema and philosophy.

Headlining the crowded program of cultural exhibits will be a series of concerts and performances at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées by leading symphony orchestras, opera companies, choirs and ballets.

In order that students, young musicians and workers may benefit from this exceptional opportunity, prices have been kept down to the minimum. For each concert, 200 seats will be available to students and young musicians at 150 francs, while such groups may purchase seats for the operas and ballets at 300 francs. In addition, music students will be allowed to attend rehearsals of the great orchestras participating.

Seats Available

For the New York City Ballet's performance of May 15, 500 seats at 250 francs each will be available to members of La Jeunesse Musicale de France. The closing concert, with Pierre Monteux conducting the Orchestre des Concerts Lamoureux at the Palais de Chaillot, will be a popular one, with all seats priced at 300 francs.

In addition to the operatic and musical phases of the exposition, there will be an important exhibition of modern painting, opening at the Musée d'Art Moderne, Pavilion de New York, May 7, and a literary conferenee, which will open at the Sorbonne May 15.

Among the important works to be displayed at the Musee d'Art Moderne are the Douanier Rousseau's "The Sleeping Gipsy," Seurat's "Jeune Femme se Poudrant," Duchamp's "Nude Descending a Staircase," Bonnard's "The Rape of Europe," Modigliani's "Portrait of Jacques Lipschitz," and numerous canvases by Van Gogh, Picasso, Paul Klee, Soutine, Juan Gris, Léger, Miro, James Ensor, Marc Chagall and Kandinsky, as well as sculptures by Lipschitz, Moore, Giacometti and others.

The program of the first concerts, operas and ballets follows (all performances not otherwise noted to be given at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, where tickets may also be purchased):

Wednesday, April 30 (at Eglise St. Roch, Paris)—Inaugural concert, dedicated to the memory of all 20th-century victims of oppression. St. Guillaume Chorus, Strasbourg, France; conductor Fritz Munch. Lamoureux Concert Orchestra, Paris. "Magnificat," by J. S. Bach. Soloist: Ernest Haefliger. "Stabat Mater," by Francis Poulenc. Soloist: Genevieve Moizan. (First performance in Paris.)

Friday, May 2, and Saturday, May 3—Vienna State Opera and Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra; conductor Karl Boehm. "Wozzeck," opera by Alban Berg; libretto by Georg Buchner; decor by Caspar Neher; produced by Oscar Fritz Schuh. (The 1951 Salzburg Festival production—first performance in France.)

Monday, May 5—Paris Opéra Orchestra; conductor Bruno Walter. "Don Juan," by Richard Strauss. "Prélude à l'Après-Midi d'un Faune," by Claude Debussy. "Das Lied von der Erde," by Gustav Mahler. Soloist: Kathleen Ferrier, contralto.

Tuesday, May 6 (at Paris Opéra House)—Boston Symphony Orchestra; conductor Charles Munch, musical director. (First performance in Europe.) Overture, "The School for Scandal," by Samuel Barber; "Toccata," by Walter Piston; "Symphony for String Orchestra," No. 2, by Arthur Honegger; "La Mer," by Claude Debussy; "Daphnis and Chloe," Suite No. 2, by Maurice Ravel.

Wednesday, May 7, and Friday, May 9—"Don Perlimplin," opera in one act by Vittorio Rieti; libretto by F. Garcia Lorca (world première). World premiere of two ballets choreographed and danced by the Grand Ballet du Marquis de Cuevas: "Cordelia," ballet with music by Henri Sauguet; decor by Jacques Dupont. "Coup de Feu," ballet with music by Georges Auric; decor by A. M. Cassandre.

Thursday, May 8—Boston Symphony Orchestra; conductor Pierre Monteux. Symphony by Willem Pijper; "Protée," Suite No. 2, by Darius Milhaud; "Symphony No. 3," by William Schuman; "Le Sacre du Printemps," by Igor Stravinsky.

Saturday, May 10 (at Opéra)—New York City Ballet Company; artistic director, George Balanchine; conductor: Leon Barzin, musical director. (First performance in Paris.) "Swan Lake," music by Peter Tchaikovsky; choreography by George Balanchine after Lev Ivanov; scenery and costumes by Cecil Beaton. "La Valse," music by Maurice Ravel; choreography by George Balanchine; costumes by Karinska. "The Cage," music by Ivor Stravinsky ("Concerto in D for Strings"); choreography by Jerome Robbins; costumes by Ruth Sobotka. "Bourrée Fantasque," music by Emmanuel Chabrier; choreography by George Balanchine; costumes by Karinska.

Sunday, May 11—New York City Ballet Company. Program will include "Till Eulenspiegel," music by Richard Strauss; scenery by Esteban Frances; choreography by George Balanchine; conducted by Léon Barzin. "The Fire Bird," music by Igor Stravinsky; scenery by Marc Chagall; choreography by George Balanchine; conducted by Léon Barzin.

Monday, May 12—New York City Ballet Company. Program will include "Till Eulenspiegel," music by Richard Strauss; scenery by Esteban Frances; choreography by George Balanchine; conducted by Léon Barzin.

Tuesday, May 13—New York City Ballet Company. Program will include repeat performances of "The Fire Bird" and "Till Eulenspiegel."

Wednesday, May 14.—New York City Ballet. Program will include first Paris performance of "Orpheus," music by Igor Stravinsky; choreography by George Balanchine; scenery and costumes by Isamu Noguchi; conducted by Igor Stravinsky.

Thursday, May 15—New York City Ballet. Program will include repeat performance of "Orpheus," conducted by Léon Barzin.

LE RÉPUBLICAIN LORRAIN
Metz
30 AVRIL 1952

ARTS ET SPECTACLES

Evénement musical sensationnel

Culture 2

Le Boston Symphony Orchestra à Metz

Trois villes de France auront l'honneur d'accueillir le célèbre orchestre symphonique de Boston après un premier concert à l'Opéra de Paris, qui ouvrira le cycle de sa tournée en Europe.

C'est pas sans fierté que la Ville de Metz se voit placer au rang de ces trois cités privilégiées, aux côtés de Lyon et de Strasbourg, l'ensemble orchestral de Boston étant l'un des plus célèbres du monde.

Le concert, prévu pour le 18 mai prochain à l'Hôtel des Mines, sera véritablement l'événement musical le plus sensationnel auquel auront été conviés d'assister les mélomanes lorrains depuis de nombreuses années. Il est à prévoir d'ailleurs que parmi les quelque 2.000 auditeurs que contiendra ce jour-là la vaste salle de l'avenue Foch, à Metz, beaucoup seront venus non seulement de tout le département de la Moselle, mais encore de Meurthe-et-Moselle, de Meuse, du Luxembourg, etc...

En prévision du concert, un aménagement spécial de la salle est en voie de réalisation, qui permettra une audition pure et homogène des cent-dix exécutants [illegible] Symphony Orchestra [illegible] Boston.

L'orchestre, sous la direction du prestigieux chef Charles Munch, interprètera notamment la « Symphonie Fantastique de Berlioz », « Daphnis et Chloé », de Maurice Ravel, la « Quatrième Symphonie », de Brahms, et une ouverture d'un compositeur américain, donnée en première audition en Europe. Programme, on le voit, extrêmement solide et riche, équilibrant les plus authentiques chefs-d'œuvre de la musique romantique et contemporaine.

Nous avons déjà parlé du brillant passé de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston et de ses actuelles activités. Les plus éminents chefs d'orchestre l'ont conduit depuis sa fondation, en 1881, et parmi eux, Charles Rabaud, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky. Le maître Charles Munch, qui le dirige depuis 1949, a la charge écrasante d'organiser annuellement une saison d'hiver qui ne comporte pas moins de 70 concerts, donnés alternativement au Symphony-Hall de Boston, à l'Université de Harvard et à Washington.

C'est la première fois que l'orchestre se produira en Europe, notamment en Allemagne où il est attendu avec fièvre.

Des détails seront ultérieurement donnés sur la mise en location des places pour le concert du 18 mai. Les prix de ces places s'échelonneront entre 600 et 1.500 francs, des réductions étant accordées aux abonnés des concerts du Conservatoire de Metz.

La location débutera dans les tout prochains jours.

Places réservées aux J.M.F.

La délégation régionale des Jeunesses Musicales de France a pu obtenir, des organisateurs du concert du 18 mai, que des places soient réservées à ses adhérents.

A cet effet, tous les JMF désirant assister au concert devront se faire connaître avant le mardi 6 mai, à la permanence JMF à Metz, Maison Dauge, 2, rue de l'Esplanade (tél. 25.46). Ils devront donner leurs nom, prénoms et numéro de carte d'adhérent.

Cette inscription sera considérée comme engagement irrévocable d'assister au concert.

Les prix des places pour les JMF sont respectivement de [illegible] 900, 1.050 et 1.200 fr.

M. Charles MUNCH dirigeant une répétition du Boston Symphony Orchestra.

C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-80
NEW YORK TIMES
9 MAI

Notes of Discord Mar Festival in Paris; Communists Call It 'Caricature of Culture'

161

PARIS, April 30 (AP)—The "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century," a festival of music, art and literature designed to show the wares of Western culture, opened tonight with only a couple of dissonant notes.

An overflow crowd attended the opening concert in the old Church of St. Roch. It was dedicated to victims of tyranny in the twentieth century, symbolized by 200 former prisoners of the Germans, Russians and Franco Spain as guests of honor.

Classic Bach and a new composition by Francis Poulenc, French composer, were sung and played by the St. Guillaume Chorale of Strasbourg and the Orchestre des Concerts Lamoureux of Paris, conducted by Fritz Munch.

The discords came before the concert—one by the Communists, the other by Serge Lifar, ballet dancer. Both were aimed at the United States.

Lifar, who once danced with the famed Diaghilev Ballet in Russia, complained that his Paris Opera Ballet wasn't asked to contribute to the festival. He doled out faint praise for the New York City Ballet, which is the centerpiece of the dancing portion of the festival, but said—in a letter to a Paris newspaper—that "low intrigue" kept the opera ballet out.

The Communist paper L'Humanité described the festival as [illegible] American, and said it was "a caricature of culture." Its aim, the newspaper declared gravely, is to facilitate ideologic occupation of France by the United States.

The month-long festival is sponsored by the Congress for Cultural Freedom, a group of intellectuals whose members include John Dewey, Bendetto Croce, Jacques Maritain, Arthur Koestler and Bertrand Russell.

Julius Fleischmann, American yeast leader, raised through private sources and from his family's Fleischmann Foundation about $500,000 needed to float the festival.

Various Governments, including the French, have contributed to the expenses of sending orchestras or choruses to the festival, which is pointedly anti-Communist and pro-Western.

The 104-man Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux, is the star offering. Later it will tour Europe, giving fourteen concerts. The New York City Ballet of sixty-five members will do two new ballets specially written by Georges Auric and Henri Sauguet.

Ethel Linder Reiner, associated with the American National Theatre and Academy, has underwritten the cost of flying an entire troupe to Paris from New York to do the opera, "Four Saints in Three Acts," by Gertrude Stein. Virgil Thomson, who wrote the music, will conduct the performance. The cast is all-Negro.

[270]

LE RÉPUBLICAIN LORRAIN
Metz
30 AVRIL 1952

ARTS ET SPECTACLES

Evénement musical sensationnel

Culture D

Le Boston Symphony Orchestra à Metz

Trois villes de France auront l'honneur d'accueillir le célèbre orchestre symphonique de Boston après un premier concert à l'Opéra de Paris, qui ouvrira le cycle de sa tournée en Europe.

Ce n'est pas sans fierté que la Ville de Metz se voit placer au rang de ces trois cités privilégiées, aux côtés de Lyon et de Strasbourg, l'ensemble orchestral de Boston étant l'un des plus célèbres du monde.

Le concert, prévu pour le 18 mai prochain à l'Hôtel des Mines, sera véritablement l'événement musical le plus sensationnel auquel auront été conviés d'assister les mélomanes lorrains depuis de nombreuses années. Il est à prévoir d'ailleurs que parmi les quelque 2.000 auditeurs que contiendra ce jour-là la vaste salle de l'avenue Foch, à Metz, beaucoup seront venus non seulement de tout le département de la Moselle, mais encore de Meurthe-et-Moselle, de Meuse, du Luxembourg, etc...

En prévision du concert, un aménagement spécial de la salle est en voie de réalisation, qui permettra une audition pure et homogène des cent-dix exécutants du célèbre Symphony Orchestra de Boston.

L'orchestre, sous la direction du prestigieux chef Charles Munch, interprètera notamment la « Symphonie Fantastique de Berlioz », « Daphnis et Chloé », de Maurice Ravel, la « Quatrième Symphonie », de Brahms, et une ouverture d'un compositeur américain, donnée en première audition en Europe. Programme, on le voit, extrêmement solide et riche, équilibrant les plus authentiques chefs-d'œuvre de la musique romantique et contemporaine.

Nous avons déjà parlé du brillant passé de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston et de ses actuelles activités. Les plus éminents chefs d'orchestre l'ont conduit depuis sa fondation, en 1881, et parmi eux, Charles Rabaud, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky. Le maître Charles Munch, qui le dirige depuis 1949, a la charge écrasante d'organiser annuellement une saison d'hiver qui ne comporte pas moins de 70 concerts, donnés alternativement au Symphony-Hall de Boston, à l'Université de Harvard et à Washington.

C'est la première fois que l'orchestre se produira en Europe, notamment en Allemagne où il est attendu avec fièvre.

Des détails seront ultérieurement donnés sur la mise en location des places pour le concert du 18 mai. Les prix de ces places s'échelonneront entre 600 et 1.500 francs, des réductions étant accordées aux abonnés des concerts du Conservatoire de Metz.

La location débutera dans les tout prochains jours.

Places réservées aux J.M.F.

La délégation régionale des Jeunesses Musicales de France a pu obtenir, des organisateurs du concert du 18 mai, que des places soient réservées à ses adhérents.

A cet effet, tous les JMF désirant assister au concert devront se faire connaître avant le mardi 6 mai, à la permanence JMF à Metz, Maison Dauge, 8, rue de l'Esplanade (tél. 25.42). Ils devront donner leurs nom, prénoms et numéro de carte d'adhérent.

Cette inscription sera considérée comme engagement irrévocable d'assister au concert.

Les prix des places pour les JMF sont respectivement de : 450, 600, 900, 1.200 et 1.500 fr.

M. Charles MUNCH dirigeant une répétition du Boston Symphony Orchestra.

C. C. P. PARIS C 21707-99

NEW YORK TIMES
9 MAI

Notes of Discord Mar Festival in Paris; Communists Call It 'Caricature of Culture'

161

PARIS, April 30 (AP)—The "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century," a festival of music, art and literature designed to show the wares of Western culture, opened tonight with only a couple of dissonant notes.

An overflow crowd attended the opening concert in the old Church of St. Roch. It was dedicated to victims of tyranny in the twentieth century, symbolized by 200 former prisoners of the Germans, Russians and Franco Spain as guests of honor.

Classic Bach and a new composition by Francis Poulenc, French composer, were sung and played by the St. Guillaume Chorale of Strasbourg and the Orchestre des Concerts Lamoureux of Paris, conducted by Fritz Munch.

The discords came before the concert—one by the Communists, the other by Serge Lifar, ballet dancer. Both were aimed at the United States.

Lifar, who once danced with the famed Diaghilev Ballet in Russia, complained that his Paris Opera Ballet wasn't asked to contribute to the festival. He doled out faint praise for the New York City Ballet, which is the centerpiece of the dancing portion of the festival, but said—in a letter to a Paris newspaper—that "low intrigue" kept the opera ballet out.

The Communist paper L'Humanité described the festival as [illegible] American, and said it was "a caricature of culture." Its aim, the newspaper declared gravely, is to facilitate ideologic occupation of France by the United States.

The month-long festival is sponsored by the Congress for Cultural Freedom, a group of intellectuals whose members include John Dewey, Bendetto Croce, Jacques Maritain, Arthur Koestler and Bertrand Russell.

Julius Fleischmann, American yeast leader, raised through private sources and from his family's Fleischmann Foundation about $500,000 needed to float the festival.

Various Governments, including the French, have contributed to the expenses of sending orchestras or choruses to the festival, which is pointedly anti-Communist and pro-Western.

The 104-man Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux, is the star offering. Later it will tour Europe, giving fourteen concerts. The New York City Ballet of sixty-five members will do two new ballets specially written by Georges Auric and Henri Sauguet.

Ethel Linder Reiner, associated with the American National Theatre and Academy, has underwritten the cost of flying an entire troupe to Paris from New York to do the opera, "Four Saints in Three Acts," by Gertrude Stein. Virgil Thomson, who wrote the music, will conduct the performance. The cast is all-Negro.

Paris Festival Of Music, Art Starts April 30

'Masterpieces of 20th Century' to Emphasize Importance of Freedom

The first, and most important, event on the calendar for the 1952 Paris season is the Masterpieces of the 20th Century, an international exposition of the arts which will open April 30 and continue through the entire month of May.

The exposition, which is sponsored by the two-year-old Congress for Cultural Freedom, aims at demonstrating the importance of freedom to creative thinking by presenting the finest modern achievements of Western civilization in the fields of music, drama, painting, sculpture, cinema and philosophy.

Headlining the crowded program of cultural exhibits will be a series of concerts and performances at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées by leading symphony orchestras, opera companies, choirs and ballets.

In order that students, young musicians and workers may benefit from this exceptional opportunity, prices have been kept down to the minimum. For each concert, 200 seats will be available to students and young musicians at 150 francs, while such groups may purchase seats for the operas and ballets at 250 francs. In addition, music students will be allowed to attend rehearsals of the great orchestras participating.

Seats Available

For the New York City Ballet's performance of May 15, 500 seats at 250 francs each will be available to members of La Jeunesse Musicale de France. The closing concert, with Pierre Monteux conducting the Orchestre des Concerts Lamoureux at the Palais de Chaillot, will be a popular one, with all seats priced at 300 francs.

In addition to the operatic and musical phases of the exposition, there will be an important exhibition of modern painting, opening at the Musée d'Art Moderne, Pavilion de New York, May 7, and a literary conference, which will open at the Sorbonne May 15.

Among the important works to be displayed at the Musee d'Art Moderne are the Douanier Rousseau's "The Sleeping Gipsy," Seurat's "Jeune Femme se Poudrant," Duchamp's "Nude Descending a Staircase," Bonnard's "The Rape of Europe," Modigliani's "Portrait of Jacques Lipschitz," and numerous canvases by Van Gogh, Picasso, Paul Klee, Soutine, Juan Gris, Léger, Miro, James Ensor, Marc Chagall and Kandinsky, as well as sculptures by Lipschitz, Moore, Giacometti and others.

The program of the first concerts, operas and ballets follows (all performances not otherwise noted to be given at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, where tickets may also be purchased):

Wednesday, April 30 (at Eglise St. Roch, Paris)—Inaugural concert, dedicated to the memory of all 20th-century victims of oppression. St. Guillaume Chorus, Strasbourg, France; conductor Fritz Munch. Lamoureux Concert Orchestra Paris. "Magnificat," by J. S. Bach. Soloist: Ernest Haefliger. "Stabat Mater," by Francis Poulenc. Soloist: Geneviève Moizan. (First performance in Paris.)

Friday, May 2, and Saturday, May 3—Vienna State Opera and Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra; conductor Karl Boehm. "Wozzeck," opera by Alban Berg; libretto by Georg Buchner; decor by Caspar Neher; produced by Oscar Fritz Schuh. (The 1951 Salzburg Festival production—first performance in France.)

Monday, May 5—Paris Opéra Orchestra; conductor Bruno Walter. "Don Juan," by Richard Strauss. "Prélude à l'Après-Midi d'un Faune," by Claude Debussy. "Das Lied von der Erde," by Gustav Mahler. Soloist: Kathleen Ferrier, contralto.

Tuesday, May 6 (at Paris Opéra House)—Boston Symphony Orchestra; conductor Charles Munch, musical director. (First performance in Europe.) Overture, "The School for Scandal," by Samuel Barber; "Toccata," by Walter Piston; "Symphony for String Orchestra," No. 2, by Arthur Honegger; "La Mer," by Claude Debussy; "Daphnis and Chloe," Suite No. 2, by Maurice Ravel.

Wednesday, May 7, and Friday, May 9—"Don Perlimplin," opera in one act by Vittorio Rieti; libretto by F. Garcia Lorca (world première). World premiere of two ballets choreographed and danced by the Grand Ballet du Marquis de Cuevas: "Cordelia," ballet with music by Henri Sauguet; decor by Jacques Dupont. "Coup de Feu," ballet with music by Georges Auric; decor by A. M. Cassandre.

Thursday, May 8—Boston Symphony Orchestra; conductor Pierre Monteux. Symphony by Willem Pijper; "Protée," Suite No. 2, by Darius Milhaud; "Symphony No. 3," by William Schuman; "Le Sacre du Printemps," by Igor Stravinsky.

Saturday, May 10 (at Opéra)—New York City Ballet Company; artistic director, George Balanchine; conductor: Leon Barzin, musical director. (First performance in Paris.) "Swan Lake," music by Peter Tchaikovsky; choreography by George Balanchine after Lev Ivanov; scenery and costumes by Cecil Beaton. "La Valse," music by Maurice Ravel; choreography by George Balanchine; costumes by Karinska. "The Cage," music by Ivor Stravinsky ("Concerto in D for Strings"); choreography by Jerome Robbins; costumes by Ruth Sobotka. "Bourrée Fantasque," music by Emmanuel Chabrier; choreography by George Balanchine; costumes by Karinska.

Sunday, May 11—New York City Ballet Company. Program will include "Till Fire Bird," music by Igor Stravinsky; scenery by Marc Chagall; choreography by George Balanchine; conducted by Léon Barzin.

Monday, May 12—New York City Ballet Company. Program will include "Till Eulenspiegel," music by Richard Strauss; scenery by Esteban Frances; choreography by George Balanchine; conducted by Léon Barzin.

Tuesday, May 13—New York City Ballet Company. Program will include repeat performances of "The Fire Bird" and "Till Eulenspiegel."

Wednesday, May 14—New York City Ballet. Program will include first Paris performance of "Orpheus," music by Igor Stravinsky; choreography by George Balanchine; scenery and costumes by Isamu Noguchi; conducted by Igor Stravinsky.

Thursday, May 15—New York City Ballet. Program will include repeat performance of "Orpheus," conducted by Léon Barzin.

[270]

TIGHT BINDING

PARIS AFTER DARK

By Art Buchwald

Visiting-Firemen Suggestions

OUR mail for the past few weeks has been concerned with the impending invasion of visiting firemen. As each day goes by the panic among American residents in Paris increases.

"Where can I take my aunt and uncle?" pleads a lady from Neuilly. "How much will an evening for four cost?" asks a man in the State Department. "Where should we go with my boss and his wife?" a business man in the Opera district wants to know.

It is difficult to be specific. Each visiting fireman is an individual problem. A Quaker from Pennsylvania doesn't want to see the same things that an Elk from Oklahoma wants to see. A school teacher from Des Moines has different ideas about Paris than a used car dealer from Los Angeles.

Therefore we can only offer general advice. Some of it has been repeated in these columns before, but since the visiting fireman is an annual hazard we hope we'll be forgiven if we repeat it again.

* * *

The least expensive way of entertaining visiting firemen is to take them to the theater. Once you have purchased tickets you can sit contentedly in your seat without fear of other charges except perhaps a 100-franc tip for the usherette.

The safest theater bets are such old standbys as the Folies-Bergère, which has just opened with an entirely new show, the Casino de Paris, the Opéra, and the Comédie-Française.

Maurice Chevalier will open in a new musical revue at the Empire Theater in April in competition with the Folies, and from all indications this Pierre-Louis Guérin production sounds like a natural for Americans visiting Paris, as well as Americans living here.

* * *

One should also keep in mind, in case his visiting firemen are coming in May, that the Congress for Cultural Freedom is bringing to Paris some of the greatest musical and theatrical talent in Europe and the United States.

Some of the groups that are scheduled to appear in May are: The Vienna State Opera and Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra in a performance of the opera "Wozzeck," by Alban Berg; the Paris Opera House Orchestra, conducted by Bruno Walter; the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch; the New York City Ballet Company, with Igor Stravinsky, conducting his own ballet "Orpheus"; the Paris Conservatory Orchestra, with Stravinsky conducting and Jean Cocteau narrating the opera-oratorio "Oedipus Rex"; the RIAS Radio Orchestra of West Berlin playing music by Russian composers that is now banned in Russia; the Covent Garden Opera in a production of Benjamin Britten's opera "Billy Budd" and an American Negro company in "Four Saints in Three Acts," an opera by Gertrude Stein and Virgil Thomson.

Tickets will be at a premium for most of these events, and we suggest interested parties buy their tickets well in advance. Seats go on sale for all performances March 15 at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées and the American Express.

* * *

Some other theaters to keep in mind are the ABC Theater, which features a program of vaudeville with a top French entertainer as the star; the Bobino Music Hall, which is now presenting a revue called "Trois Faibles Femmes," starring the Peters Sisters; the Marigny Theater, that is presenting an operetta with Suzy Delair, and the Châtelet Theater, which is housing the operetta "Le Chanteur de Mexico," with singing star Luis Mariano.

* * *

Besides these theaters there will be many open-air concerts, firework displays and outdoor theater presentations. We'll try to keep our readers informed of these special events as they come along.

Next week we will discuss some popular nightclubs and also list some restaurants where visiting firemen can be amused.

123, Rue Montmartre — II[e]

3 MARS 1952

★ SPECTACLES DU MONDE ★ SPECTACLES DU MONDE

Triple fête à Edouard-VII

Visiblement neuves, une Buick-eight Dynaflow gris-vert, immatriculée 1763 AS 75, et une Wolkswagen de luxe décapotable gris-bleu, immatriculée 9577 AY 75, côte à côte, donnaient du nez contre le trottoir du Théâtre Edouard-VII. Au fond, la statue à bicorne du très parisien fils de la reine Victoria, et, devant, toute la troupe d'Ombre chère, réunie hier après-midi, après le baisser de rideau de la matinée, pour baptiser les deux voitures (la Volkswagen de Junie Astor et la Buick de Robert Lamoureux) et pour célébrer le vingt-cinquième anniversaire de la jeune première Claude Gensac.

« C'est ma huitième bagnole, expliquait Robert, un vrai vice, quoi... Y en a qui jouent aux courses... Moi, c'est les bagnoles ».

On vida un vague mousseux sur les capots et trinqua avec du Mumm cordon rouge, de ce « Mumm de l'oncle Henri » que l'on boit dans la pièce de Jacques Deval.

Junie Astor avait amené Mac, son scotch-terrier, et Claude Gensac avait convié son mari Pierre Mondy, son père et sa petite sœur Martine (5 ans) qui, très digne, pour la première fois, cinéma [illegible] avait vu jouer sa sœur en matinée.

« C'est bien, le théâ[illegible] a pas de [illegible] les gens qui pousse[illegible] ».

Martine, Laure[illegible] et l'Oscar

Mort du metteur en [illegible] Gregory La Cav[illegible]

En mai prochain, l'Opéra accueille l'Amérique

M. MAURICE LEHMANN, administrateur de la Réunion des Théâtres Lyriques, a profité de la venue en France de différentes compagnies étrangères qui doivent se produire en mai prochain au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées pendant le Festival de L'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle : il ouvre les portes du Palais Garnier aux influences extérieures.

L'Opéra s'est donc réservé la première soirée parisienne du New York City Ballet, dirigé par George Balanchine, et l'une des soirées du Boston Symphony Orchestra, dirigé par Charles Munch (au programme : The School for Scandal, de Samuel Barber ; Deuxième Symphonie, de Honegger ; Toccata, de Walter Piston ; La Mer, de Debussy, et la seconde suite de Daphnis et Chloé, de Ravel).

Comme, en échange, l'orchestre de l'Opéra, dirigé par Bruno Walter, donnera sur la scène du Théâtre des Champs-Elysées une idée de « L'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle » avec Le Chant de la Terre, de Mahler, L'Après-midi d'un faune, de Debussy, et Don Juan, de Strauss.

En outre, l'Opéra lui-même, pour participer à cette mise en lumière des œuvres contemporaines, donnera des pièces du répertoire écrites depuis 1900, ainsi Pelléas et Mélisande, de Debussy, dans le décor de sa première représentation en 1902.

Avant de partir pour Milan travailler à la Scala, le chorégraphe George Balanchine a donné les titres des œuvres que doit danser le New York City Ballet au mois de mai sur la scène du Théâtre des Champs-Elysées : Les quatre tempéraments, d'Hindemith ; Le fils prodigue, de Prokofiev ; Jinx, de Benjamin Britten ; Till Eulenspiegel, de Richard Strauss ; La Valse, de Ravel ; L'Oiseau de Feu et Orphée, d'Igor Strawinsky, qui, pour l'occasion, viendra lui-même au pupitre. Il n'est pas paru devant le public parisien depuis treize ans.

On sait enfin que Georges Auric, Henri Sauguet et Cassandre ont travaillé tout spécialement à des ballets dont Balanchine a fait la chorégraphie.

Le concert du « Violon d'Ingres » a donné le mercredi 5 mars, à 21 h., à la Melpomène, école des Beaux-Arts, au profit de l'« Association des Amis de l'école des Beaux-Arts ». Au programme : Mozart, Beethoven, Prokofieff, avec le concours de Roland Charmy.

Mathilde Donjon, donnera un Festival Liszt, samedi 8 mars, à 21 heures, salle Gaveau, avec un magnifique programme, comprenant quelques grands chefs-d'œuvre du maître.

Les Concerts de chambre présentent, le samedi 8 mars, à 17 h. 40, salle du Conservatoire, la pianiste Eleanor Fine. Suite en si mineur, de J.-S. Bach (flûte : J.-P. Rampal) ; Histoire du soldat, de Strawinsky (récitant : P. Hiegel).

Société des Concerts du Conservatoire, théâtre des Champs-Elysées. Dimanche 9 mars 1952, à 17 h. 45, répétition générale publique samedi 8, à 10 heures. Requiem, de G. Fauré (solistes : Mattiwilda Dobbs et Marcel Balmat) ; Hymne d'action de grâces, pour baryton, chœurs, orgue et orchestre, du R.P. E. Martin ; Messe du Sacre des Roys de France, pour six voix mixtes, orgue et trompettes, évocation musicale du R.P. E. Martin. Les chanteurs de Saint-Eustache, à l'orgue synthèse sonore : M. Duruflé. Direction : André Cluytens.

Concerts Pasdeloup. Dimanche 9 mars, théâtre de l'Empire, à 17 h. 45. Oberon (ouverture), de Weber ; Premier concerto en sol mineur, de Mendelssohn ; Concerto pour violon et orchestre, de René Challan ; Symphonie n° IV, de Brahms. Direction : Albert Wolff.

La Radiodiffusion française présente en ce moment, tous les lundis soirs, à 21 h. 29, sur Paris-Inter, un « Florilège des chansons populaires d'origine française au Canada et en Louisiane ». Ces chansons ont été recueillies par M. Alfred Pouinard, ancien professeur de musique dans les lycées de Paris et docteur de l'Université de Laval (Québec). Ces émissions, qui présentent des œuvres folkloriques de très grande valeur, sont réalisées par Roger Goupillières, avec le concours de Jenny-Jenny, des Antilles, et Yoland Guérard, basse canadienne. La partie musicale est assurée par Marcel Carliven et un orchestre de la Radiodiffusion placé sous sa direction. M. Alfred Pouinard se propose d'entreprendre prochainement, aux Antilles, de nouvelles recherches.

Nouvelles musicales

GEORGE BALANCHINE, un des plus grands chorégraphes de ce temps, vient de passer quelques heures à Paris, en route vers Milan, où il séjournera en mars pour y travailler avec le ballet de la Scala.

Durant ce bref passage, il s'est entretenu avec M. Nabokov au sujet de ses œuvres qui seront représentées à Paris, au mois de mai, durant le Congrès de la Liberté de la Culture. Ce seront Les Quatre tempéraments, d'Hindemith, Le Fils prodigue, de Prokofiev, Jeux, de Benjamin Britten, Till l'Espiègle, de Richard Strauss, L'Oiseau de feu et Orphée, de Stravinsky, et La Valse, de Ravel.

Stravinsky, qui n'a pas paru en public à Paris depuis treize ans, dirigera son Orphée. Signalons, en outre, que M. Nabokov a obtenu l'accord de M. Lehmann pour que la première représentation du New York City Ballet ait lieu à l'Opéra.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL DE DOCUMENTATION

15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e

C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Programme - Paris

5 MARS 1952

ALERTE AUX CHEFS!

Les représentations qui seront organisées en mai et juin prochains au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, dans le cadre de L'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle, permettront au public parisien d'applaudir au pupitre quelques-uns des plus grands chefs d'orchestre du monde. On peut citer dès à présent Igor Strawinsky, qui dirigera lui-même ses œuvres, Charles Munch, Bruno Walter, Ernest Ansermet, Karl Boehm, Ferenc Fricsay et Igor Markewitch.

Simple question : la R.T.F. envisage-t-elle de retransmettre certains de ces concerts ?

Ou bien y songera-t-elle quand il sera déjà trop tard ?

COMBAT - PARIS

3 MAR

En mai prochain, l'Opéra accueille l'Amérique

M. MAURICE LEHMANN, administrateur de la Réunion des Théâtres Lyriques, a profité de la venue en France de différentes compagnies étrangères qui doivent se produire en mai prochain au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées pendant le Festival de L'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle : il ouvre les portes du Palais Garnier aux influences extérieures.

L'Opéra s'est donc réservé la première soirée parisienne du New York City Ballet, dirigé par George Balanchine, et l'une des soirées du Boston Symphony Orchestra, dirigé par Charles Munch (au programme : The School for Scandal, de Samuel Barber ; Deuxième Symphonie, de Honegger ; Toccata, de Walter Piston ; La Mer, de Debussy, et la seconde suite de Daphnis et Chloé, de Ravel).

Comme, en échange, l'orchestre de l'Opéra, dirigé par Bruno Walter, donnera sur la scène du Théâtre des Champs-Elysées une idée de « L'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle » avec Le Chant de la Terre, de Mahler, L'Après-midi d'un faune, de Debussy, et Don Juan, de Strauss.

En outre, l'Opéra lui-même, pour participer à cette mise en lumière des œuvres contemporaines, donnera des pièces du répertoire écrites depuis 1900, ainsi Pelléas et Mélisande, de Debussy, dans le décor de sa première représentation en 1902.

Avant de partir pour Milan travailler à la Scala, le chorégraphe George Balanchine a donné les titres des œuvres que doit danser le New York City Ballet au mois de mai sur la scène du Théâtre des Champs-Elysées : Les quatre tempéraments, d'Hindemith ; Le fils prodigue, de Prokofiev ; Jinx, de Benjamin Britten ; Till Eulenspiegel, de Richard Strauss ; La Valse, de Ravel ; L'Oiseau de Feu et Orphée, d'Igor Strawinsky, qui, pour l'occasion, viendra lui-même au pupitre. Il n'est pas paru devant le public parisien depuis treize ans.

On sait enfin que Georges Auric, Henri Sauguet et Cassandre ont travaillé tout spécialement à des ballets dont Balanchine a fait la chorégraphie.

AIR DE PARIS 5 MA

Il est confirmé que Charles Munch dirigera lui-même l'orchestre symphonique de Boston lorsqu'il se produira à Paris, en mai.

New York Herald Tribune
Rue

7 MA

Boston Symphony Orchestra Performs at the Paris Opera

By Marshall Peck

The Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the opening program of its European tour at the Paris Opera last night, and the near-capacity audience called conductor Charles Munch back for an encore after applauding for over 10 minutes at the end of the performance.

It was a royal welcome and a gesture of musical appreciation for conductor Munch and the 104-piece Boston Symphony, the first American orchestra which has ever been invited to play at the French National Opera House.

President Vincent Auriol and Mme. Auriol, who often leaned forward in their first-balcony box to follow the musicians on the stage, French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman and American Ambassador James C. Dunn and Mrs. Dunn were among the celebrities present at the "Masterpieces of the 20th Century" concert.

While there was a sprinkling of empty seats in the pit section, the balconies of the Opera were packed, and the entire audience seemed to like the 20th-century selections on which the Congress of Cultural Freedom, the sponsoring organization of the performance, has focused its attention.

During the several minutes of "bravos" and cheering and applause which followed the scheduled conclusion of the program, Mr. Munch returned to the rostrum six times to acknowledge the plaudits of the audience.

Following the sixth recall, Mr.

(Continued on Page 2, Col. 6)

C'EST LA VIE

Après Churchill, mais...

LA R.T.F. a diffusé le magnifique concert donné au théâtre des Champs-Elysées par le Boston Symphony Orchestra, sous la direction de Charles Münch, le célèbre chef qui, depuis trois ans déjà, conduit le fameux orchestre américain.

A l'issue du concert, on demandait à Charles Münch quel avait été le plus bel étonnement de sa carrière.

— Très probablement, répondit-il, le résultat d'un référendum organisé il y a quelques années par un grand hebdomadaire féminin de Paris. Il avait invité ses lectrices à lui faire savoir quel était l'homme connu avec qui elles auraient aimé dîner. Il s'en trouva dix mille pour me désigner et j'arrivai second au classement, derrière Winston Churchill, mais devant Jean Marais, Gary Cooper... et le président Auriol. Je crois bien que je n'ai jamais été plus surpris que ce jour-là...

Révélation ultime

LA radio a également retransmis un autre concert du Boston Symphony Orchestra, dirigé cette fois par un autre de nos compatriotes, le doyen des grands chefs français, Pierre Monteux.

Après avoir pendant dix-sept ans conduit le San Francisco Symphony, « papa » Monteux — ainsi que l'appellent les Américains — a fait ses adieux à ses musiciens, quelques jours avant son départ pour la France.

— Je n'ai plus rien à vous apprendre, leur dit-il, mais, avant de vous dire au revoir, car vous me reverrez, je veux répondre à une question que vous vous posez tous, peut-être pas depuis dix-sept ans, mais depuis plusieurs années déjà : je ne me teins pas !

De fait, à soixante-dix-neuf ans, le maître, de qui la grosse moustache a blanchi depuis longtemps, a conservé de beaux cheveux noirs et abondants, qui pourraient faire envie à bon nombre de ses cadets.

X Symphony

(Continued from Page 1)

Munch responded to the still-seated crowd by leading the orchestra through an encore performance of the closing number, the smooth-flowing music of Maurice Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2.

The number which seemed to draw the most attention from the audience, outside of the final section, was Claude Debussy's picturesque "La Mer."

Mr. Munch opened the evening with an American composer, leading the orchestra through Samuel Barber's overture to "The School for Scandal," which the Boston Symphony first introduced in 1940. A reduced group of about 75 string musicians, with some wind instruments, then played Arthur Honegger's Symphony No. 2, for strings.

Albert Roussel's Second Suite from Act II of the ballet "Bacchus et Ariane" was presented as the last number before the intermission, and the second half of the program opened with American composer Walter Piston's Toccata.

"La Mer" and "Daphnis et Chloe" closed the evening.

TIGHT BINDING

PARIS AFTER DARK

By Art Buchwald

Visiting-Firemen Suggestions

OUR mail for the past few weeks has been concerned with the impending invasion of visiting firemen. As each day goes by the panic among American residents in Paris increases.

"Where can I take my aunt and uncle?" pleads a lady from Neuilly. "How much will an evening for four cost?" asks a man in the State Department. "Where should we go with my boss and his wife?" a business man in the Opera district wants to know.

It is difficult to be specific Each visiting fireman is an individual problem. A Quaker from Pennsylvania doesn't want to see the same things that an Elk from Oklahoma wants to see. A school teacher from Des Moines has different ideas about Paris than a used car dealer from Los Angeles.

Therefore we can only offer general advice. Some of it has been repeated in these columns before, but since the visiting fireman is an annual hazard we hope we'll be forgiven if we repeat it again.

* * *

The least expensive way of entertaining visiting firemen is to take them to the theater. Once you have purchased tickets you can sit contentedly in your seat without fear of other charges except perhaps a 100-franc tip for the usherette.

The safest theater bets are such old standbys as the Folies-Bergère, which has just opened with an entirely new show, the Casino de Paris, the Opéra, and the Comédie-Française.

Maurice Chevalier will open in a new musical revue at the Empire Theater in April in competition with the Folies, and from all indications this Pierre-Louis Guérin production sounds like a natural for Americans visiting Paris, as well as Americans living here.

* * *

One should also keep in mind, in case his visiting firemen are coming in May, that the Congress for Cultural Freedom is bringing to Paris some of the greatest musical and theatrical talent in Europe and the United States.

Some of the groups that are scheduled to appear in May are: The Vienna State Opera and Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra in a performance of the opera "Wozzeck," by Alban Berg; the Paris Opera House Orchestra, conducted by Bruno Walter; the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch; the New York City Ballet Company, with Igor Stravinsky, conducting his own ballet "Orpheus"; the Paris Conservatory Orchestra, with Stravinsky conducting and Jean Cocteau narrating the opera-oratorio "Oedipus Rex"; the RIAS Radio Orchestra of West Berlin playing music by Russian composers that is now banned in Russia; the Covent Garden Opera in a production of Benjamin Britten's opera "Billy Budd" and an American Negro company in "Four Saints in Three Acts," an opera by Gertrude Stein and Virgil Thomson.

Tickets will be at a premium for most of these events, and we suggest interested parties buy their tickets well in advance. Seats go on sale for all performances March 15 at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées and the American Express.

* * *

Some other theaters to keep in mind are the ABC Theater, which features a program of vaudeville with a top French entertainer as the star; the Bobino Music Hall, which is now presenting a revue called "Trois Faibles Femmes," starring the Peters Sisters; the Marigny Theater, that is presenting an operetta with Suzy Delair, and the Châtelet Theater, which is housing the operetta "Le Chanteur de Mexico," with singing star Luis Mariano.

* * *

Besides these theaters there will be many open-air concerts, firework displays and outdoor theater presentations. We'll try to keep our readers informed of these special events as they come along.

Next week we will discuss some popular nightclubs and also list some restaurants where visiting firemen can be amused.

123, Rue Montmartre — II[e]

3 MARS 1952

★ SPECTACLES DU MONDE ★ SPECTACLES DU MONDE

Triple fête à Edouard-VII

Visiblement neuves, une Buick-eight Dynaflow gris-vert, immatriculée 1763 AS 75, et une Wolkswagen de luxe décapotable gris - bleu, immatriculée 9577 AY 75, côte à côte, donnaient du nez contre le trottoir du Théâtre Edouard-VII. Au fond, la statue à bicorne du très parisien fils de la reine Victoria, et, devant, toute la troupe d'Ombre chère, réunie hier après-midi, après le baisser de rideau de la matinée, pour baptiser les deux voitures (la Volkswagen de Junie Astor et la Buick de Robert Lamoureux) et pour célébrer le vingt-cinquième anniversaire de la jeune première Claude Gensac.

« C'est ma huitième bagnole, expliquait Robert, un vrai vice, quoi... Y en a qui jouent aux courses... Moi, c'est les bagnoles ».

On vida un vague mousseux sur les capots et on trinqua avec du Mumm cordon rouge, de ce « Mumm de l'oncle Henri » que l'on boit dans la pièce de Jacques Deval.

Junie Astor avait amené Mac, son scotch-terrier, et Claude Gensac avait confié son mari Pierre Mondy, son père et sa petite sœur Martine (5 ans) qui, pour la première fois, avait vu jouer sa sœur en matinée.

« C'est bien, le théâtre, dit-elle, mieux que le cinéma !... D'abord, on a pas de carreau devant les gens qui jouent... ».

En mai prochain, l'Opéra accueille l'Amérique

M. MAURICE LEHMANN, administrateur de la Réunion des Théâtres Lyriques, a profité de la venue en France de différentes compagnies étrangères qui doivent se produire en mai prochain au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées pendant le Festival de L'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle : il ouvre les portes du Palais Garnier aux influences extérieures.

L'Opéra s'est donc réservé la première soirée parisienne du New York City Ballet, dirigé par George Balanchine, et l'une des soirées du Boston Symphony Orchestra, dirigé par Charles Munch (au programme : The School for Scandal, de Samuel Barber ; Deuxième Symphonie, de Honegger ; Toccata, de Walter Piston ; La Mer, de Debussy, et la seconde suite de Daphnis et Chloé, de Ravel).

Comme, en échange, l'orchestre de l'Opéra, dirigé par Bruno Walter, donnera sur la scène du Théâtre des Champs-Elysées une idée de « L'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle » avec Le Chant de la Terre, de Mahler, L'Après-midi d'un faune, de Debussy, et Don Juan, de Strauss.

En outre, l'Opéra lui-même, pour participer à cette mise en lumière des œuvres contemporaines, donnera des pièces du répertoire écrites depuis 1900, ainsi Pelléas et Mélisande, de Debussy, dans le décor de sa première représentation en 1902.

Avant de partir pour Milan travailler à la Scala, le chorégraphe George Balanchine a donné les titres des œuvres que doit danser le New York City Ballet au mois de mai sur la scène du Théâtre des Champs-Elysées : Les quatre tempéraments, d'Hindemith ; Le fils prodigue, de Prokofiev ; Jinx, de Benjamin Britten ; Till Eulenspiegel, de Richard Strauss ; La Valse, de Ravel ; L'Oiseau de feu et Orphée, d'Igor Strawinsky, qui, pour l'occasion, viendra lui-même au pupitre. Il n'est pas paru devant le public parisien depuis treize ans.

On sait enfin que Georges Auric, Henri Sauguet et Cassandre ont travaillé tout spécialement à des ballets dont Balanchine a fait la chorégraphie.

Mort du metteur en Gregory La Cav

Martine, Laure et l'Oscar

Le concert du « Violon d'Ingres » a donné le mercredi 5 mars, à 21 h., à la Melpomène, école des Beaux-Arts, au profit de l'« Association des Amis de l'école des Beaux-Arts ». Au programme : Mozart, Beethoven, Prokofieff, avec le concours de Roland Charmy.

Mathilde Donjon, donnera un Festival Liszt, samedi 8 mars, à 21 heures, salle Gaveau, avec un magnifique programme, comprenant quelques grands chefs-d'œuvre du maître.

Les Concerts de chambre présentent, le samedi 8 mars, à 17 h. 40, salle du Conservatoire, la pianiste Eleanor Fine. Suite en si mineur, de J.-S. Bach (flûte : J.-P. Rampal) ; Histoire du soldat, de Strawinsky (récitant : P. Hiegel).

Société des Concerts du Conservatoire, théâtre des Champs-Elysées. Dimanche 9 mars 1952, à 17 h. 45, répétition générale publique samedi 8, à 10 heures. Requiem, de G. Fauré (solistes : Mattiwilda Dobbs et Marcel Balmat) ; Hymne d'action de grâces, pour baryton, chœurs, orgue et orchestre, du R. P. E. Martin ; Messe du Sacre des Roys de France, pour six voix mixtes, orgue et trompettes, évocation musicale du R. P. E. Martin. Les chanteurs de Saint-Eustache, à l'orgue synthèse sonore : M. Duruflé. Direction : André Cluytens.

Concerts Pasdeloup. Dimanche 9 mars, théâtre de l'Empire, à 17 h. 45. Oberon (ouverture), de Weber ; Premier concerto en sol mineur, de Mendelssohn ; Concerto pour violon et orchestre, de René Challan ; Symphonie n° IV, de Brahms. Direction : Albert Wolff.

La Radiodiffusion française présente en ce moment, tous les lundis soirs, à 21 h. 29, sur Paris-Inter, un « Florilège des chansons populaires d'origine française au Canada et en Louisiane ». Ces chansons ont été recueillies par M. Alfred Poulnard, ancien professeur de musique dans les lycées de Paris et docteur de l'Université de Laval (Québec). Ces émissions, qui présentent des œuvres folkloriques de très grande valeur, sont réalisées par Roger Goupillières, avec le concours de Jenny-Jenny, des Antilles, et Yoland Guérard, basse canadienne. La partie musicale est assurée par Marcel Carlven et un orchestre de la Radiodiffusion placé sous sa direction. M. Alfred Poulnard se propose d'entreprendre prochainement, aux Antilles, de nouvelles recherches.

AIR DE PARIS — 5 MAR

Il est confirmé que Charles Munch dirigera lui-même l'orchestre symphonique de Boston lorsqu'il se produira à Paris, en mai.

New York Herald Tribune
[illegible], Rue de Berry, VIII[e]

7 MAI 1952

Boston Symphony Orchestra Performs at the Paris Opera

By Marshall Peck

The Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the opening program of its European tour at the Paris Opera last night, and the near-capacity audience called conductor Charles Munch back for an encore after applauding for over 10 minutes at the end of the performance.

It was a royal welcome and a gesture of musical appreciation for conductor Munch and the 104-piece Boston Symphony, the first American orchestra which has ever been invited to play at the French National Opera House.

President Vincent Auriol and Mme. Auriol, who often leaned forward in their first-balcony box to follow the musicians on the stage, French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman and American Ambassador James C. Dunn and Mrs. Dunn were among the celebrities present at the "Masterpieces of the 20th Century" concert.

While there was a sprinkling of empty seats in the pit section, the balconies of the Opera were packed, and the entire audience seemed to like the 20th-century selections on which the Congress of Cultural Freedom, the sponsoring organization of the performance, has focused its attention.

During the several minutes of "bravos" and cheering and applause which followed the scheduled conclusion of the program, Mr. Munch returned to the rostrum six times to acknowledge the plaudits of the audience.

Following the sixth recall, Mr.

(Continued on Page 2, Col. 6)

Symphony

(Continued from Page 1)

Munch responded to the still-seated crowd by leading the orchestra through an encore performance of the closing number, the smooth-flowing music of Maurice Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2.

The number which seemed to draw the most attention from the audience, outside of the final selection, was Claude Debussy's picturesque "La Mer."

Mr. Munch opened the evening with an American composer, leading the orchestra through Samuel Barber's overture to "The School for Scandal," which the Boston Symphony first introduced in 1940. A reduced group of about 75 string musicians, with some wind instruments, then played Arthur Honegger's Symphony No. 2, for strings.

Albert Roussel's Second Suite from Act II of the ballet "Bacchus et Ariane" was presented as the last number before the intermission, and the second half of the program opened with American composer Walter Piston's Toccata.

"La Mer" and "Daphnis et Chloe" closed the evening.

100 Rue Richelieu

5 MARS 1952

MARS 1952

Nouvelles musicales

GEORGE BALANCHINE, un des plus grands chorégraphes de ce temps, vient de passer quelques heures à Paris, en route vers Milan, où il séjournera en mars pour y travailler avec le ballet de la Scala.

Durant ce bref passage, il s'est entretenu avec M. Nabokov au sujet de ses œuvres qui seront représentées à Paris, au mois de mai, durant le Congrès de la Liberté de la Culture. Ce seront Les Quatre tempéraments, d'Hindemith, Le Fils prodigue, de Prokofiev, Jeux, de Benjamin Britten, Till l'Espiègle, de Richard Strauss, L'Oiseau de feu et Orphée, de Stravinsky, et La Valse, de Ravel.

Stravinsky, qui n'a pas paru en public à Paris depuis treize ans, dirigera son Orphée. Signalons, en outre, que M. Nabokov a obtenu l'accord de M. Lehmann pour que la première représentation du New York City Ballet ait lieu à l'Opéra.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL DE DOCUMENTATION

15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e

C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

Mai Programme - Paris

29 MAR 1952

ALERTE AUX CHEFS!

Les représentations qui seront organisées en mai et juin prochains au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, dans le cadre de L'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle, permettront au public parisien d'applaudir au pupitre quelques-uns des plus grands chefs d'orchestre du monde. On peut citer dès à présent Igor Strawinsky, qui dirigera lui-même ses œuvres, Charles Munch, Bruno Walter, Ernest Ansermet, Karl Bœhm, Ferenc Friesay et Igor Markewitch.

Simple question : la R.T.F. envisage-t-elle de retransmettre certains de ces concerts ? Ou bien y songera-t-elle quand il sera déjà trop tard ?

COMBAT - PARIS

3 MAR

En mai prochain, l'Opéra accueille l'Amérique

M. MAURICE LEHMANN, administrateur de la Réunion des Théâtres Lyriques, a profité de la venue en France de différentes compagnies étrangères qui doivent se produire en mai prochain au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées pendant le Festival de L'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle : il ouvre les portes du Palais Garnier aux influences extérieures.

L'Opéra s'est donc réservé la première soirée parisienne du New York City Ballet, dirigé par George Balanchine, et l'une des soirées du Boston Symphony Orchestra, dirigé par Charles Munch (au programme : The School for Scandal, de Samuel Barber ; Deuxième Symphonie, de Honegger ; Toccata, de Walter Piston ; La Mer, de Debussy, et la seconde suite de Daphnis et Chloé, de Ravel).

Comme, en échange, l'orchestre de l'Opéra, dirigé par Bruno Walter, donnera sur la scène du Théâtre des Champs-Elysées une idée de « L'Œuvre du XX[e] siècle » avec Le Chant de la Terre, de Mahler, L'Après-midi d'un faune, de Debussy, et Don Juan, de Strauss.

En outre, l'Opéra lui-même, pour participer à cette mise en lumière des œuvres contemporaines, donnera des pièces du répertoire écrites depuis 1900, ainsi Pelléas et Mélisande, de Debussy, dans le décor de sa première représentation en 1902.

Avant de partir pour Milan travailler à la Scala, le chorégraphe George Balanchine a donné les titres des œuvres que doit danser le New York City Ballet au mois de mai sur la scène du Théâtre des Champs-Elysées : Les quatre tempéraments, d'Hindemith ; Le fils prodigue, de Prokofiev ; Jinx, de Benjamin Britten ; Till Eulenspiegel, de Richard Strauss ; La Valse, de Ravel ; L'Oiseau de feu et Orphée, d'Igor Strawinsky, qui, pour l'occasion, viendra lui-même au pupitre. Il n'est pas paru devant le public parisien depuis treize ans.

On sait enfin que Georges Auric, Henri Sauguet et Cassandre ont travaillé tout spécialement à des ballets dont Balanchine a fait la chorégraphie.

C'EST LA VIE

Après Churchill, mais...

LA R.T.F. a diffusé le magnifique concert donné au théâtre des Champs-Elysées par le Boston Symphony Orchestra, sous la direction de Charles Münch, le célèbre chef qui, depuis trois ans déjà, conduit le fameux orchestre américain.

A l'issue du concert, on demandait à Charles Münch quel avait été le plus bel étonnement de sa carrière.

— Très probablement, répondit-il, le résultat d'un référendum organisé il y a quelques années par un grand hebdomadaire féminin de Paris. Il avait invité ses lectrices à lui faire savoir quel était l'homme connu avec qui elles auraient aimé dîner. Il s'en trouva dix mille pour me désigner et j'arrivai second au classement, derrière Winston Churchill, mais devant Jean Marais, Gary Cooper... et le président Auriol. Je crois bien que je n'ai jamais été plus surpris que ce jour-là...

Révélation ultime

LA radio a également retransmis un autre concert du Boston Symphony Orchestra, dirigé cette fois par un autre de nos compatriotes, le doyen des grands chefs français, Pierre Monteux.

Après avoir pendant dix-sept ans conduit le San Francisco Symphony, « papa » Monteux — ainsi que l'appellent les Américains — a fait ses adieux à ses musiciens, quelques jours avant son départ pour la France.

— Je n'ai plus rien à vous apprendre, leur dit-il, mais, avant de vous dire au revoir, car vous me reverrez, je veux répondre à une question que vous vous posez tous, peut-être pas depuis dix-sept ans, mais depuis plusieurs années déjà : je ne me teins pas !

De fait, à soixante-dix-neuf ans, le maître, de qui la grosse moustache a blanchi depuis longtemps, a conservé de beaux cheveux noirs et abondants, qui pourraient faire envie à bon nombre de ses cadets.

[271]

Extrait du Journal : La Lanterne

Adresse : Bruxelles

Date : 24 März 1952

LA MUSIQUE A PARIS

La grande saison de l'Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle

341

(par José Bruyr)

...aste exposition internationale des Arts se déroulera à ...endant le mois de mai. ... ...xposition...

...pour dire ce qu'elle pré...re, ce qu'elle sera, cette ...ion, y a-t-il mieux à faire que de citer, au mot à mot, de ces « prieres d'insérer » ...haque courrier nous fait, ...des semaines, si bonne ... ? Je cite donc :

...tte gigantesque exposi...nsérée dans le cadre de ...re du Vingtième Siècle a ...but principal d'attirer l'at...n du public sur ce que ...me libre a été capable ...omplir dans le domaine des ...au cours du demi-siècle qui ...de s'écouler. Afin de dé...er l'importance capitale ...que ce climat de liberté sur ...elligence créatrice, cette ex...on englobera aussi bien la ...que symphonique, l'opéra ...ballet, que la peinture, la ...ature et la philosophie. »

...ballet, la symphonie et ...a : voilà qui relève de cet...hronique. Pelléas — à tout ...dire un « opéra » — arrive ...avril à son cinquantenaire, ...ce titre, va entrer, d'avan...dans le cycle des manifesta...s prévues : il nous serait ...du, paraît-il, dans les décors ...itifs de Jusseaume, recons...s. Et après tant d'essais ...teux, farfelus ou aberrants ...à quoi j'applaudis, d'avan...des deux mains. Ils eurent, ...décors, plus que l'approba...de Debussy lui-même : ...merci à Albert Carré, a-t-il ...écrit, d'avoir donné à mon œu...re le cadre de poésie et de rê...sans lequel elle n'aurait pu ...vivre. »

Depuis Pelléas, le théâtre lyrique, à dire d'expert, n'aurait plus connu qu'un seul chef-d'œuvre authentique : le Wozzeck, d'Alban Berg. A Paris, il ne nous est connu que par une soirée unique à la Radio ; c'est l'Opéra de Vienne qui viendrait nous le présenter et dans d'exceptionnelles conditions d'exécution.

Mais à Wozzeck et à Pelléas on joindrait une œuvre « noire », le Bessig and Bess, de Gershwin ? Non pas : les Quatre Saints en trois actes, de Virgil Thompson qui fut joué quarante-huit fois (est-ce là une référence ?) quarante-huit fois en la 44me Rue de New-York, en 1934. »

Si avec ces deux (ou trois) œuvres, l'opéra marque le pas, le ballet se taille la part du lion. C'est le New-York City Ballet, où règne G. Balouchine, qui donnera La Valse, de Ravel, le Jinx de B. Britten, le Fils prodigue, de Prokofieff, le Till Eulenspiegel, de R. Strauss les Quatre Tempéraments, d'Hindemith et enfin, avec au pupitre l'auteur, que Paris n'a pas revu depuis treize ans, l'Oiseau de Feu, Orphée et le Concerto en ré, de Strawinsky, devenu, grâce à Jérôme Robbins, La Cage, ballet créé au Metropolitan, en octobre dernier.

Mais tout autant que celui de l'Opéra, pareil programme n'est pas sans imposer quelques réflexions. Que Petrouchka et que Le Sacre n'y figurent point, voilà qui déjà surprend. Ce qui surprend davantage, c'est d'y voir figurer des œuvres qui n'ont été « chorégraphiées » qu'après coup, comme Till, comme ce Concerto en ré surtout, dont la réputation n'est en rien établie, alors que les noms de Dukas et de Falla, auteurs de La Péri et de l'Amour Sorcier en sont absents.

Reste l'œuvre de concert.

L'Orchestre de l'Opéra, que Bruno Walter prendra en mains, jouera pêle-mêle l'Après-midi d'un Faune, de Debussy, le Don Juan de Strauss et le Chant de la Terre, de Malher, tandis que, sous les baguettes successives de Charles Münch et de Pierre Monteux, le Boston Symphony Orchestra « l'un des quatre grands orchestres mondiaux » (on demande le nom des trois autres) donnera la Mer, de Debussy, et le Daphnis (2e suite) de Ravel, le Protée (2e suite) de Milhaud et la IIe Symphonie d'Honegger, la IIIe de W. Schuman, la Toccata de Walter Piston, la Fantasia de Taillis et la School of Scandal, de Samuel Barber. Ceci sans négliger les manifestations de l'Orchestre Philharmonique de Vienne, de l'Orchestre et des Chœurs de l'Academia Santa Cecilia de Rome, du R.I.A.S. (ou Orchestre de Berlin-Ouest), de l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande. Et j'en dois passer.

Certes, on ne peut que s'émerveiller de l'ampleur de ce déploiement musical et en attendre des soirées inoubliables. Qui sait si nous n'allons, en ce mois de mai, retrouver l'atmosphère jamais retrouvée depuis, des « saisons de printemps », de l'autre après-guerre, quand les Ballets Russes, sortis de la tourmente, venaient nous jeter, de semaine en semaine, quelque exaltant chef-d'œuvre nouveau, cela tandis que les Ballets Suédois, à la porte d'à côté, nous offraient l'occasion de quelque tumultueuse bataille ! Je pense à celle de la Création du monde, de Milhaud, l'une de ses meilleures œuvres.

Protée, à coup sûr, ne la vaut pas. C'est Protée cependant qui marque sa présence aux programmes ci-dessus, comme la Seconde marque celle d'Honegger. Or, ces deux grands musiciens qui atteignent (faut-il le rappeler ?) en cette année, la soixantième année de leur âge ne méritaient-ils pas autre chose, ne méritaient-ils pas mieux ?

Car ce Congrès prétend bien — au-delà du plaisir de quelques concerts exceptionnels — « prouver quelque chose ». Mais pareille démonstration sera-t-elle valable en omettant les noms de Fauré, de Schmitt, de de Falla, de Kodaly, de Sibelius, de Bela Bartok surtout, voire de Schœnberg, lequel mit du génie à prouver qu'on se devait de danser dans des chaines. Et voilà la question qu'un bon esprit peut se poser sans déchoir. Un mauvais esprit ajouterait que la preuve aurait été plus convaincante si, face aux œuvres « libres », on en avait mis d'autres: la Guerre et Paix, par exemple, de Prokofieff, pour n'en citer qu'une, ou bien... Mais je m'arrête sur le chemin de ces dangereuses suggestions.

Tel quel, même s'il doit prouver moins qu'on ne l'eût voulu, le programme établi par Nicolas Nabokoff a de quoi faire de Paris, du 6 au 31 mai, le cœur sonore de la planète.

Ainsi soit-il.

* * *

Comme pour préluder à ces fêtes, la quinzaine écoulée nous a amené l'Opéra de Stuttgart avec trois soirées et quatre spectacles. Un, deux : La Flûte et Tristan. Trois, quatre : la Phèdre de Mihalovici et le Catulli Carmina de Carl Orff.

Il est in-vrai-sem-bla-ble (en cinq syllabes) qu'une œuvre comme Phèdre, due à un musicien qui est nôtre depuis trente ans, ait dû s'exiler en Allemagne, et que ce soit une ville de province de là-bas qui nous doive montrer comment il la fallait monter (à quelques lourdeurs dans les costumes près).

Je n'en dirai point autant de Catulli Carmina. Carl Orff passe là-bas pour un non-conformiste. Est-ce l'être vraiment de confier la musique d'un ballet à des chœurs et à une batterie, à des chœurs qui, sur des mélopées à relents mêlés de grégorien et de Strawinsky, récitent en latin d'érotiques poèmes de Catulle que des danseurs tristes et appliqués miment avec des poses de mauvais lieu ? On escomptait sans doute le scandale (l'œuvre fut interdite à Berlin). Paris applaudit, poliment. Mais l'érotisme, c'est donc ça ? Il faudra que je me rejoue une petite page de Grieg qui m'enchanta, à l'âge d'avant le péché, et qui s'appelait Erotik, ingénument.

José BRUYR.

L'œuvre du vingtième siècle

Tel est le titre de l'Exposition internationale des Arts et de la Pensée, qui se tiendra à Paris pendant le mois de mai 1952, sous l'égide du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture.

Cette association a été constituée en juin 1950 par des intellectuels, artistes et savants, de différents pays, unis dans leur désir de défendre la liberté de la culture contre toute tentative d'asservissement.

Les présidents d'honneur du Congrès sont : Benedetto Croce, John Dewey, Karl Jaspers, Salvador de Madariaga, Jacques Maritain, Bertrand Russell. Denis de Rougemont assume la présidence du comité exécutif et Nicolas Nabokov le secrétariat général.

« L'œuvre du XXme siècle », telle que la conçoit le Congrès, sera une présentation des chefs-d'œuvre les plus significatifs produits par notre civilisation depuis un demi-siècle.

Les différentes manifestations prévues en mai 1952 s'étendront à des domaines divers : musique, théâtre lyrique, peinture, littérature.

En offrant ce panorama d'une ampleur sans précédent, les promoteurs espèrent démontrer que la culture de l'Occident n'a rien perdu de sa force créatrice, de sa diversité et de sa vitalité.

ELLE - PARIS

Elle-Musiq... 17 MAR 1952

113/6

8 chefs d'orchestre et Stravinsky dirigeront le Festival du XXe siècle

Toutes les grandes œuvres musicales du XXe siècle seront exécutées à Paris, du 30 avril au 1er juin. Pour la première fois, les plus célèbres orchestres du monde seront dirigés au théâtre des Champs-Elysées et à l'Opéra par les « Maîtres ».

Bruno Walter conduira le Don Juan, de Strauss, l'Après-midi d'un faune, de Debussy, interprétés par l'orchestre de l'Opéra ; Charles Münch, la 2e Symphonie, d'Honegger, La Mer, de Debussy, interprétés par l'orchestre symphonique de Boston.

Igor Stravinsky qui n'est pas venu à Paris depuis 13 ans, dirigera son Œdipus Rex, dont Jean Cocteau a écrit le livret et qu'interprétera Patricia Neway qui a créé Le Consul. Parmi les autres grands chefs d'orchestre : Ferenc Friesay, Leopold Stokowski, Igor Markevitch, Pierre Monteux, Benjamin Britten.

A l'Opéra, le grand chorégraphe Balanchine dirigera le New-York City Ballet.

FRANCE-SOIR, PARIS

28 MAR 1952

La bouteille à l'encre

● Une vaste Exposition internationale des Arts aura lieu en mai, à Paris, dans le cadre de l' « Œuvre du XXe siècle ». De nombreux écrivains de tous les pays occidentaux participeront aux débats et conférences qui compléteront le programme comportant des ballets, des concerts (orchestre de Boston, orchestre de Rome, orchestre du Conservatoire de Paris, New-York, City Ballet, etc...) et une soirée Stravinsky au cours de laquelle le compositeur dirigera. Une exposition de peintures consacrées à des chefs-d'œuvre du XXe siècle mal connus du public français fera partie de ces manifestations. Les écrivains participant aux conférences et aux débats auront à répondre à trois questions : 1° Le créateur peut-il utiliser sans se trahir les techniques modernes de communication (presse, radio, télévision, cinéma ? 2° Comment maintenir à la fois les valeurs de révolte et de communion ? 3° Comment choisir entre la libre recherche de l'expression dont les résultats sont chaotiques et la condition servile imposée à l'artiste par les régimes totalitaires ?

Ces débats s'ouvriront à la Sorbonne le 15 mai et seront tenus en français et en anglais.

[27]

NY Times

SEAT SALE TO OPEN FOR PARIS FESTIVAL

Tickets Available Tomorrow —Importance of Liberty to the Arts to Be Stressed

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, March 29 — Tickets go on sale Monday in the United States, France and other countries for the Twentieth Century Festival of Art to be staged here in May as a demonstration of what man can create when his mind is not subject to totalitarian constraints.

Through music, opera, ballet, painting, drama and philosophy, the Congress of Cultural Freedom, which is sponsoring the festival, will deliver a message on the importance of liberty to artistic creation. Tickets, either free or at reduced prices, will be made available in generous lots to student, youth and labor organizations while the price of tickets for the public will be no higher and sometimes lower than those prevailing for ordinary exhibitions in Paris.

Nicholas Nabokov, secretary general of the Congress of Cultural Freedom, said the festival would be made as popular as possible, but there would be two or three gala events, priced accordingly.

Boston Symphony to Play

The most important event will be the first performance in Europe by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Opera House on May 6, in the presence of President and Mme. Vincent Auriol. Led by its regular conductor, Charles Munch, the orchestra will play works by Samuel Barber, Arthur Honegger, Walter Piston, Debussy and Ravel.

Tickets for all events will be sold in United States through the American Express Company.

The festival will open on April 30 with a concert at St. Roch Church dedicated "to the memory of all victims of oppression in the twentieth century."

The Magnificat of Bach and the Stabat Mater by Francis Poulenc will be performed by the Lamoureux Orchestra of Paris and the St. Guillaume chorus of Strasbourg. The part of the audience will be made up of refugees from Iron Curtain countries as guests.

Thereafter there will be an event almost nightly. The Boston Orchestra will play three times in all. On May 21 it will play a special concert under Pierre Monteux of Berlioz and Tchaikovsky. Members of the free labor unions in France will be guests and the deficit will be made up by the World Federation of Free Trade Unions.

New York Ballet to Perform

For every concert there will be 250 seats set aside for either student labor or youth organizations at 150 to 200 francs (from 43 to 59 cents). The price for the closing concert on June 1 by the Lamoureux Orchestra under Pierre Monteux at the Palais de Chaillot will be a uniform 300 francs (84 cents).

Other organizations include the Vienna State Opera and the Vienna Philharmonic in two performances of Berg's Opera "Wozzeck" on May 2 and 3; the Paris Opera Orchestra led by Bruno Walter on May 5; the New York City Ballet Company in six performances from May 10 to 15; the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande from Geneva led by Ernest Ansermet on May 16 and 17; the French National Radio Orchestra led by Igor Stravinsky in his own works on May 19 and by Hans Rosbaud on May 20.

Also the Paris Conservatory Orchestra directed by Stravinsky on May 22; the Berlin RIAS Orchestra led by Ferenc Fricsay on May 23 and 24; London's Covent Garden Opera in a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera "Billy Budd" on May 27; the orchestra and chorus of the Academy of St. Cecilia of Rome led by Igor Markevitch on May 28 and 29, and American National Theater and Academy in a performance of "Four Saints" in three acts by Virgil Thomson.

During May art lovers will have opportunity to see what will probably be the most extensive exhibition of twentieth century art ever put on. Contributions from Europe and America will be assembled in the Museum of Modern Art.

World Court Oil Case May 6

THE HAGUE, the Netherlands, March 29 (AP) — The International Court of Justice will open oral hearings May 6 on the British-Iranian oil dispute. Britain has charged Iran's nationalization of holdings of the British-owned Anglo-Iranian Oil Company violated international law. The Iranian Government has challenged the court's jurisdiction.

Extrait du Journal : La Lanterne
Adresse : Bruxelles
Date : 24 März 1952

LA MUSIQUE A PARIS

La grande saison de l'Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle

0341

(par José Bruyr)

Une vaste exposition internationale des Arts se déroulera à Paris pendant le mois de mai. ... Cette exposition...

Mais pour dire ce qu'elle prétend être, ce qu'elle sera, cette exposition, y a-t-il mieux à faire que de citer, au mot à mot, l'un de ces « prières d'insérer » que chaque courrier nous fait, à des semaines, si bonne mesure ? Je cite donc :

« Cette gigantesque exposition insérée dans le cadre de l'Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle a pour but principal d'attirer l'attention du public sur ce que l'homme libre a été capable d'accomplir dans le domaine des arts au cours du demi-siècle qui vient de s'écouler. Afin de démontrer l'importance capitale d'un tel climat de liberté sur l'intelligence créatrice, cette exposition englobera aussi bien la musique symphonique, l'opéra et le ballet, que la peinture, la littérature et la philosophie. »

Le ballet, la symphonie et l'opéra : voilà qui relève de cette chronique. Pelléas — à tout prendre un « opéra » — arrive fin avril à son cinquantenaire, et à ce titre, va entrer, d'avance, dans le cycle des manifestations prévues : il nous serait rendu, paraît-il, dans les décors primitifs de Jusseaume, reconstitués. Et après tant d'essais douteux, farfelus ou aberrants voilà à quoi j'applaudis, d'avance, des deux mains. Ils eurent, ces décors, plus que l'approbation de Debussy lui-même : « Merci à Albert Carré, a-t-il écrit, d'avoir donné à mon œuvre le cadre de poésie et de rêve sans lequel elle n'aurait pu vivre. »

Depuis Pelléas, le théâtre lyrique, à dire d'expert, n'aurait plus connu qu'un seul chef-d'œuvre authentique : le Wozzeck, d'Alban Berg. A Paris, il ne nous est connu que par une soirée unique à la Radio ; c'est l'Opéra de Vienne qui viendrait nous le présenter et dans d'exceptionnelles conditions d'exécution.

Mais à Wozzeck et à Pelléas on joindrait une œuvre « noire », le Bessig and Bess, de Gershwin ? Non pas : les Quatre Saints en trois actes, de Virgil Thompson qui fut joué quarante-huit fois (est-ce là une référence ?) quarante-huit fois en la 44me Rue de New-York, en 1934. »

Si avec ces deux (ou trois) œuvres, l'opéra marque le pas, le ballet se taille la part du lion. C'est le New-York City Ballet, où règne G. Balouchine, qui donnera La Valse, de Ravel, le Jinx de B. Britten, le Fils prodigue, de Prokofieff, le Till Eulenspiegel, de R. Strauss, les Quatre Tempéraments, d'Hindemith et enfin, avec au pupitre l'auteur, que Paris n'a pas revu depuis treize ans, l'Oiseau de Feu, Orphée et le Concerto en ré, de Strawinsky, devenu, grâce à Jérôme Robbins, La Cage, ballet créé au Metropolitan, en octobre dernier.

Mais tout autant que celui de l'Opéra, pareil programme n'est pas sans imposer quelques réflexions. Que Petrouchka et que Le Sacre n'y figurent point, voilà qui déjà surprend. Ce qui surprend davantage, c'est d'y voir figurer des œuvres qui n'ont été « chorégraphiées » qu'après coup, comme Till, comme ce Concerto en ré surtout, dont la réputation n'est en rien établie, alors que les noms de Dukas et de Falla, auteurs de La Péri et de l'Amour Sorcier en sont absents.

Reste l'œuvre de concert.

L'Orchestre de l'Opéra, que Bruno Walter prendra en mains, jouera pêle-mêle l'Après-midi d'un Faune, de Debussy, le Don Juan de Strauss et le Chant de la Terre, de Mahler, tandis que, sous les baguettes successives de Charles Münch et de Pierre Monteux, le Boston Symphony Orchestra « l'un des quatre grands orchestres mondiaux » (on demande le nom des trois autres) donnera la Mer, de Debussy, et le Daphnis (2e suite) de Ravel, le Protée (2e suite) de Milhaud et la IIe Symphonie d'Honegger, la IIIe de W. Schuman, la Toccata de Walter Piston, la Fantasia de Taillis et la School of Scandal, de Samuel Barber. Ceci sans négliger les manifestations de l'Orchestre Philharmonique de Vienne, de l'Orchestre et des Chœurs de l'Academia Santa Cecilia de Rome, du R.I.A.S. (ou Orchestre de Berlin-Ouest), de l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande... Et j'en dois passer.

Certes, on ne peut que s'émerveiller de l'ampleur de ce déploiement musical et en attendre des soirées inoubliables. Qui sait si nous n'allons, en ce mois de mai, retrouver l'atmosphère jamais retrouvée depuis, des « saisons de printemps », de l'autre après-guerre, quand les Ballets Russes, sortis de la tourmente, venaient nous jeter, de semaine en semaine, quelque exaltant chef-d'œuvre nouveau, cela tandis que les Ballets Suédois, à la porte d'à côté, nous offraient l'occasion de quelque tumultueuse bataille : Je pense à celle de la Création du monde, de Milhaud, l'une de ses meilleures œuvres.

Protée, à coup sûr, ne la vaut pas. C'est Protée cependant qui marque sa présence aux programmes ci-dessus, comme la Seconde marque celle d'Honegger. Or, ces deux grands musiciens qui atteignent (faut-il le rappeler ?) en cette année, la soixantième année de leur âge ne méritaient-ils pas autre chose, ne méritaient-ils pas mieux ?

Car ce Congrès prétend bien — au-delà du plaisir de quelques concerts exceptionnels — « prouver quelque chose ». Mais pareille démonstration sera-t-elle valable en omettant les noms de Fauré, de Schmitt, de de Falla, de Kodaly, de Sibelius, de Bela Bartok surtout, voire de Schœnberg, lequel mit du génie à prouver qu'on se devait de danser dans des chaînes. Et voilà la question qu'un bon esprit peut se poser sans déchoir. Un mauvais esprit ajouterait que la preuve aurait été plus convaincante si, face aux œuvres « libres », on en avait mis d'autres : la Guerre et Paix, par exemple, de Prokofieff, pour n'en citer qu'une, ou bien... Mais je m'arrête sur le chemin de ces dangereuses suggestions.

Tel quel, même s'il doit prouver moins qu'on ne l'eût voulu, le programme établi par Nicolas Nabokoff a de quoi faire de Paris, du 6 au 31 mai, le cœur sonore de la planète.

Ainsi soit-il.

* * *

Comme pour préluder à ces fêtes, la quinzaine écoulée nous a amené l'Opéra de Stuttgart avec trois soirées et quatre spectacles. Un, deux : La Flûte et Tristan. Trois, quatre : la Phèdre de Mihalovici et le Catulli Carmina de Carl Orff.

Il est in-vrai-sem-bla-ble (en cinq syllabes) qu'une œuvre comme Phèdre, due à un musicien qui est nôtre depuis trente ans, ait dû s'exiler en Allemagne, et que ce soit une ville de province de là-bas qui nous doive montrer comment il la fallait monter (à quelques lourdeurs dans les costumes près).

Je n'en dirai point autant de Catulli Carmina. Carl Orff passe là-bas pour un non-conformiste. Est-ce l'être vraiment de confier la musique d'un ballet à des chœurs et à une batterie, à des chœurs qui, sur des mélopées à relents mêlés de grégorien et de Strawinsky, récitent en latin d'érotiques poèmes de Catulle que des danseurs tristes et appliqués miment avec des poses de mauvais lieu ? On escomptait sans doute le scandale (l'œuvre fut interdite à Berlin). Paris applaudit, poliment. Mais l'érotisme, c'est donc ça ? Il faudra que je me rejoue une petite page de Grieg qui m'enchanta, à l'âge d'avant le péché, et qui s'appelait Erotik, ingénument.

José BRUYR.

L'œuvre du vingtième siècle

Tel est le titre de l'Exposition internationale des Arts et de la Pensée, qui se tiendra à Paris pendant le mois de mai 1952, sous l'égide du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture.

Cette association a été constituée en juin 1950 par des intellectuels, artistes et savants, de différents pays, unis dans leur désir de défendre la liberté de la culture contre toute tentative d'asservissement.

Les présidents d'honneur du Congrès sont : Benedetto Croce, John Dewey, Karl Jaspers, Salvador de Madariaga, Jacques Maritain, Bertrand Russell. Denis de Rougemont assume la présidence du comité exécutif et Nicolas Nabokov le secrétariat général.

« L'œuvre du XXme siècle », telle que la conçoit le Congrès, sera une présentation des chefs-d'œuvre les plus significatifs produits par notre civilisation depuis un demi-siècle.

Les différentes manifestations prévues en mai 1952 s'étendront à des domaines divers : musique, théâtre lyrique, peinture, littérature.

En offrant ce panorama d'une ampleur sans précédent, les promoteurs espèrent démontrer que la culture de l'Occident n'a rien perdu de sa force créatrice, de sa diversité et de sa vitalité.

ELLE - PARIS
Elle-Musy — 17 MAR 1952

8 chefs d'orchestre et Stravinsky dirigeront le Festival du XXe siècle

Toutes les grandes œuvres musicales du XXe siècle seront exécutées à Paris, du 30 avril au 1er juin. Pour la première fois, les plus célèbres orchestres du monde seront dirigés au théâtre des Champs-Elysées et à l'Opéra par les « Maîtres ».

Bruno Walter conduira le Don Juan, de Strauss, l'Après-midi d'un faune, de Debussy, interprétés par l'orchestre de l'Opéra ; Charles Münch, la 2e Symphonie, d'Honegger, La Mer, de Debussy, interprétés par l'orchestre symphonique de Boston.

Igor Stravinsky qui n'est pas venu à Paris depuis 13 ans, dirigera son Œdipus Rex, dont Jean Cocteau a écrit le livret et qu'interprétera Patricia Neway qui a créé Le Consul. Parmi les autres grands chefs d'orchestre : Ferenc Friesay, Leopold Stokowski, Igor Markevitch, Pierre Monteux, Benjamin Britten.

A l'Opéra, le grand chorégraphe Balanchine dirigera le New-York City Ballet.

FRANCE-SOIR, PARIS
28 MAR 1952

La bouteille à l'encre

● Une vaste Exposition internationale des Arts aura lieu en mai, à Paris, dans le cadre de l' « Œuvre du XXe siècle ». De nombreux écrivains de tous les pays occidentaux participeront aux débats et conférences qui compléteront le programme comportant des ballets, des concerts (orchestre de Boston, orchestre de Rome, orchestre du Conservatoire de Paris, New-York, City Ballet, etc...) et une soirée Stravinsky au cours de laquelle le compositeur dirigera. Une exposition de peintures consacrées à des chefs-d'œuvre du XXe siècle mal connus du public français fera partie de ces manifestations. Les écrivains participant aux conférences et aux débats auront à répondre à trois questions : 1° Le créateur peut-il utiliser sans se trahir les techniques modernes de communication (presse, radio, télévision, cinéma ? 2° Comment maintenir à la fois les valeurs de révolte et de communion ? 3° Comment choisir entre la libre recherche de l'expression dont les résultats sont chaotiques et la condition servile imposée à l'artiste par les régimes totalitaires ?

Ces débats s'ouvriront à la Sorbonne le 15 mai et seront tenus en français et en anglais.

[272]

NY Times Sun Mar 30/52

SEAT SALE TO OPEN FOR PARIS FESTIVAL

Tickets Available Tomorrow —Importance of Liberty to the Arts to Be Stressed

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, March 29 — Tickets go on sale Monday in the United States, France and other countries for the Twentieth Century Festival of Art to be staged here in May as a demonstration of what man can create when his mind is not subject to totalitarian constraints.

Through music, opera, ballet, painting, drama and philosophy, the Congress of Cultural Freedom, which is sponsoring the festival, will deliver a message on the importance of liberty to artistic creation. Tickets, either free or at reduced prices, will be made available in generous lots to student, youth and labor organizations while the price of tickets for the public will be no higher and sometimes lower than those prevailing for ordinary exhibitions in Paris.

Nicholas Nabokov, secretary general of the Congress of Cultural Freedom, said the festival would be made as popular as possible, but there would be two or three gala events, priced accordingly.

Boston Symphony to Play

The most important event will be the first performance in Europe by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Opera House on May 6, in the presence of President and Mme. Vincent Auriol. Led by its regular conductor, Charles Munch, the orchestra will play works by Samuel Barber, Arthur Honegger, Walter Piston, Debussy and Ravel.

Tickets for all events will be sold in United States through the American Express Company.

The festival will open on April 30 with a concert at St. Roch Church dedicated "to the memory of all victims of oppression in the twentieth century."

The Magnificat of Bach and the Stabat Mater by Francis Poulenc will be performed by the Lamoureux Orchestra of Paris and the St. Guillaume chorus of Strasbourg. The part of the audience will be made up of refugees from Iron Curtain countries as guests.

Thereafter there will be an event almost nightly. The Boston Orchestra will play three times in all. On May 21 it will play a special concert under Pierre Monteux of Berlioz and Tchaikovsky. Members of the free labor unions in France will be guests and the deficit will be made up by the World Federation of Free Trade Unions.

New York Ballet to Perform

For every concert there will be 250 seats set aside for either student labor or youth organizations at 150 to 200 francs (from 43 to 59 cents). The price for the closing concert on June 1 by the Lamoureux Orchestra under Pierre Monteux at the Palais de Chaillot will be a uniform 300 francs (84 cents).

Other organizations include the Vienna State Opera and the Vienna Philharmonic in two performances of Berg's Opera "Wozzeck" on May 2 and 3; the Paris Opera Orchestra led by Bruno Walter on May 5; the New York City Ballet Company in six performances from May 10 to 15; the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande from Geneva led by Ernest Ansermet on May 16 and 17; the French National Radio Orchestra led by Igor Stravinsky in his own works on May 19 and by Hans Rosbaud on May 20.

Also the Paris Conservatory Orchestra directed by Stravinsky on May 22; the Berlin RIAS Orchestra led by Ferenc Fricsay on May 23 and 24; London's Covent Garden Opera in a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera "Billy Budd" on May 27; the orchestra and chorus of the Academy of St. Cecilia of Rome led by Igor Markevitch on May 28 and 29, and American National Theater and Academy in a performance of "Four Saints" in three acts by Virgil Thomson.

During May art lovers will have opportunity to see what will probably be the most extensive exhibition of twentieth century art ever put on. Contributions from Europe and America will be assembled in the Museum of Modern Art.

World Court Oil Case May 6

THE HAGUE, the Netherlands, March 29 (AP) — The International Court of Justice will open oral hearings May 6 on the British-Iranian oil dispute. Britain has charged Iran's nationalization of holdings of the British-owned Anglo-Iranian Oil Company violated international law. The Iranian Government has challenged the court's jurisdiction.

SUD-OUEST
BORDEAUX
7 MAI 1952

REGARDS SUR L'ACTUALITÉ MUSICALE

Le printemps musical parisien

IL était à prévoir que, dans la marée de Festivals internationaux qui va nous assaillir sans répit jusqu'à l'automne, Paris voudrait jouer son rôle et même prendre les devants, puisque c'est lui qui, dès le début de ce mois, inaugure la série avec un programme qui, pendant quatre semaines, ne nous laissera guère de loisirs !

La célébration du cinquantenaire de « Pelléas et Mélisande », chef-d'œuvre que les années laissent intact, et deux magnifiques concerts donnés à l'Opéra, où M. Furtwaengler et l'orchestre de la Philharmonique berlinoise se sont surpassés, ont constitué, en quelque sorte, le digne frontispice de ces manifestations qui honorent l'activité du Congrès de la culture.

Certes, le désir, louable en soi, de nous présenter, fût-ce en raccourci, un tableau de l'activité artistique de la première moitié du XXe siècle, imposait aux organisateurs une lourde tâche, des choix difficiles, fatalement sujets à caution, à discussions. Je ne puis, dans ces brèves notes examiner ici cette question aussi délicate qu'importante, citer les noms de maints grands musiciens, morts ou vivants, passés sous silence, au bénéfice de certains jeunes compositeurs pressés de prendre place au soleil et préférant, parfois à juste titre, tenir que voir venir...

Ceci dit, qui devait être dit, si l'on veut s'élever au-dessus des considérations de chapelle, il y aurait mauvaise grâce à ne pas rendre hommage à l'ampleur de l'effort des animateurs de l' « Œuvre du XXe siècle », et au vif succès de leurs premières soirées.

Ce fut d'abord, à l'église Saint-Roch, dont l'acoustique malheureusement n'est pas parfaite, après une belle exécution du « Magnificat » de Bach, la première audition parisienne du « Stabat Mater » de Francis Poulenc, dont je vous ai parlé lors de sa création au dernier Festival de Strasbourg, et dont la chorale Saint-Guillaume et l'orchestre Lamoureux, sous l'égide sobre et autorisée de M. Fritz Munch, mirent en relief la sensible musicalité.

Puis, au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, l'Opéra de Vienne est venu, avec son orchestre et toute sa troupe, interpréter avec un singulier éclat une des œuvres lyriques les plus représentatives de l'école post-Schoenbergienne, le « Wozzek » d'Alban Berg, dont c'était la première représentation scénique en France.

On peut ne pas aimer « Vozzek », faire des réserves sur les théories et les tendances de l'école qui croit devoir se réclamer de lui, sur le parallèle, à mon sens artificiel, que certains cherchent à établir entre son style dramatique et des formes de musique pure, sur l'atmosphère angoissante qui s'en dégage. L'essentiel n'est-il pas qu'à l'audition la force de suggestion émotive de cette musique soit la plus forte, que cette suite de scènes rapides et haletantes agisse sur l'auditeur, en particulier au dernier acte, avec une intensité que, pour ma part, je ne songe pas à nier, et dont l'assistance entière a subi l'emprise. Tant il est vrai qu'en art, seules comptent, au fond, la puissance communicative de l'invention créatrice et la convenance du langage, quel qu'il soit, au but poursuivi. Mais encore faut-il qu'une œuvre de ce caractère, de cette complexité de réalisation, trouve des traducteurs dignes de leur tâche.

C'est l'honneur de l'Opéra de Vienne que d'avoir, en l'occurrence, comblé nos vœux tant par l'intelligente mise en scène de M. Schuh, que par les décors et costumes de M. Reher, et une distribution vocale d'une parfaite cohésion en tête de laquelle je m'excuse de ne pouvoir citer que l'ardente Christ Goltz et Joseph Herrmann, tour à tour violent, déprimé, désespéré, dans le rôle principal, sans oublier l'excellence de l'exécution orchestrale par l'orchestre de la Philharmonie viennoise et son chef, M. Karl Boehm, qui a depuis longtemps fait les preuves de sa valeur à Dresde et à Vienne.

Je n'ai plus qu'à peine la place de vous signaler le vif attrait du premier concert d'orchestre où le maître de la baguette qu'est M. Bruno Walter et l'orchestre de l'Opéra nous ont fait entendre, avec des réalisations accomplies de « Don Juan » de Richard Strauss, du « Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune » de Debussy, le sensible et prenant « Chant de la terre » de Gustave Mahler, trop peu connu chez nous et dont Mme Elsa Cavelti et M. Fehenberger ont traduit les parties vocales en artistes convaincus et avertis.

Le XIXe siècle, vous le voyez, n'est pas encore mort !

Gustave SAMAZEUILH.

FRANCE-SOIR Mardi 6 Mai 1952

La célèbre romancière américaine ANITA LOOS (qui a adapté «Gigi») est arrivée à Paris où elle va rencontrer Colette

Anita Loos et le célèbre chef d'orchestre Pierre Monteux (à dr.) à leur arrivée à la gare Saint-Lazare par le train transatlantique.
(Lire l'article page 3)

ANITA LOOS PIERRE MONTEUX ET JACQUES PILLS sont à Paris

La romancière américaine Anita Loos, adaptatrice de « Gigi », et le célèbre chef d'orchestre Pierre Monteux sont arrivés ce matin gare Saint-Lazare par le train transatlantique qu'avait également pris Jacques Pills, retour des Amériques, par l'« Ile de France ».

Anita Loos, très brune (elle est l'auteur de « Méfiez-vous des blondes », un best-seller d'outre-Atlantique), petit tailleur gris et chapeau noir, nous a dit, radieuse :

— Je viens naturellement voir Colette. « Gigi » continue à New-York une magnifique carrière avant de faire le tour du monde. On vient, en effet, de traduire en suédois mon adaptation américaine et Colette traduit en français ma traduction américaine. La pièce française sera créée à Paris au mois de décembre.

— Comment les Américains ont-ils réagi devant le personnage de Gigi ?

— Je ne crois pas qu'ils l'aient véritablement compris. Pour eux, c'est une nouvelle Cendrillon.

Anita Loos, qui adapte en ce moment « Le Don d'Adèle », a l'intention de voir à Paris toutes les pièces de théâtre qui s'y jouent.

⁂

Pierre Monteux vient diriger deux concerts du Festival du XXe siècle. Le 8 mai avec l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, le 1er juin avec l'orchestre des concerts Lamoureux. Au cours du concert du 8 mai il dirigera « Le Sacre du printemps », de Stravinsky, qu'il a créé au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées il y a trente-neuf ans.

Il est accompagné de sa femme, sa belle-sœur, qui est la mère de Gary Davis, et de sa chienne Fifi, dont il dit que c'est une petite bête fort littéraire, car son prénom est directement inspiré de Maupassant.

Le visage sévère, mais l'œil rieur, il s'est écrié : « Dites-bien que mes cheveux ne sont pas teints et que j'ai horriblement faim ! »

⁂

Jacques Pills vient de parcourir, en un an, 120.000 kilomètres du nord au sud des deux Amériques en chantant en anglais, français, espagnol ou portugais.

« J'apporte avec moi des tas de chansons nouvelles. Les artistes français continuent à jouir, en Amérique, d'une véritable cote d'apectivement des Etats-Unis, de Suisse, d'Allemagne et d'Autriche, ont présenté des œuvres dodécaphoniques, et toutes ces œuvres : un « Double Concerto pour violon, piano et petit orchestre » de Krenek ; une Sonate pour piano de Liebermann, une Symphonie de Henze, une « Symphonia brevis » de Jelinek, se caractérisent par une spontanéité, une « joie de musiquer » qui repoussent, me semble-t-il, définitivement au néant les considérations plus ou moins tendancieuses sur ce que la musique dodécaphonique aurait de fatalement et uniquement intellectuel, abstrait et, pour tout dire d'un mot, constipé.

A. G.

P. S. D. L. R. :

Mon Cher Goléa,

Avec quel plaisir je publie votre article, qui, lu dans une revue non spécialisée dans l'exégèse et la louange des œuvres de tendance dodécaphonique, va modifier de fond en comble l'attitude du public envers cette musique ! Vous êtes-vous rendu compte vous-même de l'importance de la nouvelle inattendue que vous lui apportiez ? Voyez : des compositeurs venus de tous les coins du monde ont présenté presque exclusivement la musique dodécaphonique, et contrairement à tout ce que nous avions pu constater jusqu'à ce jour, celle-ci, qui jusqu'à présent intéressait fortement les initiés, mais faisait fuir le bon public, lequel s'y ennuyait ferme sans plus même y trouver d'agressivité ou de nouveauté, cette musique, sans exception, est telle que désormais, et définitivement, dites-vous, ennui et répulsion sont réduits au néant ! Vivent donc les compositeurs de Donaueschingen, responsables d'un tel revirement ! Nous attendons d'eux avec impatience une révélation qui bouleversant enfin un état de fait que nous déplorons, fera des mêmes causes jaillir des effets contraires et incitera à nouveau les foules à accourir aux concerts de premières auditions.

Croyez, etc...

Votre ami : J. C.

[illegible] la première fois aux Etats-Unis le Mystère des Saints Innocents de Barraud. Nadia Boulanger, elle aussi, fut invitée à présenter le Requiem de Fauré.

Pierre Monteux fut le premier à révéler aux Américains les Jeux, la Petite Suite et la Fantaisie pour piano de Debussy ; l'Horace Victorieux de Honegger, la Suite n° ; de Milhaud, le Tombeau de Couperin de Ravel, Soir de Fête de Chausson, les Trois Chorals de Kœchlin et le Divertissement de Ropartz. C'est sous sa direction que l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston joua pour la première fois la Valse et les Valses Nobles et Sentimentales de Ravel, la Queste de Dieu de Vincent d'Indy, la Fantaisie Symphonique de Lekeu, la Sinfonia de d'Indy et la Péri de Dukas.

Henri Rabaud ne resta qu'une année à la tête de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, mais néanmoins il eut le temps de présenter la Première Suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé, la Musique de Plein Air de Schmitt, la Suite de Shylock, de Fauré et l'Hymne à la Justice de Magnard.

Karl Muck présenta la seconde suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé, Ma Mère l'Oye de Ravel, les Trois Images et la Mer de Debussy, la Symphonie de Dukas, la Symphonie n° 4 de Ropartz, la Salomé de Schmitt, Wallenstein de d'Indy et la Symphonie de Chausson.

Max Fiedler lui, révéla aux Américains la Suite Fran-

villes d'Europe. C'est lui qui a créé « L'Oiseau de Feu » à Marseille et à Anvers, voici vingt-cinq ans. Qui ne se rappelle ses exécutions grandioses de la Rubens-Cantate de Peter Benoit (avec sept cents exécutants) et les magnifiques Festivals Berlioz, dirigés annuellement avec une flamme et un enthousiasme inégalés. Aujourd'hui, Flor Alpaerts dépose sa baguette après avoir dirigé pendant 32 ans les Concerts Symphoniques de la Société Royale de Zoologie d'Anvers.

Directeur du Conservatoire Royal Flamand de 1933 à 1941, il fut un pédagogue hors ligne, puisant certains éléments didactiques dans la méthode de Dalcroze.

Comme compositeur, Flor Alpaerts a abordé à peu près tous les genres : pièces pour piano - tel cet admirable « Prélude et fugue » -, Quatuors à cordes, musique vocale (Opéra Shylock), musique de scène (Œdipe Roi, la Cloche Engloutie, Danse de Salomé), musique symphonique. A cet égard, citons ses deux chefs-d'œuvre : sa Suite James Ensor (1929), de conception moderniste, qui sera éditée prochainement - et qui a été inspirée par une série de dessins d'Ensor. L'autre œuvre : « Pallieter », traduit les multiples espièglerie du héros de Félix Timmermans. C'est un poème symphonique, évoquant les saisons (le triste hiver excepté), dans lequel Alpaerts donne libre essor à sa verve pétillante de malice.

Flor Alpaerts travaille actuellement à son 5me Quatuor à cordes.

Ryta Néama.

161

LA MUSIQUE FRANÇAISE ET L'ORCHESTRE SYMPHONIQUE DE BOSTON

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, avec ses 104 musiciens, donnera trois concerts à Paris les 6, 8 et 21 Mai dans le cadre de « L'Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle », vaste exposition internationale des arts qui doit se dérouler tout au long du mois de Mai dans notre capitale sous l'égide du Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture. (Pour se plier aux dates de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, la French Line n'a pas hésité à modifier les siennes).

Le concert du 8 Mai aura lieu au Théâtre des Champs Elysées et sera dirigé par Pierre Monteux qui, trente neuf ans auparavant, jour pour jour, dirigeait dans ce même théâtre la première représentation du « Sacre du Printemps » de Strawinsky par les Ballets Russes de Diaghilew.

L'un de ces concerts sera consacré aux œuvres de musiciens français contemporains. Parmi les autres projets de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, citons notamment la Cinquième Symphonie de Honegger, une ouverture d'un compositeur américain, Samuel Barber, et diverses œuvres de Ravel et de Debussy.

Après avoir joué dans le cadre de « L'œuvre du XXme Siècle », l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston ira à Strasbourg, ville natale de Charles Münch, en Hollande, Belgique, Angleterre et en Allemagne où il jouera pour les troupes d'occupation américaines.

La musique française contemporaine a toujours été en faveur auprès des divers chefs d'orchestre qui se succédèrent au pupitre de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston. Il

[27]

SUD-OUEST
BORDEAUX
7 MAI 1952

REGARDS SUR L'ACTUALITÉ MUSICALE

Le printemps musical parisien

Il était à prévoir que, dans la marée de Festivals internationaux qui va nous assaillir sans répit jusqu'à l'automne, Paris voudrait jouer son rôle et même prendre les devants, puisque c'est lui qui, dès le début de ce mois, inaugure la série avec un programme qui, pendant quatre semaines, ne nous laissera guère de loisirs !

La célébration du cinquantenaire de « Pelléas et Mélisande », chef-d'œuvre que les années laissent intact, et deux magnifiques concerts donnés à l'Opéra, où M. Furtwaengler et l'orchestre de la Philharmonique berlinoise se sont surpassés, ont constitué, en quelque sorte, le digne frontispice de ces manifestations qui honorent l'activité du Congrès de la culture.

Certes, le désir, louable en soi, de nous présenter, fût-ce en raccourci, un tableau de l'activité artistique de la première moitié du XXe siècle, imposait aux organisateurs une lourde tâche, des choix difficiles, fatalement sujets à caution, à discussions. Je ne puis, dans ces brèves notes examiner ici cette question aussi délicate qu'importante, citer les noms de maints grands musiciens, morts ou vivants, passés sous silence, au bénéfice de certains jeunes compositeurs pressés de prendre place au soleil et préférant, parfois à juste titre, tenir que voir venir...

Ceci dit, qui devait être dit, si l'on veut s'élever au-dessus des considérations de chapelle, il y aurait mauvaise grâce à ne pas rendre hommage à l'ampleur de l'effort des animateurs de l' « Œuvre du XXe siècle », et au vif succès de leurs premières soirées.

Ce fut d'abord, à l'église Saint-Roch, dont l'acoustique malheureusement n'est pas parfaite, après une belle exécution du « Magnificat » de Bach, la première audition parisienne du « Stabat Mater » de Francis Poulenc, dont je vous ai parlé lors de sa création au dernier Festival de Strasbourg, et dont la chorale Saint-Guillaume et l'orchestre Lamoureux, sous l'égide sobre et autorisée de M. Fritz Munch, mirent en relief la sensible musicalité.

Puis, au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, l'Opéra de Vienne est venu, avec son orchestre et toute sa troupe, interpréter avec un singulier éclat une des œuvres lyriques les plus représentatives de l'école post-Schoenbergienne, le « Wozzek » d'Alban Berg, dont c'était la première représentation scénique en France.

On peut ne pas aimer « Vozzek », faire des réserves sur les théories et les tendances de l'école qui croit devoir se réclamer de lui, sur le parallèle, à mon sens artificiel, que certains cherchent à établir entre son style dramatique et des formes de musique pure, sur l'atmosphère angoissante qui s'en dégage. L'essentiel n'est-il pas qu'à l'audition la force de suggestion émotive de cette musique soit la plus forte, que cette suite de scènes rapides et haletantes agisse sur l'auditeur, en particulier au dernier acte, avec une intensité que, pour ma part, je ne songe pas à nier, et dont l'assistance entière a subi l'emprise. Tant il est vrai qu'en art, seules comptent, au fond, la puissance communicative de l'invention créatrice et la convenance du langage, quel qu'il soit, au but poursuivi. Mais encore faut-il qu'une œuvre de ce caractère, de cette complexité de réalisation, trouve des traducteurs dignes de leur tâche.

C'est l'honneur de l'Opéra de Vienne que d'avoir, en l'occurrence, comblé nos vœux tant par l'intelligente mise en scène de M. Schuh, que par les décors et costumes de M. Reher, et une distribution vocale d'une parfaite cohésion en tête de laquelle je m'excuse de ne pouvoir citer que l'ardente Christ Goltz et Joseph Herrmann, tour à tour violent, déprimé, désespéré, dans le rôle principal, sans oublier l'excellence de l'exécution orchestrale par l'orchestre de la Philharmonie viennoise et son chef, M. Karl Boehm, qui a depuis longtemps fait les preuves de sa valeur à Dresde et à Vienne.

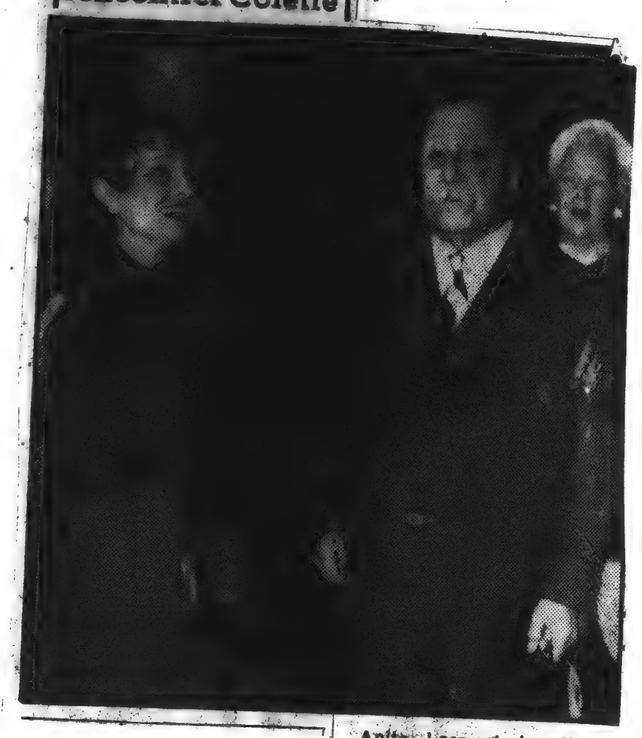
Je n'ai plus qu'à peine la place de vous signaler le vif attrait du premier concert d'orchestre où le maître de la baguette qu'est M. Bruno Walter et l'orchestre de l'Opéra nous ont fait entendre, avec des réalisations accomplies de « Don Juan » de Richard Strauss, du « Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune » de Debussy, le sensible et prenant « Chant de la terre » de Gustave Mahler, trop peu connu chez nous et dont Mme Elsa Cavelti et M. Fehenberger ont traduit les parties vocales en artistes convaincus et avertis.

Le XIXe siècle, vous le voyez, n'est pas encore mort !

Gustave SAMAZEUILH.

FRANCE-SOIR Mardi 6 Mai 1952

La célèbre romancière américaine ANITA LOOS (qui a adapté «Gigi») est arrivée à Paris où elle va rencontrer Colette



Anita Loos et le célèbre chef d'orchestre Pierre Monteux (à dr.) à leur arrivée à la gare Saint-Lazare par le train transatlantique.
(Lire l'article page 3)

ANITA LOOS PIERRE MONTEUX ET JACQUES PILLS sont à Paris

La romancière américaine Anita Loos, adaptatrice de « Gigi », et le célèbre chef d'orchestre Pierre Monteux sont arrivés ce matin gare Saint-Lazare par le train transatlantique qu'avait également pris Jacques Pills, retour des Amériques, par l'« Ile de France ».

Anita Loos, très brune (elle est l'auteur de « Méfiez-vous des blondes », un best-seller d'outre-Atlantique), petit tailleur gris et chapeau noir, nous a dit, radieuse :

— Je viens naturellement voir Colette. « Gigi » continue à New-York une magnifique carrière avant de faire le tour du monde. On vient, en effet, de traduire en suédois mon adaptation américaine et Colette traduit en français ma traduction américaine. La pièce française sera créée à Paris au mois de décembre.

— Comment les Américains ont-ils réagi devant le personnage de Gigi ?

— Je ne crois pas qu'ils l'aient véritablement compris. Pour eux, c'est une nouvelle Cendrillon.

Anita Loos, qui adapte en ce moment « Le Don d'Adèle », a l'intention de voir à Paris toutes les pièces de théâtre qui s'y jouent.

⁂

Pierre Monteux vient diriger deux concerts du Festival du XXe siècle. Le 8 mai avec l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, le 1er juin avec l'orchestre des concerts Lamoureux. Au cours du concert du 8 mai il dirigera « Le Sacre du printemps », de Stravinsky, qu'il a créé au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées il y a trente-neuf ans.

Il est accompagné de sa femme, de sa belle-sœur, qui est la mère de Gary Davis, et de sa chienne Fifi, dont il dit que c'est une petite bête fort littéraire, car son prénom est directement inspiré de Maupassant.

Le visage sévère, mais l'œil rieur, il s'est écrié : « Dites-bien que mes cheveux ne sont pas teints et que j'ai horriblement faim ! »

⁂

Jacques Pills vient de parcourir, en un an, 120.000 kilomètres du nord au sud des deux Amériques en chantant en anglais, français, espagnol ou portugais.

— J'apporte avec moi des tas de choses nouvelles. Les artistes continuent à jouir, en d'une véritable cote d'apectivement des Etats-Unis, de Suisse, d'Allemagne et d'Autriche, ont présenté des œuvres dodécaphoniques, et toutes ces œuvres : un « Double Concerto pour violon, piano et petit orchestre » de Krenek ; une Sonate pour piano de Liebermann, une Symphonie de Henze, une « Symphonia brevis » de Jelinek, se caractérisent par une spontanéité, une « joie de musiquer » qui repoussent, me semble-t-il, définitivement au néant les considérations plus ou moins tendancieuses sur ce que la musique dodécaphonique aurait de fatalement et uniquement intellectuel, abstrait et, pour tout dire d'un mot, constipé.

11

A. G.

P. S. D. L. R. :

Mon Cher Golée,

Avec quel plaisir je publie votre article, qui, lu dans une revue non spécialisée dans l'exégèse et la louange des œuvres de tendance dodécaphonique, va modifier de fond en comble l'attitude du public envers cette musique ! Vous êtes-vous rendu compte vous-même de l'importance de la nouvelle inattendue que vous lui apportiez ? Voyez : des compositeurs venus de tous les coins du monde ont présenté presque exclusivement la musique dodécaphonique, et contrairement à tout ce que nous avions pu constater jusqu'à ce jour, celle-ci, qui jusqu'à présent intéressait fortement les initiés, mais faisait fuir le bon public, lequel s'y ennuyait ferme sans plus même y trouver d'agressivité ou de nouveauté, cette musique, sans exception, est telle que désormais, et définitivement, dites-vous, ennui et répulsion sont réduits au néant ! Vivent donc les compositeurs de Donaueschingen, responsables d'un tel revirement ! Nous attendons d'eux avec impatience une révélation qui bouleversant enfin un état de fait que nous déplorons, fera des mêmes causes jaillir des effets contraires et incitera à nouveau les foules à accourir aux concerts de premières auditions.

Croyez, etc...

Votre ami : J. C.

[illegible] la première fois aux Etats-Unis le Mystère des Saints Innocents de Barraud. Nadia Boulanger, elle aussi, fut invitée à présenter le Requiem de Fauré.

Pierre Monteux fut le premier à révéler aux Américains les Jeux, la Petite Suite et la Fantaisie pour piano de Debussy ; l'Ecrasé Victorieux de Honegger, la Suite n° de Milhaud, le Tombeau de Couperin de Ravel, Soir de Fête de Chausson, les Trois Chorals de Koechlin et le Divertissement de Roparts. C'est sous sa direction que l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston joua pour la première fois la Valse et les Valses Nobles et Sentimentales de Ravel, la Queste de Dieu de Vincent d'Indy, la Fantaisie Symphonique de Lekeu, la Sinfonia de d'Indy et la Péri de Dukas.

Henri Rabaud ne resta qu'une année à la tête de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, mais néanmoins il eut le temps de présenter la Première Suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé, la Musique de Plein Air de Schmitt, la Suite de Shylock, de Fauré et l'Hymne à la Justice de Magnard.

Karl Muck présenta la seconde suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé, Ma Mère l'Oye de Ravel, les Trois Images et la Mer de Debussy, la Symphonie du Dukas, la Symphonie n° 4 de Roparts, la Salomé de Schmitt, Wallenstein de d'Indy et la Symphonie de Chausson.

Max Fiedler lui, révéla aux Américains la Suite Fran-

villes d'Europe. C'est lui qui a créé « L'Oiseau de Feu » à Marseille et à Anvers, voici vingt-cinq ans. Qui ne se rappelle ses exécutions grandioses de la Rubens-Cantate de Peter Benoit (avec sept cents exécutants) et les magnifiques Festivals Berlioz, dirigés annuellement avec une flamme et un enthousiasme inégalés. Aujourd'hui, Flor Alpaerts dépose sa baguette après avoir dirigé pendant 32 ans les Concerts Symphoniques de la Société Royale de Zoologie d'Anvers.

Directeur du Conservatoire Royal Flamand de 1933 à 1941, il fut un pédagogue hors ligne, puisant certains éléments didactiques dans la méthode de Dalcroze.

Comme compositeur, Flor Alpaerts a abordé à peu près tous les genres : pièces pour piano - tel cet admirable « Prélude et fugue » -, Quatuors à cordes, musique vocale (Opéra Shylock), musique de scène (Œdipe Roi, la Cloche Engloutie, Danse de Salomé), musique symphonique. A cet égard, citons ses deux chefs-d'œuvre : sa Suite James Ensor (1929), de conception moderniste, qui sera éditée prochainement - et qui a été inspirée par une série de dessins d'Ensor. L'autre œuvre : « Pallieter », traduit les multiples espièglerie du héros de Félix Timmermans. C'est un poème symphonique, évoquant les saisons (le triste hiver excepté), dans lequel Alpaerts donne libre essor à sa verve pétillante de malice.

Flor Alpaerts travaille actuellement à son 5me Quatuor à cordes.

Ryta Néama.

161

LA MUSIQUE FRANÇAISE ET L'ORCHESTRE SYMPHONIQUE DE BOSTON

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, avec ses 104 musiciens, donnera trois concerts à Paris les 6, 8 et 21 Mai dans le cadre de « L'Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle », vaste exposition internationale des arts qui doit se dérouler tout au long du mois de Mai dans notre capitale sous l'égide du Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture. (Pour se plier aux dates de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, la French Line n'a pas hésité à modifier les siennes).

Le concert du 8 Mai aura lieu au Théâtre des Champs Elysées et sera dirigé par Pierre Monteux qui, trente neuf ans auparavant, jour pour jour, dirigeait dans ce même théâtre la première représentation du « Sacre du Printemps » de Strawinsky par les Ballets Russes de Diaghilew.

L'un de ces concerts sera consacré aux œuvres de musiciens français contemporains. Parmi les autres projets de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, citons notamment la Cinquième Symphonie de Honegger, une ouverture d'un compositeur américain, Samuel Barber, et diverses œuvres de Ravel et de Debussy.

Après avoir joué dans le cadre de « L'œuvre du XXme Siècle », l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston ira à Strasbourg, ville natale de Charles Münch, en Hollande, Belgique, Angleterre et en Allemagne où il jouera pour les troupes d'occupation américaines.

La musique française contemporaine a toujours été en faveur auprès des divers chefs d'orchestre qui se succédèrent au pupitre de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston.

[27]

SUD-OUEST
BORDEAUX
7 MAI 1952

REGARDS SUR L'ACTUALITÉ M

Le printemps musical pa

IL était à prévoir que, dans la marée de Festivals internationaux qui va nous assaillir sans répit jusqu'à l'automne, Paris voudrait jouer son rôle et même prendre les devants, puisque c'est lui qui, dès le début sation, tro

gnes de le
C'est l'
Vienne qu

n'y a rien d'étonnant à cela, Trois de ces chefs d'orchestre étaient eux-mêmes français : Charles Münch qui en est l'actuel directeur artistique, Pierre Monteux qui le resta de 1919 à 1924 et avant lui Henri Rabaud. Quant à Serge Koussewitzky qui dirigea la célèbre formation américaine de 1924 jusqu'à l'arrivée de Münch en 1949, il avait acquis la nationalité française et demeura toute sa vie le champion le plus ardent de la cause de la musique française. Avant eux, Wilhelm Gericke, Mac Fielrler et Karl Muck avaient beau venir d'Europe Centrale, la musique française les intéressait passionnément : ils surent le prouver.

C'est sous la direction de Charles Münch et à Boston que fut jouée pour la première fois la Cinquième Symphonie de Honegger ; Koussewitzky, avait commandé cette œuvre. pour sa propre école de musique.

L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston crée le Quatrième Concerto pour piano de Darius Milhaud et le Concerto pour piano de Francis Poulenc. C'est encore sous la baguette de Münch que furent présentés au public américain la Sonate de Jaubert et le Concerto pour ondes Martenot d'André Jolivet. Ce chef d'orchestre révéla aussi aux Etats-Unis la Jeanne au Bûcher de Honegger et le Requiem de Berlioz. La Symphonie d'Olivier Messiaen, Turangalila, fut créée par l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston sous la direction de Léonard Bernstein, l'un des plus dynamiques musiciens et compositeurs d'Amérique.

En 1930, pour célébrer le cinquième anniversaire de cette illustre formation, Honegger composa à son intention sa Première Symphonie, Milhaud, sa seconde, Roussel sa troisième et Strawinsky sa Symphonie de Psaumes. Par la suite Koussewitzky présenta les quatre première symphonies de Honegger, toutes celles de Roussel et la plupart des œuvres de ce dernier. C'est encore lui qui commanda à Ravel l'orchestration des Tableaux d'une Exposition de Moussorgsky qu'il fit très fréquemment interpréter par son orchestre. C'est toujours lui qui présenta en Amérique la Fantaisie Contrapuntale de Lekeu, la suite Padmavati de Roussel, l'Epiphanie de Caplet, la Sinfonia de Roland Manuel. Et quand il fut invité à diriger l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston par Münch, Koussewitzky lui fit jouer pour la première fois aux Etats-Unis le Mystère des Saints Innocents de Barraud. Nadia Boulanger, elle aussi, fut invitée à présenter le Requiem de Fauré.

Pierre Monteux fut le premier à révéler aux Américains les Jeux, la Petite Suite et la Fantaisie pour piano de Debussy ; l'Hymne Victorieux de Honegger, la Suite n° 2 de Milhaud, le Tombeau de Couperin de Ravel, Soir de Fête de Chausson, les Trois Chorals de Koechlin et le Divertissement de Ropartz. C'est sous sa direction que l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston joua pour la première fois la Valse et les Valses Nobles et Sentimentales de Ravel, la Queste de Dieu de Vincent d'Indy, la Fantaisie Symphonique de Lekeu, la Sinfonia de d'Indy et la Péri de Dukas.

Henri Rabaud ne resta qu'une année à la tête de l'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, mais néanmoins il eut le temps de présenter la Première Suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé, la Musique de Plein Air de Schmitt, la Suite de Skyloek, de Fauré et l'Hymne à la Justice de Magnard.

Karl Muck présenta la seconde suite extraite de Daphnis et Chloé, Ma Mère l'Oye de Ravel, les Trois Images et la Mer de Debussy, la Symphonie de Dukas, la Symphonie n° 4 de Ropartz, la Salomé de Schmitt, Wallenstein de d'Indy et la Symphonie de Chausson.

Max Fiedler lui, révéla aux Américains la Suite Fran- çaise de Roger Ducasse et la Pièce Symphonique extraite de la Rédemption de César Franck.

Wilhelm Gericke, au début du siècle, fit jouer par l'Orchestre de Boston pour la première fois les deux premières symphonies de Vincent d'Indy, la première symphonie de Saint-Saëns, la Fantaisie de Ropartz, Viviane de Chausson et l'Apprenti Sorcier de Dukas.

Mentionnons enfin, qu'à cette époque, le célèbre hautboïste Georges Longy dirigeait une formation qui fut la première à jouer aux Etats-Unis l'Après-Midi d'un Faune de Debussy.

P. S. - En dernière minute, nous apprenons la mort de Serge Koussewitzky, fondateur de l'orchestre de Boston et l'un des animateurs les plus considérables de notre siècle musical. C'est une perte qui sera malheureusement ressentie par tous les amis de la musique.

Œuvres Nouvelles

(AUDITION et EDITION)

★

LE BUISSON ARDENT, de Charles Koechlin.

5 Mai 1952

Anita Loos et le célèbre chef d'orchestre Pierre Monteux (à dr.) à leur arrivée à la gare Saint-Lazare par le train transatlantique.
(Lire l'article page 3)

ANITA LOOS PIERRE MONTEUX ET JACQUES PILLS sont à Paris

La romancière américaine Anita Loos, adaptatrice de « Gigi », et le célèbre chef d'orchestre Pierre Monteux sont arrivés ce matin gare Saint-Lazare par le train transatlantique qu'avait également pris Jacques Pills, retour des Amériques, par l'« Ile de France ».

Anita Loos, très brune (elle est l'auteur de « Méfiez-vous des blondes », un best-seller d'outre-Atlantique), petit tailleur gris et chapeau noir, nous a dit, radieuse :

— Je viens naturellement voir Colette. « Gigi » continue à New-York une magnifique carrière avant de faire le tour du monde. On vient, en effet, de traduire en suédois mon adaptation américaine et Colette traduit en français ma traduction américaine. La pièce française sera créée à Paris au mois de décembre.

— Comment les Américains ont-ils réagi devant le personnage de Gigi ?

— Je ne crois pas qu'ils l'aient véritablement compris. Pour eux, c'est une nouvelle Cendrillon.

Anita Loos, qui adapte en ce moment « Le Don d'Adèle », a l'intention de voir à Paris toutes les pièces de théâtre qui s'y jouent.

⁂

Pierre Monteux vient diriger deux concerts du Festival du XX[e] siècle. Le 8 mai avec l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, le 1er juin avec l'orchestre des concerts Lamoureux. Au cours du concert du 8 mai il dirigera « Le Sacre du printemps », de Stravinsky, qu'il a créé au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées il y a trente-neuf ans.

Il est accompagné de sa femme, de sa belle-sœur, qui est la mère de Gary Davis, et de sa chienne Fifi, dont il dit que c'est une petite bête fort littéraire, car son prénom est directement inspiré de Maupassant.

Le visage sévère, mais l'œil rieur, il s'est écrié : « Dites-bien que mes cheveux ne sont pas teints et que j'ai horriblement faim ! »

⁂

Jacques Pills vient de parcourir, en un an, 120.000 kilomètres du nord au sud des deux Amériques en chantant en anglais, français, espagnol ou portugais.

— J'apporte avec moi des tas de chansons nouvelles. Les artistes français continuent à jouir, en Amérique, d'une véritable cote d'a-

[27]

L'AURORE, Mardi 6 mai 1952

LES CONCERTS

BRUNO WALTER

Conviés à une de ces répétitions « privées » qui sont privées d'agrément et pour lesquelles les fauteuils d'orchestre et les loges de corbeille inspectées à tout occupant servent sans doute à figurer un « no man's land », nous avons été d'abord priés par Bruno Walter de ne pas apprécier son concert sur l'audition qui allait nous être donnée, puis avertis une heure après que nous pourrions en besoin revenir le soir au concert public. C'est donc qu'on peut nous y recevoir ?

La cause de ce trouble était, en dernière heure, la substitution de deux interprètes nouveaux, dont Mme Elsa Calveti, à ceux précédemment affichés dans le cycle de six poèmes qui forme le Chant de la terre de Gustav Mahler. Inspirés de la poétique d'Extrême-Orient sans en traduire l'exotisme, ils chantent la mélancolie des adieux après la douceur de la jeunesse, et savoir qu'ils sont la dernière œuvre composée par le grand musicien autrichien ajoute une note émouvante à leurs accents.

A la tête de l'orchestre de l'Opéra, Bruno Walter a donné de l'Après-midi d'un faune une exécution raffinée et du Don Juan de Strauss une interprétation éblouissante attestant une fois de plus le merveilleux pouvoir de ce chef incomparable.

P. L.

Pierre Monteux à Paris

Venant de New-York à bord de l' « Ile-de-France », le chef d'orchestre Pierre Monteux est arrivé ce matin à Paris où il a été accueilli par M. Charles Judd, administrateur du Boston Symphonic Orchestra, et par diverses personnalités du monde musical.

Le célèbre chef d'orchestre français participera à « l'Œuvre du XX^e siècle » en dirigeant le Boston Symphonic Orchestra, dont il fut longtemps le chef, et qui est dirigé maintenant par Charles Munch, il conduira notamment l'œuvre du compositeur Igor Stravinski, « Le Sacre du Printemps», » qu'il créa il y a trente-neuf ans.

LA DÉPÊCHE DU MIDI
TOULOUSE

6 MAI 1952

Le « Boston Symphonic Orchestra » est à Paris

Paris — Venant de New-York à bord du paquebot « Ile-de-France », quatre - vingt-cinq musiciens du « Boston Symphonic Orchestra » sont arrivés dimanche à Paris, où ils ont rejoint leurs vingt-deux camarades de la même formation qui les y avaient précédés de quelques jours.

Ainsi complété, cet orchestre de cent sept exécutants donnera, dans le cadre de « l'œuvre du vingtième siècle », deux concerts symphoniques, l'un le 6 mai, à l'Opéra, sous la direction de son chef actuel, M. Charles Munch, le second le 8 mai, au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous la baguette de son ancien chef, M. Pierre Monteux.

Le président de la République et Mme Vincent Auriol, le ministre des affaires étrangères, ainsi que l'ambassadeur des Etats-Unis et Mme James C. Dunn, doivent assister au concert d'aujourd'hui qui sera suivi d'une réception par le ministre de l'éducation nationale et la direction de l'Opéra en l'honneur de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston.

D'autre part, M. Pierre Monteux et ce même orchestre seront, le 8 mai à midi, au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, l'objet d'une réception par l'ensemble des musiciens de l'orchestre de la Radiodiffusion française.

LA DÉPÊCHE DU MIDI
TOULOUSE

7 MAI 1952

Le président Auriol a assisté au premier concert en Europe de l'orchestre de Boston

Paris. — Arrivé lundi, à Paris, pour participer au festival de « l'œuvre du vingtième siècle », dont il est une des principales attractions, le fameux orchestre symphonique de Boston a donné, hier soir, son premier concert en Europe, sous la direction de M. Charles Munch.

Le président de la République et Mme Vincent Auriol assistaient à ce concert de gala, donné au théâtre de l'Opéra, ainsi que M. Robert Schuman, ministre des affaires étrangères, l'ambassadeur des Etats-Unis et Mme James C. Dunn, et de nombreuses autres personnalités.

Vingt-trois des cent quatre musiciens du « Boston Symphony » sont d'origine française et Charles Munch a longtemps présidé la Société des concerts du Conservatoire avant de prendre une place prépondérante dans le monde musical américain.

Au programme figuraient deux œuvres de jeunes compositeurs d'outre-Atlantique, l'ouverture de « The School For Scandal », de Samuel Barber, et la « Toccata », de Walter Piston.

La deuxième symphonie d'Arthur Honegger formait une sorte de trait d'union entre ces pièces peu connues en France et deux compositions familières : « La Mer », de Claude Debussy, et « Daphnis et Chloé », de Maurice Ravel. Le dernier mouvement de « Daphnis » a dû être bissé, au bout de dix rappels.

Le président se penchait hors de sa loge pour applaudir.

LE SOIR
Bruxelles

8 MAI 1952

AU PALAIS DE BRUXELLES

Le Roi offrira, vendredi, au Palais de Bruxelles, un déjeuner en l'honneur des membres de l'Académie française en visite officielle à Bruxelles.

Assisteront à ce déjeuner, outre les académiciens français, des membres du gouvernement, l'ambassadeur de Belgique à Paris, le chargé d'affaires de France à Bruxelles et des représentants des Académies belges de lettres de langue française et flamande.

LE ROI AUX BEAUX-ARTS

Le Roi assistera au concert donné le 12 mai, par l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, au Palais des Beaux-Arts.

75e ANNIVERSAIRE :

de la Société Easy U. S. A., fabriquant les lessiveuses-essoreuses de réputation mondiale. Si vous ne possédez pas cette merveille, demandez démonstration à nos distributeurs.

Le Maine Libre
LE MANS

8 MAI 1952

Charles Munch et le Boston Symphony Orchestra à l'Opéra

Paris. — Poursuivant la série de ses manifestations musicales, « L'œuvre du XX^e siècle » a donné son premier gala qui s'est déroulé à l'Opéra en présence du président de la République et de Mme Vincent Auriol, ainsi que de nombreuses personnalités du monde diplomatique, politique et artistique.

Charles Munch, retour des Etats-Unis, dirigeait le Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Ce fut une minute particulièrement émouvante lorsque après l'exécution de la Deuxième symphonie d'Arthur Honnegger, sous le tonnerre des applaudissements, Charles Munch désigna d'un geste large Arthur Honnegger, qui était assis au premier rang du balcon et qui se leva, désignant à son tour Charles Munch. Le compositeur et le chef d'orchestre se renvoyaient l'un à l'autre l'ovation grandissante qui montait de la salle et qui s'adressait en même temps qu'à eux deux, au merveilleux orchestre américain.

f Associated Press Release

paris - le triomphe de strawinsky 2

l'assourdissante tempête d'applaudissements qui a suivi le "sacre" a duré dix bonnes minutes. désigné aux recherches par des éclairs de magnesium, l'illustre compositeur, dans sa loge, a répondu aux acclamations par de grands gestes des deux bras avant de gagner les coulisses et la scène, où il a serré la main au chef et à plusieurs musiciens.

et comme le public réclamait un bis, pierre monteux a pris la parole.

"je vous donne, dit-il, rendez-vous dans trente neuf ans."

t/cvd

(ap)

f

le triomphe de strawinsky

"l'oeuvre du XX" siècle": pierre monteux et l'orchestre symphonique de boston

137

paris, 8 mai (ap) alibi

le chef d'orchestre pierre monteux, qui dirigea en mai 1913 la première audition du "sacre du printemps" d'igor strawinsky, au théâtre des champs-elysées qui venait alors tout fraîchement d'inaugurer, a donné ce soir la même oeuvre, dans la même salle, avec l'orchestre symphonique de boston.

la première du "sacre" avait provoqué une véritable émeute, qui marque dans les annales de la musique. trente-neuf ans plus tard, la même oeuvre n'a soulevé qu'une interminable ovation, adressée non seulement au compositeur, mais au chef d'orchestre âgé maintenant de 78 ans et à l'ensemble symphonique américain dont c'était le second concert en europe.

le "boston symphony", l'une des principales attractions de "l'oeuvre du XXe siècle", le premier festival de musique organisé à paris, a également exécuté ce soir une symphonie du compositeur américain william schuman, ainsi que la deuxième suite du ballet "protée", de darius milhaud, et une fantaisie du Xe compositeur anglais ralph vaughan williams.

[illegible]

LA MONTAGNE
CLERMONT-FERRAND

8 MAI 1952

LE « BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA » A L'OPERA

Poursuivant la série de ses manifestations musicales, « L'Œuvre du XX^e Siècle » a donné son premier gala qui s'est déroulé à l'Opéra en présence du président de la République et de Mme Vincent Auriol, ainsi que de nombreuses personnalités du monde diplomatique, politique et artistique. Charles Munch, retour des Etats-Unis, dirigeait le « Boston Orchestra ».

Ce fut une minute particulièrement émouvante lorsqu'après l'exécution de la Deuxième Symphonie d'Arthur Honneger, sous le tonnerre des applaudissements, Charles Munch désigna d'un geste large Arthur Honneger qui était assis au premier rang du balcon et qui se leva, désignant à son tour Charles Munch.

Le compositeur et le chef d'orchestre se renvoyaient l'un à l'autre l'ovation grandissante qui montait de la salle et qui s'adressait en même temps qu'à eux deux, au merveilleux orchestre américain.

L'AURORE, Mardi 6 mai 1952

LES CONCERTS
BRUNO WALTER

Conviés à une de ces répétitions « privées » qui sont privées d'agrément et pour lesquelles les fauteuils d'orchestre et les loges de corbeille interdites à tout occupant servent sans doute à figurer un « no man's land », nous avons été d'abord priés par Bruno Walter de ne pas apprécier son concert sur l'audition qui allait nous être donnée, puis avertis une heure après que nous pourrions au besoin revenir le soir au concert public. C'est donc qu'on peut nous y recevoir ?

La cause de ce trouble était, en dernière heure, la substitution de deux interprètes nouveaux, dont Mme Elsa Calvetti, à ceux précédemment affichés dans le cycle de six poèmes qui forme le Chant de la terre de Gustav Mahler. Inspirés de la poétique d'Extrême-Orient sans en reproduire l'exotisme, ils chantent la mélancolie des adieux après la douceur de la jeunesse, et savoir qu'ils sont la dernière œuvre composée par le grand musicien autrichien ajoute une note émouvante à leurs accents.

A la tête de l'orchestre de l'Opéra, Bruno Walter a donné de l'Après-midi d'un faune une exécution raffinée et du Don Juan de Strauss une interprétation éblouissante attestant une fois de plus le merveilleux pouvoir de ce chef incomparable.

P. L.

Pierre Monteux à Paris

Venant de New-York à bord de l' « Ile-de-France », le chef d'orchestre Pierre Monteux est arrivé ce matin à Paris où il a été accueilli par M. Charles Judd, administrateur du Boston Symphonic Orchestra, et par diverses personnalités du monde musical.

Le célèbre chef d'orchestre français participera à « l'Œuvre du XX^e^ siècle » en dirigeant le Boston Symphonic Orchestra, dont il fut longtemps le chef, et qui est dirigé maintenant par Charles Munch, il conduira notamment l'œuvre du compositeur Igor Stravinski, « Le Sacre du Printemps », qu'il créa il y a trente-neuf ans.

LA DÉPÊCHE DU MIDI
TOULOUSE

6 MAI 1952

Le « Boston Symphonic Orchestra » est à Paris

Culture

Paris. — Venant de New-York à bord du paquebot « Ile-de-France », quatre-vingt-cinq musiciens du « Boston Symphonic Orchestra » sont arrivés dimanche à Paris, où ils ont rejoint leurs vingt-deux camarades de la même formation qui les y avaient précédés de quelques jours.

Ainsi complété, cet orchestre de cent sept exécutants donnera, dans le cadre de « l'œuvre du vingtième siècle », deux concerts symphoniques, l'un le 6 mai, à l'Opéra, sous la direction de son chef actuel, M. Charles Munch, le second le 8 mai, au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, sous la baguette de son ancien chef, M. Pierre Monteux.

Le président de la République et Mme Vincent Auriol, le ministre des affaires étrangères, ainsi que l'ambassadeur des Etats-Unis et Mme James C. Dunn, doivent assister au concert d'aujourd'hui qui sera suivi d'une réception par le ministre de l'éducation nationale et la direction de l'Opéra en l'honneur de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston.

D'autre part, M. Pierre Monteux et ce même orchestre seront, le 8 mai, à midi, au théâtre des Champs-Elysées, l'objet d'une réception par l'ensemble des musiciens de l'orchestre de la Radiodiffusion française.

LA DÉPÊCHE DU MIDI
TOULOUSE

7 MAI 1952

Le président Auriol a assisté au premier concert en Europe de l'orchestre de Boston

Culture

Paris. — Arrivé lundi, à Paris, pour participer au festival de « l'œuvre du vingtième siècle », dont il est une des principales attractions, le fameux orchestre symphonique de Boston a donné, hier soir, son premier concert en Europe, sous la direction de M. Charles Munch.

Le président de la République et Mme Vincent Auriol assistaient à ce concert de gala, donné au théâtre de l'Opéra, ainsi que M. Robert Schuman, ministre des affaires étrangères, l'ambassadeur des Etats-Unis et Mme James C. Dunn, et de nombreuses autres personnalités.

Vingt-trois des cent quatre musiciens du « Boston Symphony » sont d'origine française et Charles Munch a longtemps présidé la Société des concerts du Conservatoire avant de prendre une place prépondérante dans le monde musical américain.

Au programme figuraient deux œuvres de jeunes compositeurs d'outre-Atlantique, l'ouverture de « The School For Scandal », de Samuel Barber, et la « Toccata », de Walter Piston.

La deuxième symphonie d'Arthur Honegger formait une sorte de trait d'union entre ces pièces peu connues en France et deux compositions familières : « La Mer », de Claude Debussy, et « Daphnis et Chloé », de Maurice Ravel. Le dernier mouvement de « Daphnis » a dû être bissé, au bout de dix rappels.

Le président se penchait hors de sa loge pour applaudir.

LE SOIR
Bruxelles

8 MAI 1952

AU PALAIS DE BRUXELLES

Le Roi offrira, vendredi, au Palais de Bruxelles, un déjeuner en l'honneur des membres de l'Académie française en visite officielle à Bruxelles.

Assisteront à ce déjeuner, outre les académiciens français, des membres du gouvernement, l'ambassadeur de Belgique à Paris, le chargé d'affaires de France à Bruxelles et les représentants des Académies belges de lettres de langue française et flamande.

Culture

LE ROI AUX BEAUX-ARTS

Le Roi assistera au concert donné le 12 mai, par l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, au Palais des Beaux-Arts.

75e ANNIVERSAIRE:

de la Société Easy U. S. A., fabriquant les lessiveuses-essoreuses de réputation mondiale. Si vous ne possédez pas cette merveille, demandez démonstration à nos distributeurs.

Le Maine Libre
LE MANS

8 MAI 1952

Charles Munch et le Boston Symphony Orchestra à l'Opéra

Culture

Paris. — Poursuivant la série de ses manifestations musicales, « L'Œuvre du XX^e^ siècle » a donné son premier gala qui s'est déroulé à l'Opéra en présence du président de la République et de Mme Vincent Auriol, ainsi que de nombreuses personnalités du monde diplomatique, politique et artistique.

Charles Munch, retour des Etats-Unis, dirigeait le Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Ce fut une minute particulièrement émouvante lorsque après l'exécution de la Deuxième symphonie d'Arthur Honnegger, sous le tonnerre des applaudissements, Charles Munch désigna d'un geste large Arthur Honnegger, qui était assis au premier rang du balcon et qui se leva, désignant à son tour Charles Munch. Le compositeur et le chef d'orchestre se renvoyaient l'un à l'autre l'ovation grandissante qui montait de la salle et qui s'adressait en même temps qu'à eux deux, au merveilleux orchestre américain.

LA MONTAGNE
CLERMONT FERRAND

8 MAI 1952

LE « BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA » A L'OPERA

Poursuivant la série de ses manifestations musicales, « L'Œuvre du XX^e^ Siècle » a donné son premier gala qui s'est déroulé à l'Opéra en présence du président de la République et de Mme Vincent Auriol, ainsi que de nombreuses personnalités du monde diplomatique, politique et artistique. Charles Munch, retour des Etats-Unis, dirigeait le « Boston Orchestra ».

Culture

Ce fut une minute particulièrement émouvante lorsqu'après l'exécution de la Deuxième Symphonie d'Arthur Honneger, sous le tonnerre des applaudissements, Charles Munch désigna d'un geste large Arthur Honneger qui était assis au premier rang du balcon et qui se leva, désignant à son tour Charles Munch.

Le compositeur et le chef d'orchestre se renvoyaient l'un à l'autre l'ovation grandissante qui montait de la salle et qui s'adressait en même temps qu'à eux deux, au merveilleux orchestre américain.

f_____ Associated Press Release

paris - le triomphe de strawinsky 2

l'assourdissante tempête d'applaudissements qui a suivi le "sacre" a duré dix bonnes minutes. désigné aux recherches par des éclairs de magnesium, l'illustre compositeur, dans sa loge, a répondu aux acclamations par de grands gestes des deux bras avant de gagner les coulisses et la scène, où il a serré la main au chef et à plusieurs musiciens.

et comme le public réclamait un bis, pierre monteux a pris la parole.

"je vous donne, dit-il, rendez-vous dans trente neuf ans."

t/cvd

(ap)

f_____

le triomphe de strawinsky

137

"l'oeuvre du XX" siècle": pierre monteux et l'orchestre symphonique de boston

paris, 8 mai (ap)

le chef d'orchestre pierre monteux, qui dirigea en mai 1913 la première audition du "sacre du printemps" d'igor strawinsky, au théâtre des champs-elysées, a donné ce soir la même oeuvre, dans la même salle, avec l'orchestre symphonique de boston.

la "première" du "sacre" avait provoqué une véritable émeute, qui marque dans les annales de la musique. trente-neuf ans plus tard, la même oeuvre n'a soulevé qu'une interminable ovation, adressée non seulement au compositeur, mais au chef d'orchestre âgé maintenant de 78 ans et à l'ensemble symphonique américain dont c'était le second concert en europe.

le "boston symphony", l'une des principales attractions de "l'oeuvre du XXe siècle", le premier festival de musique organisé à paris, a également exécuté ce soir une symphonie des compositeurs américains william schuman, et la deuxième suite de "protée", de darius milhaud, et une fantaisie du Mr compositeur anglais ralph vaughan williams.

[274]

Süddeutsche Zeitung München — 9. MAI 1952

Demonstration westlicher Kunst

Europa und Amerika zeigen in Paris ihre besten Werke des Jahrhunderts

Aus Anlaß des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit, der im Mai in Paris zusammentritt, findet dort eine Ausstellung „Meisterwerke des 20. Jahrhunderts" statt. Diese Ausstellung zeigt nicht allein Werke der bildenden Kunst; in ihr sollen alle Hervorbringungen umfassend dargestellt werden. Literatur, Musik, Theater, Tanz, Film und angewandte Künste — all dies ist in seinen besten Werken vertreten. Dem Kongreß ist eine politische Mission aufgetragen: er soll die Verdächtigungen widerlegen, daß die westliche Kunst dekatent, formalistisch und unproduktiv sei. Die Opposition gegen die totalitäre Kontrolle der schöpferischen Leistungen des einzelnen führt die bedeutendsten Künstler Europas und Amerikas zu diesem Kongreß zusammen. Alban Bergs Oper „Wozzeck" gehört wie Strawinskys „Oedipus Rex" und „Orpheus" zu jenen Werken, die den Stil des 20. Jahrhunderts prägten. Namhafte Geister aus aller Welt begegnen sich. (Photos Flachenecker)

ZWEI DER GRÖSSTEN des 20. Jahrhunderts, die Komponisten Richard Strauß und Igor Strawinsky, schufen die Musik zu den Balletten, welche das unter der Leitung von George Balanchine stehende „New York City Ballet" in Paris zeigen wird. Oben: aus „Till Eulenspiegel", Boss: „Der Kalig"

DREI MEISTER-DIRIGENTEN, deren Namen eng mit dem berühmten „Boston Symphonie-Orchester" verbunden sind: Serge Koussewitsky † (Mitte), Pierre Monteux (links), Charles Münch (rechts). Außer diesen beiden dirigieren in Paris Bruno Walter, Ernest Ansermet und Hans Rosbaud.

VIER BALLERINEN proben intensiv vor ihrer Abreise nach Paris im New Yorker Central-Park, um den hohen internationalen Ansprüchen dort zu genügen

SECHS FIGURINEN zu dem Ballett „Orpheus" von Igor Strawinsky (Entwurf von Isamu Noguchi. Mit Orpheus — 1947 vollendet, 1948 in New York uraufgeführt, 1949 von der Bayer. Staatsoper zum ersten Male [illegible] land gebracht. Im Vordergrund Monika Berg als Strawinsky selbst dirigiert

[275]

Paris-presse-l'intransigeant 8-5-1952

L'Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle débute par un « incident technique »

Décidément, notre radio n'a pas de chance. Elle annonce à grand fracas — et à juste titre — sa transmission en direct du premier concert en Europe de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, dirigé par Charles Munch. Et un « incident technique » nous prive du premier quart d'heure de ce concert. Elle a multiplié ses excuses sur « un fâcheux concours de circonstances qui... » Il est des cas où aucune excuse n'est tolérable.

Admirons au passage la coordination des programmes. Depuis des semaines, ce concert inaugurant à Paris « l'Œuvre du XX^e siècle » est prévu. Il n'empêche que ce même mardi soir la chaine parisienne donne un concert de la garde républicaine et Paris-Inter fait entendre l'orchestre de chambre de Radio-Lausanne !

Daily Telegraph & Morning Post, Wednesday, May 7, 1952

ANTI-COMMUNIST ART EXHIBITION

OPENING IN PARIS

From Our Own Correspondent

PARIS, Tuesday.

An exhibition of modern art covering all aspects of painting from Renoir to Dali opened here to-day. The exhibition of 125 pictures, which is sponsored by the anti-Communist Congress for Cultural Freedom, will be transferred to the Tate Gallery in London in July.

Chosen by Mr. J. J. Sweeney, director of the New York Museum of Modern Art, the most notable of the pictures are Picasso's "La Repasseuse" (Woman Ironing), last seen here in 1908, a Matisse which has never been exhibited before, a Chagall of 1912, and an unusual still life by Cézanne on loan from the United States Government.

Marcel Duchamp's famous "Nude descending a staircase," which caused a scandal in 1912, will be on view.

Boston Orchestra

The Congress has also brought the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Europe for the first time. It will play at the Royal Festival Hall, London, on May 26. Broadcasts of its concerts will be made to Iron Curtain countries.

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, MAY 8, 1952

Boston Symphony Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its second performance in Paris at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées tonight at 9. Pierre Monteux will conduct the "Masterpieces of the 20th Century" program. The Boston Symphony will present Willem Pyper's Symphony No. 3, Darius Milhaud's "Protée," Suite No. 2, William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, and Igor Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring."

LA FRANCE DE MARS ET DU SUD EST MARSEILLE

8 MAI 1952

CHARLES MUNCH et le Boston Symphony Orchestra à l'Opéra de Paris

PARIS. — Poursuivant la serie de ses manifestations musicales, « l'Œuvre du XXe siècle » a donné son premier gala qui s'est déroulé à l'Opéra en présence du président de la République et de Mme Vincent Auriol, ainsi que de nombreuses personnalités du monde diplomatique, politique et artistique.

Charles Munch retour des Etats-Unis, dirigeait le Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Ce fut une minute particulièrement émouvante lorsqu'après l'exécution de la « Deuxième symphonie » d'Arthur Honneger, sous le tonnerre des applaudissements, Charles Munch désigna d'un geste large Arthur Honneger qui était assis au premier rang du balcon et qui se leva, désignant à son tour Charles Munch. Le compositeur et le chef d'orchestre se renvoyaient l'un à l'autre l'ovation grandissante qui montait de la salle et qui s'adressait en même temps qu'à eux deux, au merveilleux orchestre américain.

Süddeutsche Zeitung München — 8. MAI 1952

Demonstration westlicher Kunst

Europa und Amerika zeigen in Paris ihre besten Werke des Jahrhunderts

Aus Anlaß des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit, der im Mai in Paris zusammentritt, findet dort eine Ausstellung „Meisterwerke des 20. Jahrhunderts" statt. Diese Ausstellung zeigt nicht allein Werke der bildenden Kunst; in ihr sollen alle Hervorbringungen umfassend dargestellt werden. Literatur, Musik, Theater, Tanz, Film und angewandte Künste — all dies ist in seinen besten Werken vertreten. Dem Kongreß ist eine politische Mission aufgetragen: er soll die Verdächtigungen widerlegen, daß die westliche Kunst dekatent, formalistisch und unproduktiv sei. Die Opposition gegen die totalitäre Kontrolle der schöpferischen Leistungen des einzelnen führt die bedeutendsten Künstler Europas und Amerikas zu diesem Kongreß zusammen. Alban Bergs Oper „Wozzeck" gehört wie Strawinskys „Oedipus Rex" und „Orpheus" zu jenen Werken, die den Stil des 20. Jahrhunderts prägten. Namhafte Geister aus aller Welt begegnen sich. (Photos Flachenecker)

ZWEI DER GRÖSSTEN des 20. Jahrhunderts, die Komponisten Richard Strauß und Igor Strawinsky, schufen die Musik zu den Balletten, welche das unter der Leitung von George Balanchine stehende „New York City Ballet" in Paris zeigen wird. Oben: aus „Till Eulenspiegel", links: „Der Käfig".

DREI MEISTER-DIRIGENTEN, deren Namen eng mit dem berühmten „Boston Symphonie-Orchester" verbunden sind: Serge Koussewitsky † (Mitte), Pierre Monteux (links), Charles Münch (rechts). Außer diesen beiden dirigieren in Paris Bruno Walter, Ernest Ansermet und Hans Rosbaud.

VIER BALLERINEN proben intensiv vor ihrer Abreise nach Paris im New Yorker Central-Park, um den hohen internationalen Ansprüchen dort zu genügen.

SECHS FIGURINEN zu dem Ballett „Orpheus" von Igor Strawinsky, entworfen von Isamu Noguchi. Mit Orpheus — 1947 vollendet, 1948 in New York uraufgeführt, 1949 von der Bayer. Staatsoper zum ersten Male nach Deutschland gebracht, im Vorjahr in München von Strawinsky selbst dirigiert — hat der Meister eine neue Klassik begründet. Der alte Sagenstoff von Orpheus und Eurydike wurde [illegible]

[275]

Paris-presse-l'intransigeant 8-5-1952

L'Œuvre du Vingtième Siècle débute par un « incident technique »

Décidément, notre radio n'a pas de chance. Elle annonce à grand fracas — et à juste titre — sa transmission en direct du premier concert en Europe de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, dirigé par Charles Munch. Et un « incident technique » nous prive du premier quart d'heure de ce concert. Elle a multiplié ses excuses sur « un fâcheux concours de circonstances qui... » Il est des cas où aucune excuse n'est tolérable.

Admirons au passage la coordination des programmes. Depuis des semaines, ce concert inaugurant à Paris « l'Œuvre du XXe siècle » est prévu. Il n'empêche que ce même mardi soir la chaine parisienne donne un concert de la garde républicaine et Paris-Inter fait entendre l'orchestre de chambre de Radio-Lausanne !

Daily Telegraph & Morning Post, Wednesday, May 7, 1952

ANTI-COMMUNIST ART EXHIBITION

OPENING IN PARIS

From Our Own Correspondent

PARIS, Tuesday.

An exhibition of modern art covering all aspects of painting from Renoir to Dali opened here to-day. The exhibition of 125 pictures, which is sponsored by the anti-Communist Congress for Cultural Freedom, will be transferred to the Tate Gallery in London in July.

Chosen by Mr. J. J. Sweeney, director of the New York Museum of Modern Art, the most notable of the pictures are Picasso's "La Repasseuse" (Woman Ironing), last seen here in 1908, a Matisse which has never been exhibited before, a Chagall of 1912, and an unusual still life by Cézanne on loan from the United States Government.

Marcel Duchamp's famous "Nude descending a staircase," which caused a scandal in 1912, will be on view.

Boston Orchestra

The Congress has also brought the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Europe for the first time. It will play at the Royal Festival Hall, London, on May 26. Broadcasts of its concerts will be made to Iron Curtain countries.

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, MAY 8, 1952

Boston Symphony Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its second performance in Paris at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées tonight at 9. Pierre Monteux will conduct the "Masterpieces of the 20th Century" program. The Boston Symphony will present Willem Pyper's Symphony No. 3, Darius Milhaud's "Protée," Suite No. 2, William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, and Igor Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring."

LA FRANCE DE MARS... ET DU SUD EST
MARSEILLE
8 MAI 1952

CHARLES MUNCH et le Boston Symphony Orchestra à l'Opéra de Paris

PARIS. — Poursuivant la série de ses manifestations musicales, « l'Œuvre du XXe siècle » a donné son premier gala qui s'est déroulé à l'Opéra en présence du président de la République et de Mme Vincent Auriol, ainsi que de nombreuses personnalités du monde diplomatique, politique et artistique.

Charles Munch, retour des Etats-Unis, dirigeait le Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Ce fut une minute particulièrement émouvante lorsqu'après l'exécution de la « Deuxième symphonie » d'Arthur Honneger, sous le tonnerre des applaudissements, Charles Munch désigna d'un geste large Arthur Honneger qui était assis au premier rang du balcon et qui se leva, désignant à son tour Charles Munch. Le compositeur et le chef d'orchestre se renvoyaient l'un à l'autre l'ovation grandissante qui montait de la salle et qui s'adressait en même temps qu'à eux deux, au merveilleux orchestre américain.

...UT LYON
Lyon
9 MAI 1952
8-5-1952

Boston Symphony Orchestra Performs at the Paris Opera

By Marshall Peck

The Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the opening program of its European tour at the Paris Opera last night, and the near-capacity audience called conductor Charles Munch back for an encore after applauding for over 10 minutes at the end of the performance.

It was a royal welcome and a gesture of musical appreciation for conductor Munch and the 104-piece Boston Symphony, the first American orchestra which has ever been invited to play at the French National Opera House.

President Vincent Auriol and Mme. Auriol, who often leaned forward in their first-balcony box to follow the musicians on the stage, French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman and American Ambassador James, C. Dunn and Mrs. Dunn were among the celebrities present at the "Masterpieces of the 20th Century" concert.

While there was a sprinkling of empty seats in the pit section, the balconies of the Opera were packed, and the entire audience seemed to like the 20th-century selections on which the Congress of Cultural Freedom, the sponsoring organization of the performance, has focused its attention.

During the several minutes of "bravos" and cheering and applause which followed the scheduled conclusion of the program, Mr. Munch returned to the rostrum six times to acknowledge the plaudits of the audience.

Following the sixth recall, Mr.

(Continued on Page 2, Col. 6)

Symphony

(Continued from Page 1)

Munch responded to the still-seated crowd by leading the orchestra through an encore performance of the closing number, the smooth-flowing music of Maurice Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2.

The number which seemed to draw the most attention from the audience, outside of the final selection, was Claude Debussy's picturesque "La Mer,'

Mr. Munch opened the evening with an American composer, leading the orchestra through Samuel Barber's overture to "The School for Scandal," which the Boston Symphony first introduced in 1940. A reduced group of about 75 string musicians, with some wind instruments, then played Arthur Honegger's Symphony No. 2, for strings.

Albert Roussel's Second Suite from Act II of the ballet "Bacchus et Ariane" was presented as the last number before the intermission, and the second half of the program opened with American composer Walter Piston's Toccata.

"La Mer" and "Daphnis et Chloe" closed the evening.

LE THEATRE

L'OPÉRA

...ongue série de repr... ...erette fameuse, Aida. ...théâtre est revenu à son ...bonnel, pour un jour ... Cinquante deux ans ... lyonnaise de Tristan et ... vieux amateurs de mu... ...s oublié, le chef-d'œuvre ...agner reparut sur notre ...s, comme jadis, en fran... ...s l'interprétation en lan... ...L'épreuve pouvait pa... ...lle ne le fut pas, car les ...nt excellents.

...os de la troupe habituelle ...ts rôles : MM. Sandoz, ... Durand, qui chantèrent ...d. Tous les autres artistes ...péra autrichien de Vienne ...e de Zurich : M. Max ...s rares artistes capables de ...ristan ou Siegfried ; Mme Mme Milinkovic ; MM. Tap...smann.

...renz n'est plus jeune, sa ...ngue au cours d'une lon... ...presque toute réservée au ... wagnérien ; son incerti... ...masquée par la déclamation ...pparaît dans les parties ...me le duo du second acte, ...superbe, son noble jeu fer... ...les à certaines défaillances. ... Mme Gross-Prandl, Isolde, ...une voix belle, solide, égale, ...puissance. Mme Milinko... ...gnone, chante et joue avec ...de M. Pappolet est un Marke ...plein de ...auté ; M. Grossmann compose ...un pat... Kurwenal.

En ...e de ces interprètes bons ou excellents, on devrait inscrire le chef d'orchestre responsable de la belle tenue de l'ensemble. M. Otto Ackermann a ...anifesté une fois de plus son talent ...gest... exceptionnel. Sans exagéra... ...expressive, sans outrance, sans ...ulture, il a réalisé une exécution musicale de la plus grande valeur, l'une des plus parfaites que l'on ait jamais entendues au Grand-Théâtre, avec cette extraordinaire présentation de Tristan et Isolde s'achève la saison lyrique 1951-1952.

Georges MANSUET.

Le grand événement artistique de la saison est sans doute la venue à Lyon de cette grande formation symphonique, puisqu'elle ne comporte pas moins de 110 exécutants, qu'est le « Boston Symphony orchestra », qui se fera entendre le lundi 19 mai, à 21 heures, à l'Opéra, sous la direction de Pierre Monteux.

Le concert bénéficie d'un programme de choix que nous donnons ci-dessous :

Ouverture de Benvenuto Cellini : Berlioz ;
3e Symphonie : Brahms ;
3e Symphonie : William Schuman ;
Alborada del Gracioso : Ravel ;
Till Eulenspiegel : R. Strauss.

LA CROIX — JEUDI 8 MAI 1952

L'ŒUVRE DU XXe SIÈCLE

CHARLES MUNCH

CET Alsacien compte parmi les plus grands chefs d'orchestre de ce temps. Il a dirigé chez nous la Société des concerts du Conservatoire. Il a été, pendant un an seulement, professeur de direction d'orchestre au Conservatoire ; ce séjour lui a suffi pour y laisser sa trace et je connais un de ses jeunes élèves qui garde le plus reconnaissant souvenir de son fécond enseignement. C'est vers 1949 qu'il a succédé au regretté Serge Koussevitzky à la tête de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston (fondé en 1881), qui est une des formations les plus remarquables du monde. Avant lui, Pierre Monteux (Français aussi), et qui vient lui-même à Paris, l'avait dirigé de 1919 à 1924. Charles Münch doit diriger deux concerts, dans les manifestations de l'Œuvre du xxe siècle. Le Boston Symphony Orchestra, fort attaché à la musique française, a joué en Amérique de nombreuses œuvres de nos compositeurs, parfois en première audition : c'est ainsi que la récente et magnifique Ve Symphonie d'Honegger a été créée par lui sous la direction de Münch. On sait que le célèbre chef d'orchestre cueille des triomphes en conduisant, avec une maîtrise et une puissance rares, la fameuse 2e suite de Daphnis et Chloé, de Ravel (qu'il nous a présentée mardi), et les grandes Symphonies, d'Albert Roussel. L'Orchestre de Boston ira ensuite à Strasbourg (ville natale de son chef), au festival de Bordeaux, en Hollande, en Belgique, en Angleterre et en Allemagne.

Charles Münch est le frère de Fritz Münch, directeur de la célèbre chorale Saint-Guillaume de Strasbourg, qui vient d'exécuter, au concert inaugural, en l'église Saint-Roch, l'émouvant Stabat Mater, de Francis Poulenc.

Neue Zeitung - Munchen

8 MAI 1952

Glanzpunkte des Pariser Musikfestes

Paris, 7. Mai (NZ). — Das Musikfest des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit findet steigende Resonanz in der Pariser Oeffentlichkeit. Das erste große Konzert fand im Theater der Champs Elysées unter der Leitung von Bruno Walter statt. Historisch gesehen war es mehr ein Auftakt zum „Werk des 20. Jahrhunderts", das in dieser Musikwoche zu Gehör kommen soll, denn von den drei Werken, die auf dem Programm standen, gehören Richard Strauß' „Don Juan" und Debussys „Präludium zum Nachmittag eines Faun" noch dem 19. Jahrhundert an. Das dritte Werk, Gustav Mahlers „Lied von der Erde", beeindruckte die Hörer besonders dank der Sopranpartie von Kathleen Ferrier. Am Dienstag gab das Bostoner Symphonieorchester unter der Leitung von Charles Munch in der Oper sein erstes Konzert, das neben Debussy, Ravel und Arthur Honegger einen amerikanischen Komponisten zu Gehör kommen ließ: Samuel Barber mit einer interessanten Ouvertüre zur „Schule für Skandal". Präsident Auriol, Außenminister Schuman und fast das ganze Diplomatische Corps wohnten der Aufführung bei.

FRANCE-SOIR jeudi 8 Mai 1952

L'ORCHESTRE DE BOSTON A L'OPÉRA

« Merci, deux fois merci », a dit M. Auriol à Charles Munch et à Arthur Honegger

« MERCI, deux fois merci, a dit hier soir dans sa loge de l'Opéra M. Vincent Auriol à Charles Munch et à Arthur Honegger a l'entr'acte du premier concert donné par l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston sous la direction de son célèbre chef français.

Hier soir, le véritable ambassadeur des Etats-Unis n'était pas M. James Dunn mais l'orchestre de Boston qu'il était venu applaudir avec MM. Maurice Schumann, André Marie, Monnerville, Cornu, Nabokov et Julius Fleischmann.

Dans la loge présidentielle on remarquait la présence de Mme Jacqueline Auriol, qui avait tenu à accompagner le Président et Mme Vincent Auriol.

— J'aime beaucoup votre symphonie, a encore dit le président de la République à Honegger.

Il n'était pas le seul. La salle a acclamé sans fin le compositeur français modestement assis aux côtés de sa femme, dans un fauteuil de corbeille. Le public a montré par là qu'il plaçait Arthur Honegger au même rang que les plus grands des compositeurs français que nous avons entendus hier : Albert Roussel, pour sa 2e suite d'Ariane et Bacchus, la Mer, de Claude Debussy et Daphnis et Chloé, de Maurice Ravel, dont l'orchestre a bissé la dernière partie.

La musique américaine nous a moins convaincus, notamment l'ouverture de « The School for scandal », de Samuel Barber. Mais, dans la « Toccata », de Walter Piston on retrouve l'élève de Vincent d'Indy.

Le Tout-Paris a montré assez peu d'imagination à l'issue du concert à la réception donnée au foyer de la danse en l'honneur de Charles Munch et de l'orchestre de Boston.

— Bravo, mon cher maître, lui ont dit en chœur Mme de Rougemont et la comtesse Montesquiou de Fesenzac.

Munch, très ému, nous a déclaré être profondément heureux de son immense succès et de sa première soirée parisienne mais il a refusé de boire du champagne car il était trop fatigué.

LE DAUPHINÉ LIBÉRÉ
GRENOBLE
8 MAI 1952

L'actualité théâtrale à Paris

UN MAI QUI PROMET

APEINE étouffées à l'Opéra-Comique, les dernières mesures de « Pelléas et Mélisande », dont on célébrait le cinquantenaire en présence du Président de la République, Paris retentit partout d'échos qui, par leur concert, attestent que ni notre pays, ni notre époque, ni notre civilisation n'ont perdu le goût des grandes aventures artistiques et spirituelles. Debussy serait heureux de voir — et d'entendre — que les préventions, dont il eut tant à souffrir de son vivant, ne se sont pas seulement dissipées, mais ont fait place à plus d'intelligence et à plus de tolérance pour tout ce qui est nouveau — en attendant de devenir classique.

♣ ♣ ♣

Car « L'Œuvre du XXe Siècle », qui nous est présentée sous les auspices du Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture, n'a pas sans raison choisi Paris pour cette Exposition Internationale des Arts et de la Pensée. Le climat de cette ville et de ce printemps lui conviennent mieux que tout autre. Chez nous, il ne s'agit pas de savoir si les compositeurs, les écrivains, les peintres doivent se soumettre aux impératifs catégoriques de fonctionnaires politiques, généralement aussi dénués de talent que de compétence et de personnalité, mais de favoriser et d'exalter, au contraire, le génie créateur de chacun, sans préalablement l'asphyxier dans la gangue des slogans, des doctrines et des idolâtries sur commande.

♣ ♣ ♣

Que le concert inaugural donné en l'église St-Roch ait associé le « Magnificat » et la « Cantate N° 6 » de Jean-Sébastien Bach au « Stabat Mater » de Francis Poulenc, n'est-ce pas déjà le signe que cette liberté de l'esprit est assez sauvegardée chez nous pour ne dresser aucun rideau de fer entre les religions, les écoles et les pupitres ? Fritz Munch dirigeait l'orchestre des Concerts Lamoureux ; la Chorale St-Guillaume de Strasbourg répondait aux voix de Renée Defraiteur, de Lucie Rauh, d'Ernest Haeflinger, de Pierre Mollet et, pour Poulenc, de Geneviève Moizan ; Charles Mater tenait les orgues, et ce fut un beau prélude auquel pouvait prétendre ce « mai musical » de Paris.

« Wozzeck », l'opéra d'Alban Berg sur le livret de Georg Büchner, reçut deux jours plus tard le même accueil enthousiaste au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées. L'Orchestre Philharmonique et les chœurs de l'Opéra de Vienne, conduits par Karl Boehm, nous ouvraient de nouvelles frontières ; une troupe admirablement homogène venait attester que l'Autriche de Richard Strauss s'était définitivement libérée des contraintes étrangères à l'art et, lundi, lorsque Bruno Walter apparut sur le plateau pour animer de sa baguette l'Orchestre National de l'Opéra, ce fut encore un large pan de ciel qui se découvrit quand les acclamations d'une foule, où se mêlaient toutes les classes et toutes les nationalités, saluèrent le « Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune », de Claude Debussy, et « Das Lied von der Erde », de Gustav Malher, interprétés par les solistes : le ténor Lorenz Fehenberger et Elsa Cavelti, contralto suisse.

♣ ♣ ♣

Il y en a ainsi pour un mois à redécouvrir ce que nous avions cru perdre. Igor Strawinsky est là, Vittorio Rietti va ranimer la grande ombre lumineuse de F. Garcia Lorca, George Balanchine et ses ballets ressusciteront Fokine et les Russes de Diaghilew, Tchaïkowsky donnera la main à Chabrier, les danseuses du New-York City Ballet, celles de Boston, celles du Marquis de Cuevas noueront la ronde des peuples libres aux accents de Serge Prokofiev et de l'Academia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia, Chostakovitch aura sa part d'ovations comme l'Opéra Royal de Covent-Garden. Les colombes de ce Festival ne sont pas des symboles de papier collés sur des prisons. Elles ont des ailes : celles du chant, des gestes : des archets. Celles aussi d'une civilisation demeurée assez féconde pour que nous fassions confiance à son avenir, la liberté de création et d'expression restant, selon la « préface » écrite par Denis de Rougemont pour cette monumentale « Œuvre du XXe Siècle », la condition première d'un ordre supérieur — la tyrannie, d'où qu'elle vienne, n'étant que le pire des désordres.

LE GANT DE CRIN.

[276]

...OUT LYON
Lyon
8 MAI 1952

LE THEATRE

A L'OPÉRA

Au mi... une longue série de repré... sentations ... opérette fameuse, Andalousie, ... Grand-Théâtre est revenu à son répertoire ... traditionnel, pour un jour ... Seulement ! hélas ! Cinquante-deux ans après la ... création lyonnaise de Tristan et Isolde, que ... les vieux amateurs de musique n'ont pas oublié, le chef-d'œuvre de Richard Wagner reparut sur notre scène. Nous ... entendus, comme jadis, en français, mais ... dans l'interprétation en langue allemande. L'épreuve pouvait paraître rude ... elle ne le fut pas, car les acteurs ... rent excellents.

Trois ... ents de la troupe habituelle tinrent les petits rôles : MM. Sandoz, Déborde, Michel Durand, qui chantèrent le texte ... nal. Tous les autres artistes venaient ... l'Opéra autrichien de Vienne ou du Théâtre de Zurich : M. Max Lorenz, ... les rares artistes capables de représenter ... Tristan ou Siegfried ; Mme Gross-Prandl, Mme Milinkovic ; MM. Pappolet et ... Grossmann.

M. Max Lorenz n'est plus jeune, sa voix s'est fatiguée au cours d'une longue carrière, presque toute réservée au dur répertoire wagnérien ; son incertitude vocale, masquée par la déclamation allemande, apparaît dans les parties chantées comme le duo du second acte. Son allure superbe, son noble jeu ferment les oreilles à certaines défaillances. Au contraire, Mme Gross-Prandl, Isolde, fait admirer une voix belle, solide, égale, d'une extrême puissance. Mme Milinkovic, en Brangaene, chante et joue avec un égal mérite. M. Pappolet est un Marke plein de dignité ; M. Grossmann compose un parfait Kurwenal.

En tête de ces interprètes bons ou excellents, on devrait inscrire le chef d'orchestre, responsable de la belle tenue de l'ensemble. M. Otto Ackermann a manifesté une fois de plus son talent magistral, exceptionnel. Sans exagération expressive, sans outrance, sans enflure il a réalisé une exécution musicale de la plus grande valeur, l'une des plus parfaites que l'on ait jamais entendues au Grand-Théâtre, avec cette extraordinaire représentation de Tristan et Isolde s'achève la saison lyrique 1951-1952.

Georges MANSUET.

Le grand événement artistique de la saison sera sans doute la venue à Lyon de cette grande formation symphonique, puisqu'elle ne comporte pas moins de 110 exécutants, qu'est le « Boston Symphony Orchestra », qui se fera entendre le lundi 19 mai, à 21 heures, à l'Opéra, sous la direction de Pierre Monteux.

Ce concert bénéficie d'un programme de choix que nous donnons ci-dessous :

Ouverture de Benvenuto Cellini : Berlioz ;
3e Symphonie : Brahms ;
3e Symphonie : William Schuman ;
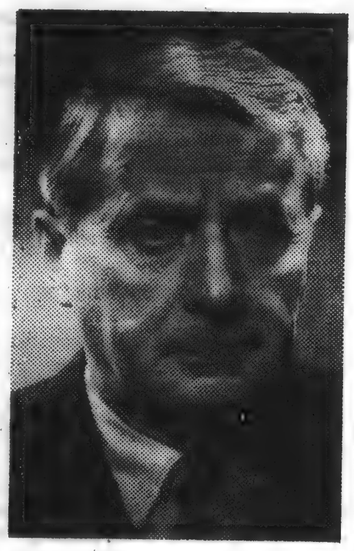
Alborada del Gracioso : Ravel ;
Till Eulenspiégel : R. Strauss.

LA CROIX — JEUDI 8 MAI 1952

L'ŒUVRE DU XXe SIÈCLE

CHARLES MUNCH



CET Alsacien compte parmi les plus grands chefs d'orchestre de ce temps. Il a dirigé chez nous la Société des concerts du Conservatoire. Il a été, pendant un an seulement, professeur de direction d'orchestre au Conservatoire ; ce séjour lui a suffi pour y laisser sa trace et je connais un de ses jeunes élèves qui garde le plus reconnaissant souvenir de son fécond enseignement. C'est vers 1949 qu'il a succédé au regretté Serge Koussevitzky à la tête de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston (fondé en 1881), qui est une des formations les plus remarquables du monde. Avant lui, Pierre Monteux (Français aussi), et qui vient lui-même à Paris, l'avait dirigé de 1919 à 1924. Charles Münch doit diriger deux concerts, dans les manifestations de l'Œuvre du xxe siècle. Le Boston Symphony Orchestra, fort attaché à la musique française, a joué en Amérique de nombreuses œuvres de nos compositeurs, parfois en première audition : c'est ainsi que la récente et magnifique Ve Symphonie d'Honegger a été créée par lui sous la direction de Münch. On sait que le célèbre chef d'orchestre cueille des triomphes en conduisant, avec une maîtrise et une puissance rares, la fameuse 2e suite de Daphnis et Chloé, de Ravel (qu'il nous a présentée mardi), et les grandes Symphonies, d'Albert Roussel. L'Orchestre de Boston ira ensuite à Strasbourg (ville natale de son chef), au festival de Bordeaux, en Hollande, en Belgique, en Angleterre et en Allemagne.

Charles Münch est le frère de Fritz Münch, directeur de la célèbre chorale Saint-Guillaume de Strasbourg, qui vient d'exécuter, au concert inaugural, en l'église Saint-Roch, l'émouvant Stabat Mater, de Francis Poulenc.

Neue Zeitung - Munchen
8 MAI 1952

Glanzpunkte des Pariser Musikfestes

Paris, 7. Mai (NZ). — Das Musikfest des Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit findet steigende Resonanz in der Pariser Oeffentlichkeit. Das erste große Konzert fand im Theater der Champs Elysées unter der Leitung von Bruno Walter statt. Historisch gesehen war es mehr ein Auftakt zum „Werk des 20. Jahrhunderts", das in dieser Musikwoche zu Gehör kommen soll, denn von den drei Werken, die auf dem Programm standen, gehören Richard Strauß' „Don Juan" und Debussys „Präludium zum Nachmittag eines Faun" noch dem 19. Jahrhundert an. Das dritte Werk, Gustav Mahlers „Lied von der Erde", beeindruckte die Hörer besonders dank der Sopranpartie von Kathleen Ferrier. Am Dienstag gab das Bostoner Symphonieorchester unter der Leitung von Charles Munch in der Oper sein erstes Konzert, das neben Debussy, Ravel und Arthur Honegger einen amerikanischen Komponisten zu Gehör kommen ließ: Samuel Barber mit einer interessanten Ouvertüre zur „Schule für Skandal". Präsident Auriol, Außenminister Schuman und fast das ganze Diplomatische Corps wohnten der Aufführung bei.

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, PARIS, WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1952

Boston Symphony Orchestra Performs at the Paris Opera

By Marshall Peck

The Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the opening program of its European tour at the Paris Opera last night, and the near-capacity audience called conductor Charles Munch back for an encore after applauding for over 10 minutes at the end of the performance.

It was a royal welcome and a gesture of musical appreciation for conductor Munch and the 104-piece Boston Symphony, the first American orchestra which has ever been invited to play at the French National Opera House.

President Vincent Auriol and Mme. Auriol, who often leaned forward in their first-balcony box to follow the musicians on the stage, French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman and American Ambassador James C. Dunn and Mrs. Dunn were among the celebrities present at the "Masterpieces of the 20th Century" concert.

While there was a sprinkling of empty seats in the pit section, the balconies of the Opera were packed, and the entire audience seemed to like the 20th-century selections on which the Congress of Cultural Freedom, the sponsoring organization of the performance, has focused its attention.

During the several minutes of "bravos" and cheering and applause which followed the scheduled conclusion of the program, Mr. Munch returned to the rostrum six times to acknowledge the plaudits of the audience.

Following the sixth recall, Mr.

(Continued on Page 2, Col. 6)

Symphony

(Continued from Page 1)

Munch responded to the still-seated crowd by leading the orchestra through an encore performance of the closing number, the smooth-flowing music of Maurice Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2.

The number which seemed to draw the most attention from the audience, outside of the final selection, was Claude Debussy's picturesque "La Mer,"

Mr. Munch opened the evening with an American composer, leading the orchestra through Samuel Barber's overture to "The School for Scandal," which the Boston Symphony first introduced in 1940. A reduced group of about 75 string musicians, with some wind instruments, then played Arthur Honegger's Symphony No. 2, for strings.

Albert Roussel's Second Suite from Act II of the ballet "Bacchus et Ariane" was presented as the last number before the intermission, and the second half of the program opened with American composer Walter Piston's Toccata.

"La Mer" and "Daphnis et Chloe" closed the evening.

FRANCE-SOIR — Jeudi 8 Mai 1952

L'ORCHESTRE DE BOSTON A L'OPÉRA

« Merci, deux fois merci », a dit M. Auriol à Charles Munch et à Arthur Honegger

« MERCI, deux fois merci, a dit hier soir dans sa loge de l'Opéra M. Vincent Auriol à Charles Munch et à Arthur Honegger à l'entr'acte du premier concert donné par l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston sous la direction de son célèbre chef français.

Hier soir, le véritable ambassadeur des Etats-Unis n'était pas M. James Dunn mais l'orchestre de Boston qu'il était venu applaudir avec MM. Maurice Schumann, André Marie, Monnerville, Cornu, Nabokov et Julius Fleischmann.

Dans la loge présidentielle on remarquait la présence de Mme Jacqueline Auriol, qui avait tenu à accompagner le Président et Mme Vincent Auriol.

— J'aime beaucoup votre symphonie, a encore dit le président de la République à Honegger.

Il n'était pas le seul. La salle a acclamé sans fin le compositeur français modestement assis aux côtés de sa femme, dans un fauteuil de corbeille. Le public a montré par là qu'il plaçait Arthur Honegger au même rang que les plus grands des compositeurs français que nous avons entendus hier : Albert Roussel, pour sa 2e suite d'Ariane et Bacchus, la Mer, de Claude Debussy et Daphnis et Chloé, de Maurice Ravel, dont l'orchestre a bissé la dernière partie.

La musique américaine nous a moins convaincus, notamment l'ouverture de « The School for scandal », de Samuel Barber. Mais, dans la « Toccata », de Walter Piston on retrouve l'élève de Vincent d'Indy.

Le Tout-Paris a montré assez peu d'imagination à l'issue du concert à la réception donnée au foyer de la danse en l'honneur de Charles Munch et de l'orchestre de Boston.

— Bravo, mon cher maître, lui ont dit en chœur Mme de Rougemont et la comtesse Montesquiou de Fezensac.

Munch, très ému, nous a déclaré être profondément heureux de son immense succès et de sa première soirée parisienne mais il a refusé de boire du champagne car il était trop fatigué.

LE DAUPHINÉ LIBÉRÉ
GRENOBLE
8 MAI 1952

L'actualité théâtrale à Paris

UN MAI QUI PROMET

APEINE étouffées à l'Opéra-Comique, les dernières mesures de « Pelléas et Mélisande », dont on célébrait le cinquantenaire en présence du Président de la République, Paris retentit partout d'échos qui, par leur concert, attestent que ni notre Pays, ni notre époque, ni notre civilisation n'ont perdu le goût des grandes aventures artistiques et spirituelles. Debussy serait heureux de voir — et d'entendre — que les préventions, dont il eut tant à souffrir de son vivant, ne se sont pas seulement dissipées, mais ont fait place à plus d'intelligence et à plus de tolérance pour tout ce qui est nouveau — en attendant de devenir classique.

♣♣♣

Car « L'Œuvre du XXe Siècle », qui nous est présentée sous les auspices du Congrès pour la Liberté de la Culture, n'a pas sans raison choisi Paris pour cette Exposition Internationale des Arts et de la Pensée. Le climat de cette ville et de ce printemps lui conviennent mieux que tout autre. Chez nous, il ne s'agit pas de savoir si les compositeurs, les écrivains, les peintres doivent se soumettre aux impératifs catégoriques de fonctionnaires politiques, généralement aussi dénués de talent que de compétence et de personnalité, mais de favoriser et d'exalter, au contraire, le génie créateur de chacun, sans préalablement l'asphyxier dans la gangue des slogans, des doctrines et des idolâtries sur commande.

♣♣♣

Que le concert inaugural donné en l'église St-Roch ait associé le « Magnificat » et la « Cantate N° 67 » de Jean-Sébastien Bach au « Stabat Mater » de Francis Poulenc, n'est-ce pas déjà le signe que cette liberté de l'esprit est assez sauvegardée chez nous pour ne dresser aucun rideau de fer entre les religions, les écoles et les pupitres ? Fritz Munch dirigeait l'orchestre des Concerts Lamoureux ; la Chorale St-Guillaume de Strasbourg répondait aux voix de Renée Defraiteur, de Lucie Rauh, d'Ernest Haeflinger, de Pierre Mollet et, pour Poulenc, de Geneviève Moinan ; Charles Mater tenait les orgues, et ce fut le beau prélude auquel pouvait prétendre ce « mai musical » de Paris.

« Wozzeck », l'opéra d'Alban Berg sur le livret de Georg Büchner, reçut deux jours plus tard le même accueil enthousiaste au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées. L'Orchestre Philharmonique et les chœurs de l'Opéra de Vienne, conduits par Karl Boehm, nous ouvraient de nouvelles frontières ; une troupe admirablement homogène venait attester que l'Autriche de Richard Strauss s'était définitivement libérée des contraintes étrangères à l'art et, lundi, lorsque Bruno Walter apparut sur le plateau pour animer de sa baguette l'Orchestre National de l'Opéra, ce fut encore un large pan de ciel qui se découvrit quand les acclamations d'une foule, où se mêlaient toutes les classes et toutes les nationalités, saluèrent le « Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune », de Claude Debussy, et « Das Lied von der Erde », de Gustav Malher, interprétés par les solistes : le ténor Lorenz Fehenberger et Elsa Cavelti, contralto suisse.

♣♣♣

Il y en a ainsi pour un mois à redécouvrir ce que nous avions cru perdre. Igor Strawinsky est là, Vittorio Rietti va ranimer la grande ombre lumineuse de F. Garcia Lorca, George Balanchine et ses ballets ressusciteront Fokine et les Russes de Diaghilew, Tchaïkowsky donnera la main à Chabrier, les danseuses du New-York City Ballet, celles de Boston, celles du Marquis de Cuevas noueront la ronde des peuples libres aux accents de Serge Prokofiev et de l'Academia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia, Chostakovitch aura sa part d'ovations comme l'Opéra Royal de Covent-Garden. Les colombes de ce Festival ne sont pas des symboles de papier collés sur des prisons. Elles ont des ailes : celles du chant, des gestes : des archets. Celles aussi d'une civilisation demeurée assez féconde pour que nous fassions confiance à son avenir, la liberté de création et d'expression restant, selon la « préface » écrite par Denis de Rougemont pour cette monumentale « Œuvre du XXe Siècle », la condition première d'un ordre supérieur — la tyrannie, d'où qu'elle vienne, n'étant que le pire des désordres.

LE GANT DE CRIN.

[276]

LES DERNIÈRES NOUVELLES DU HAUT-RHIN
COLMAR

9 MAI 1952

BEGEGNUNG IN DER PARISER OPER. — Am Dienstagabend gab das Philharmonische Orchester von Boston zum erstenmal in Frankreich ein Konzert in der Pariser Oper. Unser Bild zeigt den Dirigenten Charles Munch im Gespräch mit dem Präsidenten der Republik, M. Vincent Auriol, in dessen Loge (A.P

LE FIGARO LITTERAIRE — SAMEDI 10 MAI 1952

Quand Charles Münch mène à la victoire son bataillon de choc

IL n'est guère, dans le monde musical, de silhouette plus connue que celle de Charles Münch ! Deux longs bras qui retombent après un ultime sursaut de désespoir, au terme d'un chant où se concentre toute la douleur de la terre, deux épaules qui se haussent tandis que les poings serrés et frémissants viennent essuyer les larmes qui coulent des yeux, deux mains grandes ouvertes vers le ciel en signe de triomphe : voilà trois attitudes de Charles Münch fixées sur l'écran de toutes les mémoires, de Boston à Paris, de Londres à Rome.

Un chef d'orchestre est une sorte de condottiere qui a pour mission d'entraîner les troupes les plus diverses à la victoire ; mais le Boston Symphonic Orchestra reste pour Charles Münch un bataillon de choc. On l'a bien vu à la répétition qui précéda ce concert donné à l'Opéra dans le cadre de l'Œuvre du XX^e siècle. Un simple froncement de sourcils, un simple regard, et les instrumentistes obéissent sans la moindre hésitation.

L'art de Debureau n'a pas de secret pour Charles Münch. Cela, le public l'ignore, qui ne voit les traits de son visage qu'au terme d'une exécution ; mais les instrumentistes de l'orchestre savent bien qu'il faut lire la musique plus encore sur la figure de leur chef que sur les partitions. Ceux qui doutent encore de l'influence que peut avoir un Kappelmeister sur ses musiciens peuvent interroger les membres du Boston Symphonic, ils seront édifiés.

L'interrogatoire sera d'autant plus facile que la langue française semble la langue maternelle de cet orchestre. Près de vingt-cinq instrumentistes sur cent deux viennent de France.

— En voici un, me dit Charles Münch, qui a du sang indien dans les veines ; là-bas, vous voyez un Grec qui offre une cigarette à un Russe, et ce Calabrais qui travaille un trait avec acharnement depuis le début de l'entracte parle uniquement, je crois, l'anglais et le patois de son pays.

Et tout cela fait un excellent orchestre américain.

Trois coups de baguette sur le pupitre, en un clin d'œil chacun a regagné sa place. Silence de plomb, les archets sont suspendus sur les cordes des stradivarius ; le timbalier s'immobilise, figé comme une statue, un bras levé ; cors et trompettes se fixent sur les lèvres.

Dynamisme, autorité, lyrisme enflammé, éternelle jeunesse ; comment ne pas reprendre cette définition chère aux Américains : « Charles Münch : l'homme le plus extraordinaire que j'ai rencontré. »

Claude Baignères.

L'EST RÉPUBLICAIN
Nancy

9 MAI 1952

Location ouverte pour le Concert du Symphony Orchestra

Nous avons annoncé, dans notre édition du 7 mai, le concert qui sera donné à Metz le 18 mai, à 20 h. 30, à l'Hôtel des Mines (avenue Foch) par le célèbre Symphony Orchestra de Boston.

Dès à présent les Nancéiens pourront retenir leurs places pour cette soirée chez Mr Martin, 44, rue des Carmes, tél. 69-35, aux prix de 1.500, 1.200, 1.000, 800 et 600 francs.

Mon Programme

samedi 10 Mai 1952

LE « SACRE »

La Radio a retransmis le concert au cours duquel le Boston Symphony Orchestra, dirigé par notre compatriote Pierre Monteux, a exécuté Le Sacre du Printemps.

L'œuvre est aujourd'hui classique. Elle fut cependant accueillie par des « mouvements divers » quand, le 28 mai 1913, Gabriel Astruc en offrit la primeur aux Parisiens dans ce même Théâtre des Champs-Elysées où le Boston Symphony Orchestra jouait l'autre soir.

Dans ses souvenirs, Gabriel Astruc rapporte qu'à l'issue du spectacle, il rencontra la comtesse douairière de Pourtalès, qui se dirigeait vers la sortie.

— Monsieur le directeur, lui dit-elle, le regard sévère, si vous renouvelez la grossière mystification de ce soir, j'aurai le regret de vous retourner mon abonnement.

VENDREDI 9 MAI 1952 FRANC-TIREUR

Échos radio... échos

ICI ET LA...

● Un hebdomadaire radiophonique subventionné par l'Etat et dont le titre change avec les années annonçait, la semaine dernière, une « formule améliorée » de ses feuilles, avec un roman en images, la collaboration permanente de Pierre Mac Orlan, la petite tête en couleurs naturelles de Line Renaud, une page d'échos et... d'autres surprises. Ces surprises ne firent certainement pas l'effet escompté par la direction : P.-M. Orlan n'était pas au rendez-vous, la page en couleurs... était noire et la présentation ne variait pas sensiblement sur le numéro précédent. Alors pourquoi tout ce bruit ? Voilà l'explication : la « formule améliorée » permet, en réduisant le format de l'« hebdo », une économie de 300.000 francs par mois. Vous avez saisi maintenant pourquoi ce ramdam concerté autour de la nouvelle formule ? Il fallait faire du bruit... pour ne pas attirer l'attention du lecteur sur la réduction d'un tiers du format de son journal : le ministre des Finances a donc rogné les dépenses et le format, mais le lecteur est en rogné d'avoir été dupé, car c'est toujours lui qui fait les frais de la baisse.

● Mardi dernier, le Boston Symphony Orchestra donnait, sous la direction de Charles Münch, son premier concert retransmis en direct de l'Opéra de Paris. C'était une soirée exceptionnelle. Hélas ! un « incident technique » priva les auditeurs du premier quart d'heure de ce concert. Il est absolument inadmissible, pour une retransmission de cette grande valeur musicale, que les techniciens ne sachent pas coordonner leurs efforts pour éviter les émissions tronquées. Nous n'en sommes plus, que diable ! aux balbutiements de la radio et les incidents techniques devraient être relégués depuis longtemps au magasin des accessoires inutiles. Nous apprenons que la politique s'en mêle. M. J.-P. Palewski, député R.P.F., a demandé à interpeller le gouvernement sur les conditions dans lesquelles a pu se produire le déplorable incident qui a mutilé la retransmission radiophonique du 6 mai et des mesures qui ont été prises pour prévenir le retour de faits aussi fâcheux. Si l'interpellation passe, il y aura du bruit à l'Assemblée, car nos grands ténors de députés connaissent bien la musique.

● Un haiku

LA MONTAGNE
CLERMONT-FERRAND

9 MAI 1952

Le chef est venu saluer le président

Charles Münch est venu retrouver le président de la République dans sa loge, à l'Opéra. Il dirigeait l'Orchestre Philharmonique de Boston, venu pour la première fois en France.

LIBÉRATION CHAMPAGNE
TROYES

9 MAI 1952

Charles MUNCH retrouve le Président Auriol à l'Opéra

Charles Munch est venu retrouver le Président de la République dans sa loge, à l'Opéra. Il dirigeait l'orchestre philharmonique de Boston, venu pour la première fois en France.

Au programme figuraient les noms de Ravel, Roussel, Honegger, Debussy, Samuel Barber et Walter Piston.

New-York Herald Tribune
10 Mai

MUSIC IN PARIS

By Edmund J. Pendleton

The Counting and Hammering

THE Twentieth Century Exposition's first fire-cracker exploded when spectators came to blows at the hearing of Pierre Boulez's "Structures" for two pianos during the chamber music concert given in the Comédie des Champs-Elysées on Wednesday. The concert inaugurated the series of seven programs to be heard in the same theater, afternoons at 5:30 p.m., in which reputed instrumental and choral ensembles will take part.

Following the audition of an alert and intelligently written Quintet for woodwinds and horn by Else Barraine, a Chorale and Variations for piano by Henri Dutilleux played by Geneviève Joy, which makes clever use of the piano idiom, songs by Yves Baudrier admirably presented by Le Marc'Hadour, and the imaginative "Incantations" for flute alone by André Jolivet, Pierre Boulez and Olivier Messiaen took their places, each at a keyboard. The hall was fairly well filled with an audience composed mainly of composers, including Igor Stravinsky.

If one did not sense a mathematical formula at the basis of what one heard, and if one was not aware of the vast musical science in the possession of the performers, one would have thought that they were playing the piano for the first time in their lives and struggling at it. Isolated notes at the extremes of the instruments, sharply contrasted dynamics, sudden flurries, silences probably extremely difficult to measure, judging by the executants' visible efforts at counting, and an occasional soft, but massive harmony, is what the ear seizes upon at first hearing.

* * *

Hardly a minute had gone by before the majority of the audience was in a humorous, but respectful mood. When the performers turned their pages back to the beginning and the repeat was about halfway through, a woman in an orchestra seat, unable to contain herself any longer, timidly cried: "Bravo." Suddenly a husky youth from the back row leaped over several rows of seats and bore down menacingly upon the frightened woman. A section of the audience rose to its feet and a policeman apprehended the youth, who, as he was being led out, received a blow from the woman's bag. The audience commented upon the incident excitedly while the two performers, unperturbed, continued their counting and hammering. Another youth shouted as he fled the hall: "This was written in the score!"

Charles Koechlin's graceful woodwind trio, which terminated the concert, was played before a near-empty house as most of the listeners crowded into the hallway to satisfy their curiosity rather than submit to the soothing influence of melodic line and "natural" resonance.

Succeeding one another in rapid succession, three of the world's leading orchestras and conductors contributed substantially to the brilliance of the exposition now in progress. As has been reported in the New York Herald Tribune, the home-coming of Charles Münch at the head of the Boston Symphony was triumphal; what remains to be said, however, is that the orchestra sounded like some super-virtuoso artist whose tone quality remained beautiful from the softest whisper to the fullest tutti, and whose phrasing, delicate or warm as the moment required, was constantly poetical.

M. Munch, elegant and expressive in his gestures, interpreted Albert Roussel's Second Suite from "Bacchus et Ariane" divinely, devoted keen attention to Samuel Barber's Overture and Walter Piston's spirited Toccata, conducted Honegger's Second Symphony and Debussy's "La Mer" with breadth of conception, and gave a thrilling performance of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloé" Second Suite, even though it bordered on precipitation.

Bruno Walter, conducting the Paris Opera orchestra, obtained an execution charged with fire and imagination of Richard Strauss's "Don Juan." If his performance of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" was lovely, it was a tame Faun sans horns and sans policies ears that was being portrayed — the tempi could have supported a little more contrast and fantasy. These two attributes were far from lacking in Gustav Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," in which Viennese popular expression and the composer's meditative soul were effectively opposed. Elsa Cavelti and Lorenz Fehenberger were the soloists.

Wilhelm Furtwaengler, heading his own Berlin Symphony, displayed versatility in his program comprising Weber's "Oberon," Schumann's Fourth Symphony (taken at a deliberate tempo), Honegger's Symphonic Movement No. 3, Ravel's "Spanish Rhapsody," and Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration." The next day, Beethoven's "Egmont" overture; his Great Fugue, opus 133, and Brahms's Double Concerto for Violin and Cello, played by Joseph Szigeti and Pierre Fournier, and Brahms's Second Symphony comprised a program which revealed the celebrated orchestra and its conductor in a remarkable light.

SAMEDI 10

LES DERNIÈRES NOUVELLES DU
HAUT-RHIN
COLMAR

9 MAI 1952

BEGEGNUNG IN DER PARISER OPER. — Am Dienstagabend gab das Philharmonische Orchester von Boston zum erstenmal in Frankreich ein Konzert in der Pariser Oper. Unser Bild zeigt den Dirigenten Charles Münch im Gespräch mit dem Präsidenten der Republik, M. Vincent Auriol, in dessen Loge (A.P.)

Mon Programme

Samedi 10 Mai 1952

LE « SACRE »

La Radio a retransmis le concert au cours duquel le Boston Symphony Orchestra, dirigé par notre compatriote Pierre Monteux, a exécuté Le Sacre du Printemps.

L'œuvre est aujourd'hui classique. Elle fut cependant accueillie par des « mouvements divers » quand, le 28 mai 1913, Gabriel Astruc en offrit la primeur aux Parisiens dans ce même Théâtre des Champs-Elysées où le Boston Symphony Orchestra jouait l'autre soir.

Dans ses souvenirs, Gabriel Astruc rapporte qu'à l'issue du spectacle, il rencontra la comtesse douairière de Pourtalès, qui se dirigeait vers la sortie.

— Monsieur le directeur, lui dit-elle, le regard sévère, si vous renouvelez la grossière mystification de ce soir, j'aurai le regret de vous retourner mon abonnement.

LIBÉRATION CHAMPAGN
TROYES

9 MAI 1952

Charles MUNCH retrouve le Président Auriol à l'O...

Charles Munch est venu retrouver le Président de la République dans sa loge, à l'Opéra, ce soir, pour l'orchestre philharmonique de Boston, venu pour la première fois en France.

Au programme figuraient les noms de Ravel, Roussel, Honegger, Debussy, Samuel Barber et Walter Piston.

LE FIGARO LITTERAIRE — SAMEDI 10 MAI 1952

Quand Charles Münch mène à la victoire son bataillon de choc

IL n'est guère, dans le monde musical, de silhouette plus connue que celle de Charles Münch ! Deux longs bras qui retombent après un ultime sursaut de désespoir, au terme d'un chant où se concentre toute la douleur de la terre, deux épaules qui se haussent tandis que les poings serrés et frémissants viennent essuyer les larmes qui coulent des yeux, deux mains grandes ouvertes vers le ciel en signe de triomphe : voilà trois attitudes de Charles Münch fixées sur l'écran de toutes les mémoires, de Boston à Paris, de Londres à Rome.

Un chef d'orchestre est une sorte de condottiere qui a pour mission d'entraîner les troupes les plus diverses à la victoire ; mais le Boston Symphonic Orchestra reste pour Charles Münch un bataillon de choc. On l'a bien vu à la répétition qui précéda ce concert donné à l'Opéra dans le cadre de l'Œuvre du XX^e siècle. Un simple froncement de sourcils, un simple regard, et les instrumentistes obéissent sans la moindre hésitation.

L'art de Debureau n'a pas de secret pour Charles Münch. Cela, le public l'ignore, qui ne voit les traits de son visage qu'au terme d'une exécution ; mais les instrumentistes de l'orchestre savent bien qu'il faut lire la musique plus encore sur la figure de leur chef que sur les partitions. Ceux qui doutent encore de l'influence que peut avoir un Kappelmeister sur ses musiciens peuvent interroger les membres du Boston Symphonic, ils seront édifiés.

L'interrogatoire sera d'autant plus facile que la langue française semble la langue maternelle de cet orchestre. Près de vingt-cinq instrumentistes sur cent deux viennent de France.

— En voici un, me dit Charles Münch, qui a du sang indien dans les veines : là-bas, vous voyez un Grec qui offre une cigarette à un Russe, et ce Calabrais qui travaille un trait avec acharnement depuis le début de l'entracte parle uniquement, je crois, l'anglais et le patois de son pays.

Et tout cela fait un excellent orchestre américain.

Trois coups de baguette sur le pupitre, en un clin d'œil chacun a regagné sa place. Silence de plomb, les archets sont suspendus sur les cordes des stradivarius ; le timbalier s'immobilise, figé comme une statue, un bras levé ; cors et trompettes se fixent sur les lèvres.

Dynamisme, autorité, lyrisme enflammé, éternelle jeunesse ; comment ne pas reprendre cette définition chère aux Américains : « Charles Münch : l'homme le plus extraordinaire que j'ai rencontré. »

Claude Baignères.

VENDREDI 9 MAI 1952 FRANC-TIREUR

Echos radio... échos

ICI ET LA...

● Un hebdomadaire radiophonique subventionné par l'Etat et dont le titre change avec les années annonçait, la semaine dernière, une « formule améliorée » de ses feuilles, avec un roman en images, la collaboration permanente de Pierre Mac Orlan, la petite tête en couleurs naturelles de Line Renaud, une page d'échos et... d'autres surprises. Ces surprises ne firent certainement pas l'effet escompté par la direction ; P...M. Orlan n'était pas au rendez-vous, la page en couleurs... était noire, et la présentation ne variait pas sensiblement sur le numéro précédent. Alors pourquoi tout ce bruit ? Voilà l'explication : la « formule améliorée » permet, en réduisant le format de l'« hebdo », une économie de 300.000 francs par mois. Vous avez saisi maintenant pourquoi ce ramdam concerté autour de la nouvelle formule ? Il fallait faire du bruit... pour ne pas attirer l'attention du lecteur sur la réduction d'un tiers du format de son journal : le ministre des Finances a donc rogné les dépenses et le format, mais le lecteur est en rogne d'avoir été dupé, car c'est toujours lui qui fait les frais de la baisse.

● Mardi dernier, le Boston Symphony Orchestra donnait, sous la direction de Charles Münch, son premier concert retransmis en direct de l'Opéra de Paris. C'était une soirée exceptionnelle. Hélas ! un « incident technique » prive les auditeurs du premier quart d'heure de ce concert. Il est absolument inadmissible, pour une retransmission de cette grande valeur musicale, que les techniciens ne sachent pas coordonner leurs efforts pour éviter les émissions tronquées. Nous n'en sommes plus, que diable ! aux balbutiements de la radio et les incidents techniques devraient être relégués depuis longtemps au magasin des accessoires inutiles. Nous apprenons que la politique s'en mêle. M. J.-P. Palewski, député R.P.F., a demandé à interpeller le gouvernement sur les conditions dans lesquelles a pu se produire le déplorable incident qui a mutilé la retransmission radiophonique du 6 mai et des mesures qui ont été prises pour prévenir le retour de faits aussi fâcheux. Si l'interpellation passe, il y aura du bruit à l'Assemblée, car nos grands ténors de députés connaissent bien la musique.

● Un [illegible]

LA MONTAGNE
CLERMONT-FERRAND

9 MAI 1952

Le chef est venu saluer le Président

Charles Munch est venu retrouver le Président de la République dans sa loge, à l'Opéra. Il dirigeait l'Orchestre Philharmonique de Boston, venu pour la première fois en France.

L'EST RÉPUBLICAIN
Nancy

9 MAI 1952

Location ouverte pour le Concert du Symphony Orchestra

Nous avons annoncé, dans notre édition du 7 mai, le concert qui sera donné à Metz le 18 mai, à 20 h. 30, à l'Hôtel des Mines (avenue Foch) par le célèbre Symphony Orchestra de Boston.

Dès à présent les Nancéiens pourront retenir leurs places pour cette soirée chez Mr Martin, 44, rue des Carmes, tél. 69-35, aux prix de 1.500, 1.200, 1.000, 800 et 600 francs.

New-York Herald Tribune
10 Mai

MUSIC IN PARIS

By Edmund J. Pendleton

The Counting and Hammering

THE Twentieth Century Exposition's first fire-cracker exploded when spectators came to blows at the hearing of Pierre Boulez's "Structures" for two pianos during the chamber music concert given in the Comédie des Champs-Elysées on Wednesday. The concert inaugurated the series of seven programs to be heard in the same theater, afternoons at 5:30 p.m., in which reputed instrumental and choral ensembles will take part.

Following the audition of an alert and intelligently written Quintet for woodwinds and horn by Else Barraine, a Chorale and Variations for piano by Henri Dutilleux played by Geneviève Joy, which makes clever use of the piano idiom, songs by Yves Baudrier admirably presented by Le Marc'Hadour, and the imaginative "Incantations" for flute alone by André Jolivet, Pierre Boulez and Olivier Messiaen took their places, each at a keyboard. The hall was fairly well filled with an audience composed mainly of composers, including Igor Stravinsky.

If one did not sense a mathematical formula at the basis of what one heard, and if one was not aware of the vast musical science in the possession of the performers, one would have thought that they were playing the piano for the first time in their lives and struggling at it. Isolated notes at the extremes of the instruments, sharply contrasted dynamics, sudden flurries, silences probably extremely difficult to measure, judging by the executants' visible efforts at counting, and an occasional soft, but massive harmony, is what the ear seizes upon at first hearing.

* * *

Hardly a minute had gone by before the majority of the audience was in a humorous, but respectful mood. When the performers turned their pages back to the beginning and the repeat was about halfway through, a woman in an orchestra seat, unable to contain herself any longer, timidly cried: "Bravo." Suddenly a husky youth from the back row leaped over several rows of seats and bore down menacingly upon the frightened woman. A section of the audience rose to its feet and a policeman apprehended the youth, who, as he was being led out, received a blow from the woman's bag. The audience commented upon the incident excitedly while the two performers, unperturbed, continued their counting and hammering. Another youth shouted as he fled the hall: "This was written in the score!"

Charles Koechlin's graceful woodwind trio, which terminated the concert, was played before a near-empty house as most of the listeners crowded into the hallway to satisfy their curiosity rather than submit to the soothing influence of melodic line and "natural" resonance.

Succeeding one another in rapid succession, three of the world's leading orchestras and conductors contributed substantially to the brilliance of the exposition now in progress. As has been reported in the New York Herald Tribune, the home-coming of Charles Munch at the head of the Boston Symphony was triumphal; what remains to be said, however, is that the orchestra sounded like some super-virtuoso artist whose tone quality remained beautiful from the softest whisper to the fullest tutti, and whose phrasing, delicate or warm as the moment required, was constantly poetical.

M. Munch, elegant and persuasive in his gestures, interpreted Albert Roussel's Second Suite from "Bacchus et Ariane" divinely, devoted keen attention to Samuel Barber's Overture and Walter Piston's spirited Toccata, conducted Honegger's Second Symphony and Debussy's "La Mer" with breadth of conception, and gave a thrilling performance of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloé" Second Suite, even though it bordered on precipitation.

Bruno Walter, conducting the Paris Opera orchestra, obtained an execution charged with fire and imagination of Richard Strauss's "Don Juan." If his performance of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" was lovely, it was a tame Faun sans horns and sans pointed ears that was being portrayed—the tempi could have supported a little more contrast and fantasy. These two attributes were far from lacking in Gustav Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," in which Viennese popular expression and the composer's meditative soul were effectively opposed. Elsa Cavelti and Lorenz Fehenberger were the soloists.

Wilhelm Furtwaengler, heading his own Berlin Symphony, displayed versatility in his program comprising Weber's "Oberon," Schumann's Fourth Symphony (taken at a deliberate tempo), Honegger's Symphonic Movement No. 3, Ravel's "Spanish Rhapsody," and Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration." The next day, Beethoven's "Egmont" overture; his Great Fugue, opus 133, and Brahms's Double Concerto for Violin and Cello, played by Joseph Szigeti and Pierre Fournier, and Brahms's Second Symphony comprised a program which revealed the celebrated orchestra and its conductor in a remarkable light.

SAMEDI

[277]

NOUVELLES de HOLLANDE
13, Rue Aubert - IX•
12 MAI 1952

LA MUSIQUE

Le " Nederlands Kamerkoor " à Paris

A Paris, au cours de l'Exposition internationale des Arts intitulée « L'Œuvre du XX• siècle », la chorale de chambre « Nederlands Kamerkoor », dirigée par Félix de Nobel, se fera entendre le 29 mai, à 17 h. 30, à la Comédie des Champs-Elysées.

Au programme :

Musique religieuse pour chœurs a capella : Ildebrando Pizzetti, Michael Tippett, Alexander Tansman, Henk Badings, Anthony Hopkins.

Musique profane pour chœurs a capella : Anton Webern, Claude Delvincourt, Georges Auric, Sem Dresden, Henry Zagwijn.

L'ensemble vocal néerlandais « Nederlands Kamerkoor » jouit d'une grande réputation non seulement aux Pays-Bas, mais aussi au-delà des frontières. Le « Nederlands Kamerkoor » fut constitué en 1937 en vue d'interpréter des cantates de Bach. Dans les années qui suivirent, le répertoire fut complété avec des œuvres a capella.

Des tournées eurent lieu en Belgique, en Angleterre, en Italie et en France.

Le répertoire est très étendu et comprend non seulement des œuvres a capella de diverses époques, mais aussi des œuvres avec orchestre et, en outre, de nombreux chants populaires de tous pays, arrangés par Félix de Nobel, sous la direction duquel la chorale est placée depuis sa fondation, ainsi que des œuvres avec accompagnement de piano.

Plusieurs enregistrements sur disques de cet ensemble ont été réalisés.

Les interprétations les plus remarquées furent notamment celles de plus de soixante psaumes de Sweelinck, de tous les « Petits Concerts Spirituels » de Schütz, de nombreux madrigaux de Monteverdi, de motets de plain-chant de Palestrina, de la « Passion selon Saint Jean » de Bach (en formation réduite), du « Vin herbé » de Franck Martin, de « Maria » de Henk Badings et de « Tre XX canti di Prigionia » de Dallapiccola. Nombreuses furent les œuvres données en première audition par le « Nederlands Kamerkoor ».

Le compositeur WILLEM PIJPER

Au cours du même festival a été exécutée au théâtre des Champs-Elysées par l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, sous la direction de Pierre Monteux, la Troisième Symphonie du compositeur néerlandais Willem Pijper (1894-1947).

Généralement considéré aux Pays-Bas comme le compositeur le plus important de sa génération, Willem Pijper a exercé une influence considérable sur ses jeunes confrères et compatriotes.

Pour divergentes que soient les conceptions et tendances individuelles des compositeurs néerlandais de notre époque, le fait que ceux-ci soient nombreux à reconnaître la place prépondérante occupée par Pijper tient certainement pour une grande part autant à sa valeur indiscutable comme créateur qu'à son caractère dominateur tel qu'il se manifeste dans ses critiques mordantes et éclairées.

L'évolution de Pijper sur le plan musical a été remarquablement rapide. La différence entre sa Première Symphonie, où l'influence de Mahler est manifeste, et sa Deuxième Symphonie, est frappante. Cette évolution s'est encore davantage affirmée au cours des années qui ont suivi la première guerre.

Depuis 1919, Pijper est considéré comme un « a-tonaliste ». Cependant il serait faux de croire qu'il ait délibérément et volontairement abandonné la tonalité. Il semblerait moins inexact de dire qu'une certaine manière polyphonique de penser, un sens particulier de contrepoint, ont infléchi son style harmonique dans le sens de l'a-tonalité.

La bi- ou polytonalité de Pijper aspire toujours à une tonalité harmonique et la complexité de son œuvre à cet égard est exclusivement régie par le souci d'atteindre à une tension psychique maximum.

Car, malgré la sévérité de sa discipline et la rigueur avec laquelle il avait poursuivi le développement de ses idées, Pijper était resté un compositeur de caractère très émotionnel et sa Troisième Symphonie en témoigne tout spécialement.

Composée en 1926, cette symphonie est l'œuvre de ce musicien la plus souvent jouée.

Dédiée à Pierre Monteux, celui-ci en donna la première audition en 1926, avec l'orchestre du Concertgebouw. Elle exige un orchestre de 110 musiciens dont deux pianistes jouant à quatre mains et, particularité rarissime, un mandoliniste. Avec ses successions de tierces, cette symphonie, tant par sa forme que par son contenu (elle ne dure que dix-sept minutes), est extrêmement condensée et d'une exécution semée de grandes difficultés.

Extrait du Journal: Corriere del Ticino
Lugano
12 Mai 1952

Il Congresso per la libertà della cultura e l'opera del XX secolo

(Nostra corrispondenza particolare)

Parigi, maggio 1952

Tutte le più importanti città europee hanno ormai il loro Festival. Parigi è buon ultima venuta nel consesso, ma il Festival che si è iniziato mercoledì sera 30 aprile e che durerà sino al 1 giugno è di un'importanza veramente eccezionale poichè si presenta come una vera revisione dei valori musicali, artistici e letterari non solo di Francia ma del mondo intero. Questa manifestazione posta sotto il patrocinio del Congresso per la libertà della Cultura, ente che intelletuali di diversi paesi hanno fondato nel 1950, ha lo scopo preciso di mostrare la forza, la varietà, la bellezza sopratutto della creazione artistica e spirituale dell'Occidente, protetta, almeno sinora, da ogni servitudine e ogni tirannia. La grande manifestazione parigina ha dato naturalmente il posto d'onore alla musica e dal 30 aprile al 1°giugno ben 14 concerti di musica sinfonica e corale, 8 serate di balletti, 13 rappresentazioni liriche fra cui la creazione di 3 lavori nuovissimi, 7 concerti di musica da camera delizieranno l'udito, l'occhio dello spettatore al teatro dei Campi Elisi, all'Opera, all'Opera Comica, al Palazzo Chaillot e alla Commedia dei Campi Elisi. Quarantadue manifestazioni musicali alle quali vanno uniti gli abituali concerti della Saison de Paris che come ogni anno svolge i suoi fasti in maggio e giugno. I melomani sono abbondantemente serviti e se si pensa che Parigi ospiterà per il Festival la celebre orchestra sinfonica di Boston magistralmente diretta dal prodigioso maestro francese Charles Munch l'orchestra di Berlino Ovest, l'Accademia Santa Cecilia di Roma, il Covent Garden Royal Opera, Londra, l'American National Theâtre col celèbre New York City Ballet, la nostra Orchestra della Suisse Romande diretta dall'acclamato e ormai riconosciuto Maestro Ansermet, si può giudicare l'importanza e il valore di queste manifestazioni artistiche. E se aggiungiamo che al podio direttoriale si succederanno i migliori direttori del mondo, Igor Strawinsky a Parigi dopò 15 anni di assenza, e che dirigerà l'Orchestra della radio francese, Bruno Walter, i due Munch, Monteux Ansermet, Britten, Böehm, Rosbaud, Cloex, Barain, Ferenc, Friesay Markevitch, Darius Milhaud, Craft si immagina facilmente che l'opera musicale del XX. secolo sarà degnamente presentata durante il Festival parigino.

La scelta dei programmi, al dire dei critici, è stata molto laboriosa. E' indubitabile che fu arduo compito per gli organizzatori equilibrare un programma così vasto senza lasciare nell'ombra qualcuno che pure con la sua opera ha marcato con segno possente l'epoca attuale. A una recente conferenza stampa a cui fummo invitati e in cui critiche e suggestioni erano ascoltate e ammesse, i commenti non erano sempre consenzienti; si accennava da diverse parti all'assenza nei programmi delle opere di Saint Saens, per esempio, o di Indy, o di Dukas o di Florent Schmidt. Ci fu chi annunciò di preferire un po' meno di Strawinsky nel programma e un po' più di Fauré malgrado che di quest'ultimo delicato musicista francese si eseguisca durante il Festival e in uno dei concerti da musica da camera, il delizioso Secondo quintetto.

Intato mercoledì 30 aprile ci fu il concerto augurale composto esclusivamente da musica religiosa e dedicato, come diceva il programma ai martiri delle persecuzioni totalitarie del nostro secolo, a quelli che diedero la vita per salvare lo spirito di libertà essenziale per lo sviluppo della cultura. Oltre la Cantata No. 6 e il Magnificat di Bach (e fu idea geniale dei promotori del Festival d'includere nella manifestazione musicale dedicata al secolo XX e senza preoccupazioni anacronistiche, il genio universale del grande Giovanni Sebastiano) venne eseguito in prima audizione a Parigi lo Stabat Mater di Francis Poulenc opera ricca di dolorosa sensibilità, di una tale varietà e rilievo così impressionante da essere ritenuta come il capolavoro del moderno musicista francese. I nostri compatrioti Pierre Mollet e Ernest Haefliger, cantanti ormai famosi, hanno contribuito con la magnificenza della loro arte alla riuscita eccezionale della prima serata del Festival, che gli organizzatori vorrebbero fosse sicura manifestazione del valore della musica contemporanea. Con il concerto del 30 aprile la dimostrazione è sulla buona via e quelli che seguiranno per tutto maggio e nei quali sentiremo anche musiche dei nostri compatrioti Honegger e Fran Martin dirette da Ansermet e di musicisti italiani come Casella, Dallapiccola, Rieti e Malipiero, accresceranno sicuramente il prestigio della manifestazione. In margine alla quale, al Museo dell'arte Moderna sul quai di New York, si è aperta al 7 maggio un'esposizione di pitture che raggruppa opere di pittori contemporanei poco note al pubblico le quali provengono da collezioni private d'America e d'Europa e son dovute al doganiere Rousseau, Seurat, Duchamp, Bonnard, Modigliani, Van Gogh, Picasso, Paul Klee, Soutine, Chagal, Gris, Leger ecc. Contemporaneamente l'esposizione presenterà opere di scultori dei due mondi fra cui Lipschitz, Moore e il nostro Giacometti, grigionese molto noto ormai negli ambienti artistici parigini. Più tardi una cinquantina di scrittori celebri, romanzieri, filosofi, storici parteciperanno alle discussioni e conferenze che un ricco programma prepara per loro nel quadro del Congresso per la libertà della cultura e l'opera del XX secolo. I lavori s'inizieranno al 15 maggio con un'imponente seduta inaugurale nel grande Anfiteatro della Sorbona. Tema «L'écrivain dans la Cité». Denis de Rougemont, presidente del Comitato esecutivo del Festival rappresenterà la Svizzera: Silone, Piovene e Montale, l'Italia.

Il pubblico che seguirà la nostra manifestazione sarà solo giudice per decidere se l'opera del XX secolo è in progresso o, come si dichiara da varie parti, in decadenza — dichiarò Naboov segretario generale del Festival ai giornalisti stranieri riuniti i conferenza stampa al teatro dei Campi Elisi —. In tutti i casi son convinto che quest'esposizione artistica aiuterà il pubblico che vi assisterà a ritrovare la fiducia in sè stesso e sopratutto nella nostra civilizzazione.

ELSA FRANCONI-PORETTI.

SAMEDI 10 - DIMANCHE 11 MAI 1952 FRANCE-TIREUR

N° de débit FRANCE-SOIR
12 MAI 1952
ÉDITION

L'Œuvre du XX• siècle

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

JE mentirais en affirmant que j'ai réellement entendu cette formation fameuse.

N'ayant pas été invité à l'Opéra pour son premier concert, j'ai dû me rabattre sur la radio qui en assurait la retransmission. Je n'ai pas eu l'impression que l'Orchestre de Boston fût supérieur à nos meilleurs ensembles. L'interprétation de « La Mer » de Debussy et de « Daphnis » de Ravel m'a paru assez terne. Faut-il en accuser les musiciens ou leur chef habituel M. Charles Munch ?

Jouant de malchance, je n'ai pas été mieux à même de me faire une opinion, jeudi soir, avenue Montaigne. Placé au premier rang du parterre, tout près des « seconds violons » et contre la porte (d'où je recevais sur la nuque un redoutable courant d'air), je n'ai perçu, outre les bruits du couloir, que de vagues détails des partitions de Williams, Milhaud et W. Schuman, inscrites au programme. Ce serait donc bien téméraire à moi d'en esquisser la moindre analyse.

Qui a dit que persévérer était le fait du diable ? Je prétends avoir montré, au contraire, une angélique patience en restant pour la seconde partie du concert. Il est vrai que, pour tenir, je me suis réfugié dans une baignoire latérale (à peu près vide), où je n'ai pas tout perdu du « Sacre du Printemps » de Strawinsky. M. Pierre Monteux l'a dirigé avec l'exactitude métronomique chère au grand Igor. On eût souhaité peut-être que s'y ajoutât un peu du dynamisme que recèle cette prodigieuse musique.

Mais, encore une fois, auditeur intermittent ou mal informé, je n'ose me prononcer.

L. ALGAZI.

Allô ! Paris... Allô ! Paris... Allô ! Paris...

Von Karajan, le chef d'orchestre volant, va nous présenter l'orchestre le mieux payé du monde

LE chef d'orchestre Herbert von Karajan arrive demain après-midi avec l'orchestre Philharmonia de Londres pour donner deux concerts à Paris le lundi 12 et le mardi 13 mai.

Karajan est un homme dynamique; on pourrait l'appeler le chef d'orchestre volant. Il est parti de Londres jeudi soir après une répétition pour assister au concert de Pierre Monteux et de l'orchestre de Boston. Il est repart hier matin de Paris à la première heure pour être à Londres pour la répétition matinale de ses concerts de la semaine prochaine.

L'orchestre Philharmonia de Londres a été fondé par le Maharadjah de Mysore (qui se trouve actuellement aux Indes). C'est l'orchestre du monde qui comprend le plus de virtuoses connus et où les musiciens sont les mieux payés. Il nous fera entendre, lundi, du Haydn, du Strawinsky et du Tchoïkowsky ; mardi, du Mozart, du Strauss et du Beethoven.

=Le Parisien= 10-5-52

UN ADMIRABLE BRELAN DE CONCERTS

JAMAIS de mémoire d'homme les meilleurs ensembles symphoniques accompagnés de leurs chefs les plus valeureux ne sont venus s'abattre sur notre capitale comme ils le font en ce moment à grands coups d'ailes d'avions. Ils débarquent aussi dans nos ports afin de pouvoir participer à l'Œuvre du XX• siècle. En quelques jours il a été permis d'applaudir le maître Bruno Walter au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées où il fit preuve d'une verdeur étonnante non seulement en conduisant au succès des partitions de Strauss et Mahler, mais mieux encore en dirigeant de mémoire à la répétition générale Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune, de Claude Debussy, qu'il fit travailler avec un soin minutieux, dosant chaque note, chaque nuance. L'orchestre du théâtre national de l'Opéra, il faut le proclamer, joua splendidement ; nous avons là des virtuoses de premier plan.

Puis ce fut Charles Munch qui anima tout d'abord le grand orchestre de Boston sur notre première scène lyrique où des acclamations chaleureuses les accueillirent.

Le même ensemble se rendit deux jours plus tard au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées où il fit entendre sous la baguette vigilante de Pierre Monteux une suite extraite par Darius Milhaud de son ballet Protée et la 3• symphonie de William Schuman, compositeur américain qui assure toujours à ses partitions une solide structure. Certains, je le sais, lui reprochent de trop les étirer en longueur, mais est-ce bien là un défaut ? Malgré ses 77 ans bien sonnés, Pierre Monteux, qui créa jadis Le sacre du printemps de Strawinsky au théâtre et au concert, n'a pas craint de le conduire une fois de plus au triomphe avec une ardeur juvénile. Quel exemple pour les jeunes !

W.-L. LANDOWSKI.

NOUVELLES de HOLLANDE
13, Rue Aubu[illegible] - IX•
12 MAI 1952

LA MUSIQUE

Le " Nederlands Kamerkoor " à Paris

A Paris, au cours de l'Exposition internationale des Arts intitulée « L'Œuvre du XX• siècle », la chorale de chambre « Nederlands Kamerkoor », dirigée par Félix de Nobel, se fera entendre le 29 mai, à 17 h. 30, à la Comédie des Champs-Elysées.

Au programme :

Musique religieuse pour chœurs a capella : Ildebrando Pizzetti, Michael Tippett, Alexander Tansman, Henk Badings, Anthony Hopkins.

Musique profane pour chœurs a capella : Anton Webern, Claude Delvincourt, Georges Auric, Sem Dresden, Henry Zagwijn.

L'ensemble vocal néerlandais « Nederlands Kamerkoor » jouit d'une grande réputation non seulement aux Pays-Bas, mais aussi au-delà des frontières. Le « Nederlands Kamerkoor » fut constitué en 1937 en vue d'interpréter des cantates de Bach. Dans les années qui suivirent, le répertoire fut complété avec des œuvres a capella.

Des tournées eurent lieu en Belgique, en Angleterre, en Italie et en France.

Le répertoire est très étendu et comprend non seulement des œuvres a capella de diverses époques, mais aussi des œuvres avec orchestre et, en outre, de nombreux chants populaires de tous pays, arrangés par Félix de Nobel, sous la direction duquel la chorale est placée depuis sa fondation, ainsi que des œuvres avec accompagnement de piano.

Plusieurs enregistrements sur disques de cet ensemble ont été réalisés.

Les interprétations les plus remarquées furent notamment celles de plus de soixante psaumes de Sweelinck, de tous les « Petits Concerts Spirituels » de Schütz, de nombreux madrigaux de Monteverdi, de motets de plain-chant de Palestrina, de la « Passion selon Saint Jean » de Bach (en formation réduite), du « Vin herbé » de Franck Martin, de « Maria » de Henk Badings et de « Tre XX canti di Prigionia » de Dallapiccola. Nombreuses furent les œuvres données en première audition par le « Nederlands Kamerkoor ».

Le compositeur WILLEM PIJPER

Au cours du même festival a été exécutée au théâtre des Champs-Elysées par l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, sous la direction de Pierre Monteux, la Troisième Symphonie du compositeur néerlandais Willem Pijper (1894-1947).

Généralement considéré aux Pays-Bas comme le compositeur le plus important de sa génération, Willem Pijper a exercé une influence considérable sur ses jeunes confrères et compatriotes.

Pour divergentes que soient les conceptions et tendances individuelles des compositeurs néerlandais de notre époque, le fait que ceux-ci soient nombreux à reconnaître la place prépondérante occupée par Pijper tient certainement pour une grande part autant à sa valeur indiscutable comme créateur qu'à son caractère dominateur tel qu'il se manifeste dans ses critiques mordantes et éclairées.

L'évolution de Pijper sur le plan musical a été remarquablement rapide. La différence entre sa Première Symphonie, où l'influence de Mahler est manifeste, et sa Deuxième Symphonie, est frappante. Cette évolution s'est encore davantage affirmée au cours des années qui ont suivi la première guerre.

Depuis 1919, Pijper est considéré comme un « a-tonaliste ». Cependant il serait faux de croire qu'il ait délibérément et volontairement abandonné la tonalité. Il semblerait moins inexact de dire qu'une certaine manière polyphonique de penser, un sens particulier de contrepoint, ont infléchi son style harmonique dans le sens de l'a-tonalité.

La bi- ou polytonalité de Pijper aspire toujours à une tonalité harmonique et la complexité de son œuvre à cet égard est exclusivement régie par le souci d'atteindre à une tension psychique maximum.

Car, malgré la sévérité de sa discipline et la rigueur avec laquelle il avait poursuivi le développement de ses idées, Pijper était resté un compositeur de caractère très émotionnel et sa Troisième Symphonie en témoigne tout spécialement.

Composée en 1926, cette symphonie est l'œuvre de ce musicien la plus souvent jouée.

Dédiée à Pierre Monteux, celui-ci en donna la première audition en 1926, avec l'orchestre du Concertgebouw. Elle exige un orchestre de 110 musiciens dont deux pianistes jouant à quatre mains et, particularité rarissime, un mandoliniste. Avec ses successions de tierces, cette symphonie, tant par sa forme que par son contenu (elle ne dure que dix-sept minutes), est extrêmement condensée et d'une exécution semée de grandes difficultés.

Extrait du Journal: Corriere del Ticino
Lugano
12 Mai 1952

Il Congresso per la libertà della cultura e l'opera del XX secolo

(Nostra corrispondenza particolare)

Parigi, maggio 1952

Tutte le più importanti città europee hanno ormai il loro Festival. Parigi è buon ultima venuta nel consesso, ma il Festival che si è iniziato mercoledì sera 30 aprile e che durerà sino al 1 giugno è di un'importanza veramente eccezionale poichè si presenta come una vera revisione dei valori musicali, artistici e letterari non solo di Francia ma del mondo intero. Questa manifestazione posta sotto il patrocinio del Congresso per la libertà della Cultura, ente che intellettuali di diversi paesi hanno fondato nel 1950, ha lo scopo preciso di mostrare la forza, la varietà, la bellezza sopratutto della creazione artistica e spirituale dell'Occidente, protetta, almeno sinora, da ogni servitudine e ogni tirannia. La grande manifestazione parigina ha dato naturalmente il posto d'onore alla musica e dal 30 aprile al 1°giugno ben 14 concerti di musica sinfonica e corale, 8 serate di balletti, 15 rappresentazioni liriche fra cui la creazione di 5 lavori nuovissimi, 7 concerti di musica da camera delizieranno l'udito, l'occhio dello spettatore al teatro dei Campi Elisi, all'Opera, all'Opera Comica, al Palazzo Chaillot e alla Commedia dei Campi Elisi. Quarantadue manifestazioni musicali alle quali vanno uniti gli abituali concerti della Saison de Paris che come ogni anno svolge i suoi fasti in maggio e giugno. I melomani sono abbondantemente serviti e se si pensa che Parigi ospiterà per il Festival la celebre orchestra sinfonica di Boston magistralmente diretta dal prodigioso maestro francese Charles Munch l'orchestra di Berlino Ovest, l'Accademia Santa Cecilia di Roma, il Covent Garden Royal Opéra, Londra, l'American National Théâtre col celebre New York City Ballet, la nostra Orchestra della Suisse Romande diretta dall'acclamato e ormai riconosciuto Maestro Ansermet, si può giudicare l'importanza e il valore di queste manifestazioni artistiche. E se aggiungiamo che al podio direttoriale si succederanno i migliori direttori del mondo, Igor Strawinsky a Parigi dopo 15 anni di assenza, e che dirigerà l'Orchestra della radio francese, Bruno Walter, i due Munch, Monteux Ansermet, Britten, Böehm, Rosband, Cloex, Barain, Ferenc, Friesay Markevitch, Darius Milhaud, Craft si immagina facilmente che l'opera musicale del XX. secolo sarà degnamente presentata durante il Festival parigino.

La scelta dei programmi, al dire dei critici, è stata molto laboriosa. E' indubitabile che fu arduo compito per gli organizzatori equilibrare un programma così vasto senza lasciare nell'ombra qualcuno che pure con la sua opera ha marcato con segno possente l'epoca attuale. A una recente conferenza stampa a cui fummo invitati e in cui critiche e suggestioni erano ascoltate e annotate, i commenti non erano sempre consenzienti; si accennava da diverse parti all'assenza nei programmi delle opere di Saint Saens, per esempio, o di Indy, o di Dukas o di Florent Schmidt. Ci fu chi annunciò di preferire un po' meno di Strawinsky nel programma e un po' più di Fauré malgrado che di quest'ultimo delicato musicista francese si eseguisca durante il Festival e in uno dei concerti da musica da camera, il delizioso Secondo quintetto.

Intato mercoledì 30 aprile ci fu il concerto augurale composto esclusivamente da musica religiosa e dedicato, come diceva il programma ai martiri delle persecuzioni totalitarie del nostro secolo, a quelli che diedero la vita per salvare lo spirito di libertà essenziale per lo sviluppo della cultura. Oltre la Cantata No. 6 e il Magnificat di Bach (e fu idea geniale dei promotori del Festival d'includere nella manifestazione musicale dedicata al secolo XX e senza preoccupazioni anacronistiche, il genio universale del grande Giovanni Sebastiano) venne eseguito in prima audizione a Parigi lo Stabat Mater di Francis Poulenc opera ricca di dolorosa sensibilità, di una tale varietà e rilievo così impressionante da essere ritenuta come il capolavoro del moderno musicista francese. I nostri compatrioti Pierre Mollet e Ernest Haefliger, cantanti ormai famosi, hanno contribuito con la magnificenza della loro arte alla riuscita eccezionale della prima serata del Festival, che gli organizzatori vorrebbero fosse sicura manifestazione del valore della musica contemporanea. Con il concerto del 30 aprile la dimostrazione è sulla buona via e quelli che seguiranno per tutto maggio e nei quali sentiremo anche musiche dei nostri compatrioti Honegger e Fran Martin dirette da Ansermet e di musicisti italiani come Casella, Dallapiccola, Rieti e Malipiero, accresceranno sicuramente il prestigio della manifestazione. In margine alla quale, al Museo dell'arte Moderna sul quai di New York, si è aperta al 7 maggio un'esposizione di pitture che raggruppa opere di pittori contemporanei poco note al pubblico le quali provengono da collezioni private d'America e d'Europa e son dovute al doganiere Rousseau, Seurat, Duchamp, Bonnard, Modigliani, Van Gogh, Picasso, Paul Klee, Soutine, Chagal, Gris, Leger ecc. Contemporaneamente l'esposizione presenterà opere di scultori dei due mondi fra cui Lipschitz, Moore e il nostro Giacometti, grigionese molto noto ormai negli ambienti artistici parigini. Più tardi una cinquantina di scrittori celebri, romanzieri, filosofi, storici parteciperanno alle discussioni e conferenze che un ricco programma prepara per loro nel quadro del Congresso per la libertà della cultura e l'opera del XX secolo. I lavori s'inizieranno al 15 maggio con un'imponente seduta inaugurale nel grande Anfiteatro della Sorbona. Tema «L'écrivain dans la Cité». Denis de Rougemont, presidente del Comitato esecutivo del Festival rappresenterà la Svizzera: Silone, Piovene e Montale, l'Italia.

Il pubblico che seguirà la nostra manifestazione sarà solo giudice per decidere se l'opera del XX secolo è in progresso o, come si dichiara da varie parti, in decadenza — dichiarò Nabocv segretario generale del Festival ai giornalisti stranieri riuniti i conferenza stampa al teatro dei Campi Elisi —. In tutti i casi son convinto che quest'esposizione artistica aiuterà il pubblico che vi assisterà a ritrovare la fiducia in sè stesso e sopratutto nella nostra civilizzazione.

ELSA FRANCONI-PORETTI.

SAMEDI 10 - DIMANCHE 11 MAI 1952 FRANC-TIREUR

L'Œuvre du XX• siècle

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

JE mentirais en affirmant que j'ai réellement entendu cette formation fameuse.

N'ayant pas été invité à l'Opéra pour son premier concert, j'ai dû me rabattre sur la radio qui en assurait la retransmission. Je n'ai pas eu l'impression que l'Orchestre de Boston fût supérieur à nos meilleurs ensembles. L'interprétation de « La Mer » de Debussy et de « Daphnis » de Ravel m'a paru assez terne. Faut-il en accuser les musiciens ou leur chef habituel M. Charles Munch ?

Jouant de malchance, je n'ai pas été mieux à même de me faire une opinion, jeudi soir, avenue Montaigne. Placé au premier rang du parterre, tout près des « seconds violons » et contre la porte (d'où je recevais sur la nuque un redoutable courant d'air), je n'ai perçu, outre les bruits du couloir, que de vagues détails des partitions de Williams, Milhaud et W. Schuman, inscrites au programme. Ce serait donc bien téméraire à moi d'en esquisser la moindre analyse.

Qui a dit que persévérer était le fait du diable ? Je prétends avoir montré, au contraire, une angélique patience en restant pour la seconde partie du concert. Il est vrai que, pour tenir, je me suis réfugié dans une baignoire latérale (à peu près vide), où je n'ai pas tout perdu du « Sacre du Printemps » de Strawinsky. M. Pierre Monteux l'a dirigé avec l'exactitude métronomique chère au grand Igor. On eût souhaité peut-être que s'y ajoutât un peu du dynamisme que recèle cette prodigieuse musique.

Mais, encore une fois, auditeur intermittent ou mal informé, je n'ose me prononcer.

L. ALGAZI.

N° de dépôt FRANCE-SOIR
12 MAI 1952
ÉDITION

Allô ! Paris... Allô ! Paris... Allô ! Paris...

Von Karajan, le chef d'orchestre volant, va nous présenter l'orchestre le mieux payé du monde

LE chef d'orchestre Herbert von Karajan arrive demain après-midi avec l'orchestre Philharmonia de Londres pour donner deux concerts à Paris le lundi 12 et le mardi 13 mai.

Karajan est un homme dynamique; on pourrait l'appeler le chef d'orchestre volant. Il est parti de Londres jeudi soir après une répétition pour assister au concert de Pierre Monteux et de l'orchestre de Boston. Il est rentré hier matin de Paris à la première heure pour être à Londres pour la répétition matinale de ses concerts de la semaine prochaine.

L'orchestre Philharmonia de Londres a été fondé par le Maharadjah de Mysore (qui se trouve actuellement aux Indes). C'est l'orchestre du monde qui comprend le plus de virtuoses connus et où les musiciens sont les mieux payés. Il nous fera entendre, lundi, du Haydn, du Strawinsky et du Tchaikowsky ; mardi, du Mozart, du Strauss et du Beethoven.

[278]

Le Parisien 10-5-52

UN ADMIRABLE BRELAN DE CONCERTS

JAMAIS de mémoire d'homme les meilleurs ensembles symphoniques accompagnés de leurs chefs les plus valeureux ne sont venus s'abattre sur notre capitale comme ils le font en ce moment à grands coups d'ailes d'avions. Ils débarquent aussi dans nos ports afin de pouvoir participer à l'Œuvre du XX• siècle. En quelques jours il a été permis d'applaudir le maître Bruno Walter au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées où il fit preuve d'une verdeur étonnante non seulement en conduisant au succès des partitions de Strauss et Mahler, mais mieux encore en dirigeant de mémoire à la répétition générale Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune, de Claude Debussy, qu'il fit travailler avec un soin minutieux, dosant chaque note, chaque nuance. L'orchestre du théâtre national de l'Opéra, il faut le proclamer, joua splendidement ; nous avons là des virtuoses de premier plan.

Puis ce fut Charles Munch qui anima tout d'abord le grand orchestre de Boston sur notre première scène lyrique où des acclamations chaleureuses les accueillirent.

Le même ensemble se rendit deux jours plus tard au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées où il fit entendre sous la baguette vigilante de Pierre Monteux une suite extraite par Darius Milhaud de son ballet Protée et la 3e symphonie de William Schuman, compositeur américain qui assure toujours à ses partitions une solide structure. Certains, je le sais, lui reprochent de trop les étirer en longueur, mais est-ce bien là un défaut ? Malgré ses 77 ans bien sonnés, Pierre Monteux, qui créa jadis Le sacre du printemps de Strawinsky au théâtre et au concert, n'a pas craint de le conduire une fois de plus au triomphe avec une ardeur juvénile. Quel exemple pour les jeunes !

W.-L. LANDOWSKI.

PASTE OVER

EN MARGE DE L'ŒUVRE DU XXe SIECLE

Lettre ouverte de Marc Chagall à Georges Balanchine

Mon cher Balanchine,

Vous venez de présenter à Paris « L'Oiseau de Feu » d'Igor Strawinsky. J'avais créé sous ma supervision personnelle, les décors et costumes de ce ballet à New-York en 1945.

Or, les décors et costumes présentés à Paris par votre Compagnie comme étant mon œuvre n'ont qu'un très lointain rapport avec ceux que j'avais créés en 1945.

Il en résulte pour moi un préjudice artistique très grave et pour le public une tromperie regrettable.

Je suis forcé de rendre cette lettre publique, car vous n'avez pas daigné répondre à mes lettres et démarches antérieures.

Vous saviez que j'étais heureux d'apprendre que vous repreniez la chorégraphie de ce ballet et que j'étais prêt à vous assister à refaire les costumes.

Je vous avais proposé dans ce but ma collaboration la plus étroite et la plus désintéressée. Vous n'avez tenu aucun compte de mes propositions et inquiétudes.

Le résultat est là : les nouveaux costumes sont une outrageante caricature de ceux que j'avais créés. En effet, les costumes originaux ont été conçus par moi en fonction du livret et des décors : cette ordonnance a maintenant entièrement disparu. Je ne vous parle déjà plus des décors : ils sont trahis par l'éclairage et par un rythme pour lequel ils n'avaient pas été créés.

Dans ces conditions, j'exige que vous retiriez mon nom (en ce qui concerne les costumes de « L'Oiseau de Feu ») de vos affiches, programmes et publicité, aussi bien en France qu'en tous autres pays.

Avec tous mes regrets.

Marc CHAGALL.

— COMBAT Mardi 20 mai 1952

MUSIQUE

Charles Munch à Strasbourg

Strasbourg 18 mai. — Dirigeant le Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch a obtenu hier soir à Strasbourg, sa ville natale, un succès triomphal.

Au programme du concert figuraient une Ouverture du compositeur américain Samuel Barber, La Symphonie pour cordes d'Arthur Honegger, la Deuxième Suite de Bacchus et Ariane d'Albert Roussel et la Quatrième Symphonie de Brahms.

M. Pierre Pflimlin, ministre de la France d'Outre-Mer, et de nombreuses personnalités du département ont assisté au concert.

COMBAT Jeudi 15 mai 1952

★ L'Orchestre Symphonique de Boston, sous la direction de M. Charles Munch, donnera un concert unique, le 21 mai 1952, à 21 heures, au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées. Au programme la « 4e Symphonie » de Brahms.

Ce concert est placé sous le patronage de l'Association française des « Amis de la Liberté » et des organisations syndicales libres.

Le Boston Symphony Orchestra

avec Charles Munch et Pierre Monteux

par Marcel SCHNEIDER

L'ORCHESTRE le plus réputé des Etats-Unis, le Boston Symphony Orchestra, s'est produit pour la première fois en France et en Europe : à l'Opéra, sous la direction de Charles Münch, au Théâtre des Champs-Elysées deux jours plus tard sous celle de Pierre Monteux. On devine quel événement ce fut pour nous. Je ne dirai pas la surprise, car les disques nous avaient déjà révélé le remarquable ensemble que constituent les musiciens de cet orchestre, mais l'admirative stupeur que nous ont donnée ces deux soirées.

Si l'expression ensemble de virtuoses solistes a un sens, c'est dans le cas du Boston Orchestra qu'il faut l'employer. Jamais on ne voit en France pareille constellation : on en est ébloui. Il faudrait citer tous les violons, tous les bois, tous les cuivres, sans omettre la batterie. Contentons-nous de nommer les étoiles de première grandeur : le violoniste Richard Burgin, le flûtiste Georges Laurent, l'extraordinaire trompettiste Roger Voisin et le timbalier Roman Szulc. On aura remarqué que ces noms sonnent familièrement à nos oreilles : sur la centaine de musiciens du Boston Orchestra, on compte vingt-quatre Français. De quoi flatter notre orgueil ! L'admirable est que ces virtuoses se soumettent à une discipline générale et que l'orchestre, en dépit de tant d'éclats particuliers, brille d'un éclat unique.

Les deux chefs qui le dirigent sont aussi différents que possible ; ils n'ont qu'un point commun : l'excellence. Charles Münch incarne la fougue, le lyrisme et la couleur ; Pierre Monteux, la présence d'esprit, le sang-froid, la plus grande économie de gestes pour obtenir le maximum d'effets. Le premier semble diriger avec une lance, le second avec un crayon ; Münch, grand, mince, élégant, joue de tout son corps ; Monteux, petit, immobile et corpulent, ne fait qu'un avec le socle. Magnétisé par deux hommes aussi dissemblables, le Boston Symphony Orchestra se métamorphose : masse vibrante, houleuse et bigarrée avec celui-là, il devient avec celui-ci un instrument de précision.

—:—

Le premier concert était courtoisement consacré à la musique française : Honegger, Roussel, Debussy, Ravel. Münch donna à la Deuxième Symphonie de Honegger une vibration et une grandeur religieuse qui ont renouvelé l'œuvre. On se doute que dans le fameux appel de trompette au cours du final, Roger Voisin fit merveille. Sous la baguette du prestigieux chef d'orchestre, Bacchus et Ariane se montra ce qu'il est réellement : un chef d'œuvre d'instrumentation et de rythme. Il se pourrait bien que les générations futures placent Roussel avant Ravel. La Mer, prise d'une façon étincelante et rapide, surprit bien un peu, surtout si on comparait cette interprétation à celle d'Inghelbrecht ! Le triomphe de Münch fut la deuxième suite de Daphnis et Chloé ; on s'attendait à ce triomphe, qui ne comporta point de réserves.

Comme une maîtresse de maison se pare de peu de bijoux pour ne pas éclipser ses invitées, le Boston Symphony Orchestra, qui « recevait », avait inscrit au début de chaque partie du programme d'inoffensives œuvres américaines : une aimable ouverture de Samuel Barber et une sage toccata de Walter Piston.

—:—

Le second concert, dirigé par Monteux, était composé de façon moins cohérente : une œuvre de Ralph Vaughan Williams, qui appartenait plus au XIXe siècle qu'au XXe siècle ; la stimulante suite de Protée de Milhaud, dont on comprend mal qu'elle ait tellement pu choquer les auditeurs de 1920, et la Troisième Symphonie de William Schuman qui ravira tous ceux qui manquent de vie intérieure: c'est du vide et du bruit mélangés à doses égales selon les recettes de l'académisme moderne. Mais quels artistes exige son exécution ! Il ne faut rien de moins que les cuivres et les bois de cet orchestre exceptionnel pour dominer une pareille partition.

Heureusement, venait le Sacre du Printemps, joué dans le même théâtre, avec le même chef d'orchestre, trente-neuf ans auparavant, le 28 mai 1913. Bien sûr, je n'ai pas assisté à cette mémorable première, mais le Sacre du 8 mai 1952, exécuté dans de pareilles conditions et en présence de l'auteur, ne fut pas moins mémorable. Nous savions tous que le Sacre était l'œuvre capitale des premières années du siècle, nous avons eu l'illusion l'autre soir d'en faire la naïve découverte. Tous les spectateurs debout applaudissant et acclamant Strawinsky, une salle entière transportée, hors d'elle-même Pierre Monteux et le Boston Symphony Orchestra comme accablés sous les bravos et les rappels, ce sont là des impressions qui se marquent d'un trait définitif dans la mémoire.

Continental DAILY MAIL

TUESDAY, MAY 27, 1952 3

Bicycles delay a symphony concert

DRESS SUITS IN A ROAD RACE

Daily Mail Reporter

A bicycle race in France delayed the start of a symphony concert in London last night and forced the BBC to rearrange the Third Programme.

The concert—in the Royal Festival Hall—was the first and only one by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Britain. But the orchestra's instruments, dress clothes and music failed to arrive in time for the rehearsal that was to have been held yesterday morning.

All the baggage was in two lorries which set out from Bordeaux for Paris, to catch a boat-train. But before the lorries had travelled very far they caught up with a bicycle race. For mile after mile they had to crawl behind the cyclists.

Then at last they were able to make a detour and, putting on speed, made a dash for Paris. The first lorry, carrying most of the instruments, arrived just in time to make the train connection. But the second lorry, containing six double-basses, the dress suits and the music was left well behind.

Frantic conferences

When it was learned in London what had happened there were frantic conferences among Mr George H. Judd, general manager of the orchestra, Mr T. E. Bean general manager of the Royal Festival Hall, and representatives of Messrs. Harold Holt, the impresarios, and of the BBC.

It was decided to postpone the start of the concert from 8 pm until 9 pm. The BBC agreed to rearrange their Third Programme schedule so that the whole of it could still be broadcast.

Meanwhile, in Paris, the contents of the second lorry were being loaded on to the Golden Arrow, due at Victoria, London, at 7.30 last night.

It was arranged that the dress suits should be rushed first to the concert hall from Victoria so that the orchestra's 104 players and their conductor, Charles Munch, who arrived from the Continent on Sunday, could change while the instruments and music were on the way.

[279]

L'œuvre du XX^e siècle

AINSI que nous l'avons déjà annoncé, le concert inaugural de l'Œuvre du xx^e siècle s'est déroulé le 30 avril en l'église Saint-Roch. Le chroniqueur musical de la Croix rendra compte des principaux concerts et représentations lyriques qui marqueront les étapes de cette vaste rétrospective musicale, picturale et littéraire.

L'Œuvre du xx^e siècle se propose, en effet, de dresser un bilan, de procéder à une sorte de revision des valeurs culturelles qui jalonnent le demi-siècle écoulé et formeront les lignes de faîte du demi-siècle à venir.

En dépit d'une importante Exposition de peintures et de nombreux débats littéraires, la musique a la part belle au sein de l'Œuvre du xx^e siècle. Durant tout le mois de mai, seront donnés dans la capitale 42 manifestations musicales, soit 14 concerts de musique symphonique et chorale, 8 soirées de ballets, 13 représentations lyriques, 7 séances de musique de chambre. Le Théâtre et la Comédie des Champs-Elysées, l'Opéra, l'Opéra-Comique et le Palais de Chaillot seront les cadres de ces manifestations.

Parmi les formations de réputation mondiale venues à Paris à cette occasion, citons l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston, l'Orchestre de la Suisse romande, l'Orchestre de Berlin-Ouest, l'Academia di Santa-Cecilia, le Covent Garden Royal Opera, l'Opéra et l'Orchestre philharmonique de Vienne et l'American National Theatre accompagné du New-York City Ballet.

Enfin, de nombreuses personnalités du monde musical contemporain sont arrivées ou attendues dans nos murs : elles dirigeront leurs œuvres au pupitre. C'est ainsi que Igor Strawinsky et Charles Münch, Bruno Walter, Monteux, Ansermet, Britten, Boëhm et Rosbaud nous font l'honneur de leur présence.

Il est encore trop tôt pour porter un jugement d'ensemble sur la valeur et peut-être les lacunes de l'initiative du Congrès pour la liberté de la culture. Mais on peut, dès à présent, souligner l'intérêt de semblables manifestations et l'importance d'une synthèse fructueuse à bien des égards.

Nous avons pensé rendre service à nos lecteurs en publiant, dans un de nos prochains numéros, des notices consacrées aux grands chefs d'orchestre venus présenter l'Œuvre du xx^e siècle.

BUREAU INTERNATIONAL
DE DOCUMENTATION
15, Rue du Dragon — PARIS-6e
C. C. P. PARIS C 2107-84 - TÉL. : LIT 70-89

LES NOUVELLES LITTÉRAIRES, PARIS
15 MAI 1952

L'Orchestre de Boston à Paris

Une page du journal suffirait à peine à rendre compte des manifestations musicales de première grandeur qui se déroulent à Paris chaque semaine de ce mois de mai. La majeure partie s'inscrit dans le cadre de l'Œuvre au XX^e siècle.

A la considération de ce qui nous y est donné d'excellent, je n'insisterai pas sur le regret que doivent légitimement inspirer des omissions dont les plus marquantes, pour la zone française, sont celles de Dukas et de Florent Schmitt, face à l'admission de tels jeunes espoirs de qui le génie n'éclate qu'aux yeux d'un très petit nombre d'initiés, violemment convaincus il est vrai.

Deux concerts ont mis en valeur le splendide Boston Symphony Orchestra, dirigé une fois par son chef titulaire, Charles Münch, l'autre par Pierre Monteux. L'apport américain de ces deux soirées était assez inégal. La Toccata de Walter Piston et la III^e Symphonie de William Schuman sont de l'ouvrage bien fait, dans un style de transition exposé à vieillir vite. Bien plus intéressante est l'ouverture de L'Ecole de la médisance, de Samuel Barber. Si le début recourt à un certain nombre d'ingrédients dûment catalogués auxquels les compositeurs d'aujourd'hui attribuent le pouvoir d'exprimer la fantaisie et le sarcasme, dès l'entrée d'un thème simple et charmant exposé par le cor anglais, une inspiration authentique se révèle, qui coulera de source jusqu'à la fin, alternativement lyrique ou d'un humour qui ne doit plus rien aux formules.

Quant au reste des deux programmes, Münch avait choisi la Symphonie pour cordes, d'Honegger, la II^e suite de Bacchus et Ariane, d'Albert Roussel, La Mer, de Debussy, Daphnis et Cloé, de Ravel. Il nous est apparu encore grandi, avec un potentiel d'enthousiasme intact, mais qui n'a plus besoin, pour galvaniser l'orchestre, que de gestes souvent à peine amorcés, d'autant plus impérieux et précis. Que n'étaient-ils là, les singes de son ancienne manière, qui ont cru capter le secret de ses interprétations en forçant ce que sa mimique avait alors d'exubérant ! Ils l'auraient vu, ce mercredi, obtenir, presque immobile pendant des mesures, dans Roussel et dans Ravel, le maximum possible d'intensité et d'acuité. Mais le summum de l'émotion, l'auditoire unanime l'a éprouvé à la fin de la Symphonie d'Honegger. Pour l'orchestre, pour le chef, pour le compositeur présent, des applaudissements comme ceux qui ont éclaté sur les dernières notes du choral doivent compenser bien des jours de recherches, de doutes, de travail obstiné !

Semblable ovation est allée à Pierre Monteux, après une inoubliable exécution du Sacre du printemps, dirigé par cœur, avec une sûreté et une simplicité qui, visiblement, ont forcé l'admiration des exécutants, aussi démonstratifs que le public. Savoureuse revanche pour celui qui, il y a trente-neuf ans, imposait cette partition à la cabale déchaînée. Revanche d'une autre sorte, d'une ironie assez mélancolique — que ces acclamations sans fin saluant, à Paris, un chef que les Parisiens se sont obstinés à méconnaître jusqu'au jour où les échos de sa gloire leur sont revenus d'Amérique.

Avant Le Sacre, Monteux avait, en première partie du programme, conduit la grave Fantaisie pour cordes de Vaughan Williams sur un thème de Tallis, la suite de Protée, qui est d'excellent Milhaud, et la Symphonie précitée de William Schuman.

Tout au long des deux soirées, le Boston Symphony Orchestra, où figurent vingt-trois de nos compatriotes, a fait admirer une virtuosité, une puissance, une cohésion qui le classent parmi les tout premiers ensembles du monde. On a surtout loué le trompette solo Roger Voisin. Le flûtiste Georges Laurent, le cor anglais L. Speyer, le basson R. Allar, l'alto Joseph de Pasquale ne m'ont pas paru moins remarquables.

●

Dans les quelques lignes qui me restent, il serait impertinent de bouler la relation de l'opéra de Rieti, Don Perlimplin, qu'encadraient deux ballets, Cordelia (argument et musique de Sauguet) et Coup de feu (argument de Cassandre, musique de Georges Auric). J'en note seulement au passage le franc succès, en attendant l'occasion de revenir sur ce spectacle.

Mais il y aurait injustice à passer sous silence un concert extérieur au cycle de l'Œuvre du XX^e siècle, de format certes plus réduit, mais d'une qualité exquise. Sous l'impulsion d'un musicien sensible autant que cultivé, Franco Maria Saraceni, le sextuor vocal Luca Marenzio nous a offert une soirée de madrigaux de la Renaissance italienne, chantés à la façon ancienne, les interprètes assis autour d'une table, sous la lampe, faisant de la musique, comme entre soi. Parmi les œuvres exécutées, l'émouvant Ecco mormorar l'onde, de Monteverdi, des pièces d'Agazzari, Claudio Marini, Marenzio, et un très surprenant madrigal d'Adriano Banchieri, connu surtout comme organiste et théoricien : ce Festino della sera del Giovedi grasso est une suite de petites pièces reliées par un canevas dit par un récitant, chaque pièce constituant un tableautin humoristique d'une justesse de touche et d'une prestesse inégalables, et de quelle variété ! Sont portraiturés les petits vieux de Chiozza, les petites villageoises, les étourdis, les balourds, les marchands de fuseaux, la tante Bernardina contant une histoire, les animaux s'essayant au contrepoint, ces charges coupées d'intermèdes lyriques, Madrigal à un doux rossignol, Canzonetta des amants pleins d'une intime poésie. Les six chanteurs ont donné de ce curieux chef-d'œuvre une interprétation vocalement parfaite, et qui était la vie même. Quand le chant a cappella atteint ce degré de liberté, cette vivacité et cette couleur, on a l'impression que la musique ancienne, enfin, a retrouvé son âme.

Marc PINCHERLE.

[280]

Extrait du Journal: 27. April 1952
Die Woche, Olten

Mai in Paris:

GROSSTADTFRÜHLING

Es gibt zwei Zeiten im Jahr, da sich die geistige Atmosphäre der Weltstadt Paris erhitzt. Ende Oktober-Anfang November ist die eine. Täglich geht's da von Vernissagen zu Premièren. Der gewaltige Anlauf zu einer neuen Saison wirft einen in atemraubenden Betrieb. Noch ist alles in Gärung; heute trifft man es ausgezeichnet, morgen fällt man bodenlos herein. Dann folgen die Herbst- und Wintermonate. Das Gute bewährt sich und bildet den Grundstock des Jahresprogramms; das Schlechte ist rasch ausgeschieden, das Mittelmäßige verschwindet allmählich. Die Theater mit den bleibenden Stücken

Silvia Monfort in »Elektra« — Théâtre des Noctambules

sind allabendlich ausverkauft; die jungen Künstler, die etwas Neues bringen und etwas Wesentliches zu sagen haben, sind bekannt und bald auch anerkannt.

Dies ist die Situation vor Ostern. Dann setzt, damit der Geist nicht erlahme, ein neuer Schwung alles wieder in Bewegung. Gleichzeitig durcheilt Paris, von leichten Winden belebt, von frischem Grün belaubt, seine schönste Zeit: den zart blühenden Großstadtfrühling. Die Luft wirkt so bezaubernd, daß man kaum mehr zu schlafen braucht. In leiser Berauschung spaziert man längs der Seine, überquert die großen Plätze, verweilt auf den versteckten kleinen und gerät endlich in die Gärten zu spielenden Kindern und lächelnden Frauen. Und gleich daneben lockt die

KUNST

Im Louvre ist der Saal mit den Venezianern des 16. Jahrhunderts neu eröffnet. Bei den Impressionisten im Jeu de Paume findet man gleich links nach der Eingangshalle einen neuen Saal mit der Sammlung Gachet. Es handelt sich nicht bloß um bisher noch nicht öffentlich ausgestellte, fast unbekannte Bilder — darunter ein spätes Meisterwerk Van Goghs: »Die Kirche von Auvers-sur-Oise« —, sondern um Dokumente und Gegenstände, die von den Impressionisten und ihrem Freund, dem Docteur Gachet, erzählen, wie etwa die blaue Delfter Vase, die in Cézannes Stilleben erscheint. Andere impressionistische Bilder von Monet, Pissarro und Renoir sind in einem neuen Saal des Musée Marmottan (2, rue Louis-Boilly) Donnerstag- und Sonntagnachmittag zu sehen. Schließlich werden in einem Flügel des Louvre, dem Pavillon de Marsan (107, rue de Rivoli), 200 moderne Bilder aus Privatbesitz gezeigt, an denen sich die jüngste Entwicklung der französischen Malerei in wenigen Sälen auf unterhaltsame Weise verfolgen läßt. Wem mag dieser Chagall gehören? Hätten Sie diesen Matisse auch gekauft? (Die Besitzer bleiben nämlich aus Fiskalangst sehr bescheiden anonym.)

Die Orangerie der Tuilerien bietet eine thematische Ausstellung: das Stilleben. Nach einer sorgsamen Auswahl aus den früheren Jahrhunderten kommt das Schaffen der Gegenwart stark zur Geltung. Wer Paris ein wenig kennt, weiß, daß die Kunst in allen ihren Ausdrucksformen außerdem noch in einem Dutzend anderer Museen vorbildlich vertreten ist. Kunstfreunde möchten jeweils am liebsten nicht mehr wegfahren.

BÜHNE

Den Theaterliebhabern sei empfohlen, sich die hervorragenden Leistungen des Théâtre National Populaire anzusehen, das unter Jean Vilars kühner Leitung schon nach wenigen Monaten im wahrsten Sinne des Wortes zu einem Brennpunkt der dramatischen Kunst geworden ist. »Le Cid«, mit Gérard Philipe in der Titelrolle, zeigt, wie lebendig die Klassik bleibt, wenn man sie unverfälscht in den Sprechstil unserer Zeit zu übertragen versteht. Äußerst lehrreich ist auch Kleists »Prinz von Homburg« in ganz französischer Interpretation. Am 2. Mai gibt dieses Theater eine Première, Pichettes »Nuclea«. Das durch und durch gegenwärtige Stück und Alexander Calders Bühnenbilder versprechen ein Ereignis von revolutionärer Bedeutung. Die Comédie Française hat ihrerseits Pirandellos einst auch epochemachendes Stück »Six personnes en quête d'auteur« in ihren Spielplan aufgenommen. Ledoux als zwiespältiger Vater hinterläßt eine bleibende Erschütterung.

Zwei der bereits eingespielten Stücke bieten einen ganz starken Tabak (also nicht für zarte Gemüter, aber für robuste Naturen!): Marcel Aymés »La tête des autres«, eine Satire gegen die Justizskandale, und Jean-Bernard Lucs »La Feuille de Vigne«, eine saftige Verhöhnung amerikanischer sogenannter Sexual-Reformen. Beide derb, aber kerngesund. Mehr philosophisch und kulturhistorisch interessierte Köpfe werden aus Thierry Maulniers »Le Profanateur« Freude und Gewinn ziehen. André Roussins »Une grande fille toute simple«, des Autors bestes Stück, ist ein Musterbeispiel echt französischen Theaters: spielerisch und doch eindrücklich. Für ernste Menschen identifiziert sich Silvia Monfort im winzigen Théâtre des Noctambules mit Sophokles' »Elektra«. Clavels vorzügliche Neu-Übersetzung läßt uns die griechische Tragödie wie gegenwärtiges Schicksal miterleiden. Ein literarisches Kabarett sei noch besonders hervorgehoben: La Fontaine des quatre saisons (59, rue de Grenelle), wo zwischen 10 Uhr abends und 2 Uhr in der Frühe mehr Kunst verschwendet, Witz verschleudert und Geist versprüht wird als anderswo in einem ganzen Jahr.

Der Pariser Frühling mit seiner süßen Verwirrung

Der internationale Kongreß für die Freiheit der Kultur hat unter dem Motto »Das Werk des 20. Jahrhunderts« ausgerechnet für Mai 1952 eine ganze Reihe künstlerischer Manifestationen vorgesehen. Aus der Alten und der Neuen Welt kommen Dirigenten, Solisten, Tänzer, Chöre und Orchester nach Paris. Aus dem zwei Seiten langen Programm seien nur Igor Strawinsky, Georg Balanchine, das New York City Ballet, Bruno Walter, Benjamin Britten genannt. Parallel dazu wird eine internationale Ausstellung zeitgenössischer Kunst veranstaltet.

Diese auswählende Vorschau sei bloß ein Hinweis auf den Reichtum, auf die Überfülle künstlerischer Veranstaltungen, aus welcher der Besucher nächsten Monat in Paris nach seinem Geschmack und seinen Gelüsten zu wählen haben wird.

Marcel Pobé

BLANK PAGE

Salute From the Berkshires
To the Boston Symphony Orchestra

FOR the first time since its return from a triumphal tour of Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be at full strength at Thursday night's opening concert of the 1952 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. The evening will be in the nature of a Berkshire tribute to the orchestra which has brought fame, summer visitors and a wealth of fine music to the county. As its contribution to this pleasant event, The Eagle herewith presents the pictures and brief biographies of the men whose combined musicianship makes the Boston Symphony one of the world's great orchestras, if not the greatest.

Reproduced by permission. Copr. 1951 The New Yorker Magazine, Inc.

AMERICA'S PLAYGROUNDS

Concert at Tanglewood

Raymond Allard, principal bassoon. A native of Din-le-Noble, France, he studied at Douai Conservatory. After winning first prize at the Paris Conservatory in 1922 he joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Monteux. Teaching at the New England and Conservatories, he likes to fish, take pictures and practice carpentry.

Louis Artieres, viola. Son of an opera singer in Lyon, France, he won the Paris Conservatory first prize in 1920. He played in the Colonne Orchestra for a year until he joined the BSO and the Longy School faculty. His hobbies are photography and fishing. Brought up in Paris, he went through the World War and received the croix de guerre at Verdun. He is known for his good nature.

Albert Yves Bernard, viola. After graduating with a law degree from Chaptal College in Paris, where he was born, he won first prize and first mention in viola at the Conservatory and a medal in solfeggio. Before he joined the BSO in 1925 he played in the Paris Opera Orchestra and the Oberdoerffer Quartet. When he isn't teaching, playing chamber music or the treble viol in the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, he cooks and raises cacti.

John Barwicki, double bass. Born in Boston, he attended South Boston High School and the New England Conservatory, coming to the Berkshires with the first Festival orchestra in 1936 and playing in Arthur Fiedler's first Esplanade Concert Orchestra in 1929. He likes to swim, ice skate, take pictures; to attend concerts, lectures and plays. He has a young son and daughter.

Stanley Benson, first violin section. A native of Brockton, whose mother was an amateur violinist, he joined the BSO six years ago. He has played in the Zimbler Sinfonietta and taught privately. His hobby is the study of violins and bows, of which he has a fine collection. His violin, made by Jean Baptiste Vuillaume of Paris in 1860 is one of the finest.

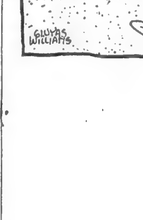
Melvin H. Bryant, second violin section. Born in Somerville, of parents who were amateur musicians, he joined the BSO in 1918 after studying under Karl Scheurer, Alexander Ribarsch and Earl Rissland, members of the orchestra. His hobbies are rose growing and genealogy.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster. Born in Warsaw, Poland, he studied, with Lotto, Joachim in Berlin and Leopold Auer in Leningrad. His first public appearance was at the age of 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He has been concertmaster and soloist of the Leningrad, Helsinki, Christiania and Stockholm Orchestras, serving under Fiedler, Nikisch, Richard Strauss, Schneevoigt and Sibelius. He became concertmaster of the BSO in 1920, organizing the Burgin String Quartet the following year. Last year he became conductor of the Portland (Maine) Orchestra. He is associate conductor of the BSO, which he has led many times. He is married to Ruth Posselt, a concert violinist. They have two young children.

Jean M. Cauhape, viola. Born in Toulouse, France, he attended theological school and the Toulouse and Paris Conservatories, where he was awarded first prize for viola. His mother was an amateur pianist. He joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1925.

Harold Farberman, percussion player. He was born in New York of a family who were musicians as far back as his great-grandparents in Europe. His father and brothers are also drummers. Granted a scholarship at the Juilliard School of Music, he became the youngest snare drummer at the age of 20 at Radio City Music Hall. In the past season he accompanied a friend seeking a position in the BSO and took it himself instead. He owns a Billy Gladstone custom built drum, the "Strad" of snare drums. His hobby is rooting for the New York Giants.

Gino B. Cioffi, principal clarinet. Distantly related to Pasquale Cioffi of 254 Dalton Avenue, Pittsfield, he was born in Naples of a musical family. Beginning music at the age of seven, he studied with Piccone and Carpio at the Naples Conservatory, graduating when he was 17. Since coming to America he has played solo clarinet with leading orchestras, including those of Radio City, New York, Cleveland, the Metropolitan Opera and NBC under Toscanini. His clarinet is considered one of the finest in the world. One son, who is a graduate of the Juilliard School, is assistant first clarinet in the Army Band in Washington. Another is in the Arkansas Army Band.

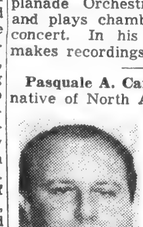


Harry Ellis Dickson, first violin. Born in Cambridge, he graduated from the New England Conservatory and won a scholarship at the Hochschule for Musik in Berlin. Joining the BSO in 1938, he is a member of the Boston Conservatory String Quartet and the Zimbler Sinfonietta and conducts the Providence Civic Orchestra. He has an interesting violin made in Milan in 1755 by Jean Baptiste Guadagnini which was exhibited at the Brooklyn Museum in 1935. He collects anecdotes about musicians and conductors.

Theodore E. Brewster, bassoon. Born in Cleveland Heights, Ohio, he graduated from the New England Conservatory, studying with Ernst Panenka and Raymond Allard of the BSO, Dall Fields of Chicago, Simon Kovac of New York and Saul Schoenback of Philadelphia. He was a student at the Berkshire Music Center in 1947 and 1949, when he joined the orchestra. He is a golfer.

Paul Cherkassky, violin. Born in Odessa, he attended conservatories there and in Leningrad, where he played with the opera orchestra. He was later concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra and conducted the Helsinki National Opera. Joining the BSO in 1923, he has led the Pops and Esplanade Orchestras. He teaches and plays chamber music and in concert. In his leisure time he makes recordings.

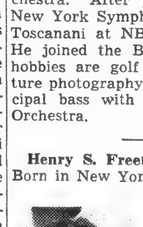
Pasquale A. Cardillo, clarinet. A native of North Adams, where his family live, he graduated from Drury High School and the New England Conservatory of Music. He joined the BSO in 1939, and teaches clarinet at the New England Conservatory and Boston University. He is a member of the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble who will play tonight at the Berkshire Music Center. His hobbies are trout fishing and Italian cooking.



Hippolyte E. Droeghmans, cello. Born in Liege, Belgium, he studied at the Conservatory in Paris, where he won first prize, under Martin Pierre Marsick, teacher of Thibaud, Enesco and Monteux. He played cello solos with the Concerts Colonne, Paris, and the Grand Opera, Nice. His cello was made in Genoa in 1745 by Bernadus Calcanius.

Henry Greenberg, double bass. Born in Warsaw, Poland, his father was a band leader, his mother a pianist and four brothers professional musicians. He studied at the Warsaw Conservatory, where he was awarded an old Italian instrument as a prize. He has played with the Warsaw Imperial Opera, and Philharmonic Orchestra and came to this country at the invitation of Gabrilowitsch to join the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. After playing with the New York Symphony he was with Toscanani at NBC for five years. He joined the BSO in 1939. His hobbies are golf and moving picture photography. His son is principal bass with the Kansas City Orchestra.

Henry S. Freeman, double bass. Born in New York City, he graduated from Eastman School of Music with highest honors. His father had been concert soloist of the Grenadier Guards Band in London, later playing in this country with Sousa and Pryor and later as first trumpet in the Eastman Theatre. He was offered the principal chair in the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra by Jose Iturbi before joining the BSO in 1945. His wife, also an Eastman graduate, was active as a violinist in Rochester. He has just acquired the famous English "Dodd" bass, known for its enormous, beautiful tone.



George Humphrey, viola. Born and brought up in Ohio, he was employed in a railroad shop until he was 26, when he was given a ticket for a Kreisler recital. He was so deeply impressed that he took his first lesson on the violin and continued the study at the New England Conservatory. Later he switched to the viola. He left the Minneapolis Orchestra to join the BSO in 1934. He makes violins, violas and bows in his leisure time. One of his violas won an award in an exhibition of instruments made by contemporary craftsman.

Paul Fedorovsky, first violin. He attended the Academy of Music in Vienna, high school in Russia and was two years at the University of Zurich, Switzerland. After earning a diploma at the Russian Conservatory he took a concert tour through Siberia, China and Japan, and joined the BSO in 1925. He teaches at the New England Conservatory, and plays pardessus de viol as a member of the Society of Ancient Instruments. He has a fine violin made by Carlo Antonio Testore.

Enrico E. Fabrizio, cello. Born in Boston, he studied there and in Europe and toured the United States and Canada at the age of 17 as soloist. A member of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra when offered a position with the Philadelphia and Boston Orchestras in 1918, he chose the latter. He teaches at the Beaver Country Day School and concertizes. He owns a Roggieri made in 1671 and a Tourte bow, but plays a cello that he made himself in 1940.

Armando Ghitalla, trumpet. Born in Alpha, Ill., he studied at the Juilliard School of Music and played with the New York City Center Opera and Ballet Company, the RCA Orchestra and the Houston Symphony Orchestra. He joined the BSO last year. He is a favorite Pops performer. The hit of an end of season concert this spring was a stunt in which he and Roger Voisin dressed as old-time musicians.

Henri Girard, double bass. Born in France, he was a prize student at the Paris Conservatory. A member of the orchestra who played under Monteux when he introduced Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring" 39 years ago, he joined the BSO in 1920 when Monteux was conductor. He is a member of the Lake Placid Ensemble, the Flute Club Players and Arthur Fiedler's Symphonietta. His hobby is old books. He owns two double basses—a Sfretchner made in 1790 and a Tyrolian made in 1784.

Ralph Gomberg, principal oboe. A Bostonian by birth, he has two sisters and three brothers who are professional musicians. At the age of 17 he was appointed first oboe for Stokowski's All-American Youth Orchestra. He played solo oboe for the New York City Center Symphony under Leonard Bernstein and first oboe with the Baltimore Symphony and Mutual Broadcasting Orchestras. He is a graduate of the Curtis Institute.

Samuel Leon Gorodetzky, second violin. A Frenchman by birth, he graduated from the New England Conservatory where he held a scholarship. He studied piano, but specialized in violin with Gruenberg, Winternitz and Witek, giving many recitals and concerts. He teaches and coaches violin, and in his spare time tries his hand at sculpture, painting and photography, saving some for out of door sports.

Joseph dePasquale, first viola. Born in Philadelphia of a musical family, he was first taught by his father, a professional violinist. His course at the Curtis Institute was interrupted by the war, during which he played in the Marine Band and Symphony Orchestra. With the latter he appeared often at the White House to play for state dinners, including those for Churchill and DeGaulle. Appointed first violinist with the BSO at the age of 27, he was the youngest to occupy that position in a major orchestra. He is married to a niece of Mrs. Koussevitzky, on whose estate they are living this summer with two daughters, aged six and two years.

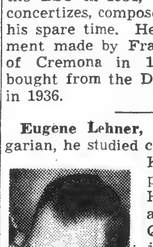
Einar Bech Hansen, first violin. Born in Copenhagen, he studied at Hamburg Conservatory under Max Fiedler on a full scholarship and in Berlin. He was concertmaster of the Bremen and Dresden Orchestras and made several tours through Sweden and Russia, joining the BSO in 1926. His outside interests are chess, Hindu philosophy, psychology and winter bathing. He owns a Guarnerius violin made in 1676.

Lucien Hansotte, trombone. A native of Liege, Belgium, of a musical family, he was educated in Geneva, Switzerland and won first prize at the National French Academy in 1914. He played with the Orchestra de la Suisse Romande in Geneva before joining the BSO in 1925. He has a son in military service. His trombone is a Stradivarius.

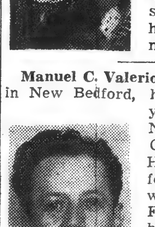
John Holmes, oboe. Born in Cleveland, he studied trumpet before switching to oboe. A graduate of Eastman School of Music, he attended the Berkshire Music Center in 1941 and 1942. He played with the orchestras of Oklahoma City, Kansas City, Buffalo, Washington, St. Louis, and Chautauqua, joining the BSO in 1946. Although he is not married, he likes to cook and do household repairs in addition to studying astronomy, for which he has made a telescope.

Ludwig Juht, double bass. Son of a trumpet soloist in a military band, he studied contra-bass in Tartu, Estonia, and at the St. Petersburg Conservatory, and composition at the Berlin Conservatory. He played with the Helsingfors (Finland) Symphony Orchestra, the Estonian Symphony Orchestra, the Estonia Opera and was professor at the Conservatory of Latvia. Joining the BSO in 1934, he teaches and concertizes, composes and writes in his spare time. He has an instrument made by Francesco Ruggeri of Cremona in 1679, which he bought from the Duke of Windsor in 1936.

Eugene Lehner, viola. A Hungarian, he studied composition with Kodaly and played in the Hubay, Kolisch and Stradivarius Quartets. He joined the BSO in 1939. Still a member of the Stradivarius Quartet, he says that his hobby is "music, music, music."



Manuel C. Valerio, clarinet. Born in New Bedford, he spent three years at the New England Conservatory. He was spotted for the BSO when Arthur Fiedler recruited him for the Esplanade orchestra and took him on tour with the Symphonietta through Virginia and Pennsylvania in the early 30s. He then joined the Pops and in 1933 the BSO, centually succeeded to first clarinet. He is described as "one of the smallest men in the orchestra with one of the biggest senses of humor." Although he was born in New Bedford, his parents and his wife came from the Azores.

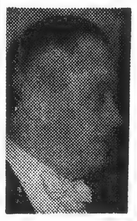


GEORGE E. JUDD
Manager

Emil Kornsand, first violin. Educated in Berlin, he was for 13 years first violinist at the State Opera in Berlin and played first violin and viola in the Edwin Fisher Chamber Orchestra. He joined the BSO in 1939 under Koussevitzky. Since 1921 he has played in established string quartets. His hobbies are composing, painting and drawing. He has a Testori violin and an Albani viola.

Jacobus Langendoen, cello. Of Dutch origin, he attended the Royal Conservatory of Music in The Hague. At the age of 16 he had began his study of the cello at Capetown, South Africa, and later with Izak Mossell in Amsterdam. He was first cellist of the Royal Opera at The Hague for three years, joining the BSO in 1920. First cellist in the Pops Orchestra, he composes music for chamber groups and cello. His hobbies are caricature drawing and sailing.

Georges Laurent, principal flute. At the age of 12 he started flute lessons with Phillipe Gaubert in Paris. From his fifteenth to his eighteenth year he studied at the Paris Conservatory, winning first prize. In 1921, he entered the BSO, founding the Boston Flute Players Club three years later. For many years it was one of the foremost musical organizations in Boston, where its chamber music concerts were very popular. His flute is one of the distinguishing voices of the orchestra.



Clarence F. Knudson, principal second violin. A native of Lynn, he studied at the New England Conservatory under Adamowski, joining the BSO in 1920. He is a member of the Zimbler Sinfonietta. He has four sons, ranging in age from seven to 20. His instrument is a Gand Pere, made in 1840.

Marcel Lafosse, trumpet. Of a French family of musicians, he was a first prize winner at the Paris Conservatory in 1914. He was soloist with the Opera Comique and the Concerts Colonne under Koussevitzky, who invited him to the BSO in 1926. He is now professor at the New England and Boston Conservatories. He enjoys fishing and teaching Belotte.

Alfred Krips, assistant concertmaster. Born in Berlin, he studied violin with Willy Hess at the Berlin Academy of Music, later playing first violin in the Berlin State Opera House under Walter, Furtwangler, Richard Strauss and Klemperer. He toured Europe as a chamber music player, as soloist and with Edwin Fischer's chamber orchestra. Joining the BSO in 1934, he teaches at the New England Conservatory.

Robert Karol, viola. A cousin of Norman Carol, he is fond of riding a motorcycle. On the orchestra's European tour he and his wife motorcycled through Holland. He was born in Allentown, Pa. He has played with the Little Orchestra Society of New York and Saidenberg's Little Symphony of New York. He joined the BSO two seasons ago. He is a former Tanglewood student. He likes to play golf.

Paul Keaney, French horn. Born in Beverly, he attended the Longy School of Music and joined the orchestra in 1937. He gives private lessons and teaches at the Boston Center for Adult Education. He has a boy of 10 and a girl of 12. He is interested in children's music in Jamaica Plains, where he lives. His special interest is Boy Scouts, especially Cubs.

Phillip Kaplan, flute. Born in Boston, he held the Oliver Ditson Scholarship at the New England Conservatory. He was an original member of the New Friends of Music Orchestra and the American Lyric Opera. He is artistic director of Musica Antiqua Ensemble, and has recorded extensively.

Bernard Kadinoff, viola. A New Yorker by birth, he attended the College of the City of New York, and studied with Moldavan, Katims and Vardi. He joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra last year. He played in the BSO Orchestra and at Radio Music Hall. He has been playing in the Pope and Esplanade Orchestras under Arthur Fiedler, and is coming to Tanglewood for the first time this year.

Norbert Lauga, first violin. Born in Aix-Les-Bains, France, he studied at the National Conservatory in Paris, winning first medals in solfeggio at the age of 10 and in violin under Touche at 14, with first prize in violin at 17. He studied with Camille Chevillard, D'Indy and Enesco. At 18 he was appointed assistant concertmaster of the Concerts Straram and later concertmaster of other orchestras. Before coming to America he won the first competition conducted by the Association of the Former First Prizes of the National Paris Conservatory.

Walter G. Macdonald, French horn. A New Englander, born in Watertown, he attended Boston University and the New England Conservatory. He came to the BSO in 1932. He claims no hobbies; has two boys, aged 5 and 14. Although he started studying the trumpet at the Conservatory, he changed to the French horn because its softer tone appealed to him.

Minot Beale, first violin. One of the young American musicians who joined the orchestra in 1927, he was born in Rockland, where he still lives in the ancestral home of his family who were original settlers. His father was a pianist, who taught his son. In World War I he played the slide trombone at the Newport Naval Training Station.

Vincent J. Mauricci, viola. Born in Boston, he attended the Music School and on a viola scholarship at the New England Conservatory with Faurel, Primrose and dePasquale. He won prizes in the Herald-Traveler contest at the age of 15 and a scholarship in the National Orchestral Association under Leon Barzin. He was a member of the original American Youth Orchestra that toured South America under Stokowski.

S. J. Leibovici, first violin. Born in Romania, he studied at the Paris Conservatory, winning first prize in solfege in 1911 and in violin in 1914. He joined the BSO in 1926. He plays a Cremona instrument dated 1791.

1791. He studied in Paris, where he was taken at the age of three, under Alfred Brun, Edward Nadeau, Jaques Thibaud and Marsik. His daughter is a student at Wellesley.

Olivia Lueteke, harp. Born in New York City, she is one of five children who are musicians. Attending school at Scituate, she began to play the harp at the age of six. She studied four years with the National Orchestral Association and with Bernard Zighera, BSO harpist. She has soloed with the San Antonio Symphony and at the Pops concerts. She joined the BSO last year, and is its only woman member. A breeder of German Shepherds, she is the owner of Champion Ophelia Greenfair.

Jerome Lipson, viola. Born and educated in Boston, he is one of the first Tanglewood graduates to play solo viola. Because he likes to travel, he went to England last year to look over the possibilities for accommodation for the BSO before its European tour. He is a member of the orchestra's elected committee. He was formerly with the Indianapolis Orchestra. In World War II he played with Glen Miller's Air Force Band. He joined the BSO in 1947. His hobby is golf.

George Madsen, piccolo. He has been called a "North Shore Scandinavian" because he was born in Gloucester and his father in Norway. He plays both the flute and the piccolo. His piccolo helps to characterize the BSO. It is said that he can make even the highest note, sound sweet. He is a flute specialist and collector, and can make one. He once worked in a flute factory in order to learn how to put them together.

Victor Manusevitch, second violin. Born in Alexandrovsk, Russia he attended the Institute of the History of Arts in Petrograd, and the Conservatory of Music in Berlin, received a bachelor of music and master of arts degree at Boston University and expects expects to earn a Ph. D. at Harvard in 1954. He conducted the Cecelia Society Chorus of Boston and led and directed the Army Air Force Symphony Orchestra in the war. He came to the BSO in 1947. In his leisure he writes, plays chess and rides.

L. Marjollet, cello. A Frenchman, he served in World War I, joining the BSO in 1920 under Monteux. Born in Chalons-sur-Marne, France, his mother was a singer. He entered the Paris Conservatory, studying with Professor Pessard. He spent four years in World War I. He toured through France and Mexico before coming to the BSO. Handy with tools, he has made furniture for his house.

Pierre Mayer, second violin. Born in Paris, he studied under the famous Andre Tourret and Andre Caplet. He played with the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande of Geneva, the Societe des Concerts du Conservatoire and the Concerts Straram of Paris. He joined the BSO in 1925.

Samuel Houston Mayes, principal cello. Born in St. Louis, his mother was a musician from Atlanta, Ga., his father was a surgeon and his grandfather, for whom he was named, was a full-blooded Cherokee Indian. At the age of four, on the advice of Will Rogers, his father's first cousin, he was given a small cello and started to study. At the age of eight he appeared as soloist with the St. Louis Orchestra and at 12 he entered the Curtis Institute, joining the Philadelphia Orchestra in 1936 and advancing to first desk three years later.

Harold L. Meek, French horn. Attending Denison University and Curtis Institute of Music, he graduated from Eastman School of Music. He taught theory and orchestration and conducted the orchestra and band for three years at Shurtleff College, Alton, Ill. Joining the BSO in 1943, he arranges works for woodwind ensembles. Theatre and photography are his recreation.

Saverio Messina, second violin. Born in Boston, he has a master's degree from Boston University. He joined the BSO in 1920 under Pierre Monteux. He has two boys, aged 14 and 18. Not content until he had an advanced college degree, he studied nights, while playing in the BSO, until he received an M.A. at Boston University.

Osbourne W. McConathy, French horn. Born in Chelsea, son of a music educator, he graduated from New York University, where he conducted the Glee Club, and attend the Juilliard Graduate School. He later conducted Symphony and opera in Newark, N.J. He became a member of the BSO in 1944. His recreation is research in Elizabethan music and the history of the horn and horn players.

Georges Edmond Moleux, principal double bass. Born in France, at the age of five he began to study solfeggio. At 12 he was studying double bass and clarinet, and at 20 he received the first prize at the Paris Conservatory for both instruments. He was first clarinetest at Monte Carlo and later principal double bassist of the Pasdeloup Concert in Paris. Invited to the BSO in 1930, he has been principal double bass since 1939. Many outstanding double bassists have studied with him. His hobby is conducting and arranging music for bands.

Laszlo James Nagy, second violin. Born in New York City of Hungarian parentage, he studied privately piano, violin and theory. When very young he was concertmaster of the famous St. Louis Philharmonic Orchestra, made up of amateur and semi-professional musicians. Before coming to the BSO he was for 15 years first violin and sometimes viola with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra. He writes short stories that often appear in magazines. He has four young children.

Michael Nieland, cellist. Philadelphia born, son and brother of musicians, he studied under Stephen Deak of Curtis Institute and Dican Alexanian of the Peabody Institute, whose assistant he was. For three years he sang baritone with the Philadel Grand Opera Company and played with the Baltimore and National Symphonies and the Pro Musica and Harewood Quartets. His hobbies are tennis, fishing and skating, repairing old cellos and looking for a fine old Italian instrument.

Willis Page, associate principal double bass. He was born in Rochester, N.Y. Graduating from Eastman School of Music in that city, he was the first student to receive a performer's degree in two instruments — double bass and tuba. An astronomist in his leisure time, he owns a 54-inch telescope with a six-inch mirror.

Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet. Growing up in Shrewsbury, he has lived near Boston all his life, studying music privately with Gaston Hamelin. He joined the BSO in 1933 to play the piccolo clarinet. He collects, designs and builds clarinets, but they are not his only interest. He says that his "life is centered indoors around music and outdoors around birds." He has an ornithological library of nearly 3000 volumes. When he travels, it is usually in quest of birds. Once he spent 30 days at an elevation of 13,000 feet in Colorado studying mountain birds. Last year he went to Labrador, and recently he was in the news for helping to make history with a Manx shearwater that he found off the coast of Scotland. He is a director of the Audubon Society. Important to the BSO is his position as orchestra personnel manager.

James Pappoutsakis, flute. Born in Cairo, Egypt, he came to Boston to the Latin School and the New England Conservatory. Joining the BSO in 1937, he plays with the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble and is on the faculty of the Conservatory and the Longy Schools.

Henry Portnoi, double bass. A native of Chelsea he studied violin under Nikolai Kaffman and bass at the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia, under Torella. He played in the Indianapolis and Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestras, and with Stokowski in the Youth Orchestra, joining the BSO in 1943. He teaches at Boston University. He has two small children.

Leo Panasevich, second violin. He came to the BSO last year from the Monte Carlo Ballet Orchestra, in which his wife played the French horn. At Tanglewood for his first Berkshire Festival, he spent the past few summers at Newcastle, N.H., where he and Mrs. Panasevich played in a summer group. In the Navy during World War I, he claims to have knocked out a champion in a boxing match.

Bernard Parronchi, cello. Born in New York, he studied in Italy, France and in Spain under the great Pablo Casals, Andre Servato. He joined the BSO under Serge Koussavitzyk. He has given recitals in principal European cities and three at Town Hall, New York. He likes to fish.

Boaz Piller, contra bass. Born in The Hague, Holland, he came to New Orleans in 1910 with the famous French Opera Company after graduating from the Royal Conservatory in The Hague. At the age of 27 he joined the faculty of the New England Conservatory, the BSO in 1916 and play for 29 years at Crawford House, New Hampshire, in the summer. He has played chamber music with Albert Einstein, the scientist. Pursing his hobby of collecting musical autographs, he has 450 and 100 musical caricatures. He owns a complete set of prints of the 57 Musical Daumiers.

Joseph A. Oross, trombone. Born in Toledo, Ohio, son of a clarinet player, he took a business course before graduating from the Boston Conservatory with highest honors in trombone. At nine he played with the Hungarian Gypsies and at 11 he was organist of his church. He teaches privately and at the Boston Conservatory. His bobbies are photography and mountain climbing. He plays a trombone made especially for him.

CHARLES MUNCH, CONDUCTOR

Carlos Pinfield, first violin. A Bostonian by birth, he studied at the Royal Academy in Berlin, under Willy Hess, served with the armed forces in World War I and has conducted ensemble groups from the BSO. He has been guest conductor of the Pops orchestra at Symphony Hall. He teaches violin and conducts an amateur orchestra, doing gardening and woodworking in his spare time. His instrument is a Joseph Rocca, dated 1837.

Max Polster, percussion player. German-born, he taught himself, starting his professional career in 1901 and joining the BSO in 1923. With experience in leading European orchestras, he has played under Furtwangler, Muck, Lehar, Ziehrer and Monteux, Koussevitzky and Munch, and now is a member of the Pops and Esplanade Orchestras. He says that his hobby is "making and saving money."

Ernst Panenka, bassoon. Born in Vienna, he began piano lessons at the age of six, but soon played the bassoon in the school orchestra, studying under Professor Strobl, bassoon soloist in the Vienna Opera, until he was engaged by the Volksoper in his native city. He joined the BSO in 1930. His hobbies are mountain climbing, photographer and flying model airplanes, at which he has unusual success. He carried colored film all over Europe on the orchestra's tour, making a photographic log of the trip.

Sheldon Rotenberg, second violin. Born in Attleboro, he holds an A.B. and an M.A. degree from Tufts. He studied at the Sorbonne in Paris and with Winternitz, Enesco, Thibaud, Keller and Burgin, with two seasons at Tanglewood. A Paris recital was sponsored by the Baroness de Rothschild. His career, interrupted by five years of military service in England, France and Germany, includes appearances with the Pops and Indianapolis Orchestras and the Boston String Quartet. He has a certified Guarnerius (Joseph) instrument, dated 1710.

Jacob Raichman, principal trombone. Born in Vitebsk, Russia, he studied at the St. Petersburg Conservatory, receiving a scholarship as "an exceptionally gifted student" and receiving the diploma of "Free Artist." He won a contest with 22 applicants for the position of first trombonist at the Imperial Bolshoi Theatre in Moscow, appearing as soloist. With the BSO since 1927, he teaches. Many of his students have important positions in major American orchestras. His hobby is machinery.

Roger Schermanski, first violin. A Parisian by birth, he won first prize at the Paris Conservatory and played solos with the National Orchestra of France and the French Radio. He joined the BSO in 1950 under Charles Munch. He joined the BSO in 1947. He is married to Irene, daughter of Jacob Raichman, first trombone of the orchestra.

Vladimir Resnikoff, first violin. A native of Novgorod, Russia, son of musicians, he graduated from the Meister Schule in Vienna. Later he studied in Belgium. He was soloist with the London Philharmonic Orchestra and in Vienna. He was head of the Altman School of Music, joining the BSO in 1932. He has a violin made by Joannes Battista Guadagnini dated 1751, from the Walton collection His hobby is gardening.

Harry Dubbs, first violin. Born in Boston, he began to study violin at the age of five, later with Timothee Adamowski at the New England Conservatory and for many years with Felix Winternitz. A member of the faculty of Boston University, he is conductor of the Brookline Community Orchestra and conducts youth concerts with members of the BSO. His hobbies are photography and travel. He owns an Italian violin made by Panormo and plays an instrument made and given to him by F. O. Stanley, the inventor.

Harry Shapiro, French horn. During World War II he played in the Army Air Force Band in Paris and traveled with it about Europe. He has just built a new home in Needham. He plays in the Pops and Esplanade Orchestras, and is at Tanglewood for the Berkshire Festival concerts in the Music Shed.

Herman Silberman, first violin. Born in Boston, of a musical family, he studied at the Longy School and in Europe. At the age of 14 he appeared in Symphony Hall as soloist. A member of the New Art String Quartet of New York, he played in the WOR string Symphonietta under Wallenstein and conducted radio broadcasts over two networks, as well as a series of Boston concerts. He became a member of the BSO in 1944. He is currently a member of the Stradivarius Quartet.

Charles Smith, percussion. Born in Newark, N.J., he was a special student at the Juilliard School of Music and studied with Gene Krupa, celebrated jazz player. For 39 weeks he played under Alexander Smallens in the road production of Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess," which gave 600 performances in a coast to coast tour. His wife, Josephine, played violin in Spitalny's all-woman orchestra. He teaches at the New England Conservatory and Boston University College of Music.

Kilton Vinal Smith, tuba. Born in Vinal Haven, Maine, for which he was named by his old New England family, he began the study of the trombone with Jacob Raichman, BSO principal trombone, at the age of 13. He later changed to the bass tuba. His hobby is refinishing furniture. He likes to buy an old piece and restore it to its original beauty. He has many pieces that he has picked up for restoration in his spare time.

Ralph delSordo, second violin. A native of Flumeri, Italy, he studied with the famous Winternitz, Noack, Loeffler and Witek. He plays the mandolin or guitar when one is needed by the BSO. He teaches and in his spare time builds houses. He has a violin made by Vincenzo Postiglione in 1868.

Louis Speyer, English horn. French by birth, he is of a musical family, a first prize winner at the Paris Conservatory in 1911. He played in the first ballet and concert performances of Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," coming to the United States with the French Army Band in 1918 for a three weeks' tour. He was awarded the Legion of Honor decoration in February, 1950, for "invaluable services to the dissemination of French culture." He is the leader of the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble. Joining the BSO in 1919, he is a conductor and teacher.

James Stagliano, principal French horn. Born in Italy, he came to Detroit at the age of six. Of the third generation of musicians, mainly French horn players, he joined the Detroit Symphony Orchestra at the age of 16. He has since played with the orchestras of St. Louis, Chicago, Los Angeles and Cleveland and in 1946 joined the BSO. He likes to play golf, tennis and badminton.

Simon Sternburg, percussion. Born in Boston, he has been a percussion player since 1922. He is an authority on the drums, about which he has written a textbook that has a high reputation among percussion players. Two members of the Concert Gebouw, on the orchestra's recent European tour, sought him out to express their appreciation for his "Progressive Exercises in Drumming," as did members of the Israeli Orchestra when they played in Boston. He has a business interest in a music store not far from Symphony Hall.

Lloyd Stonestreet, second violin. He comes of an old Yankee family who lived in Revere when he was born. He studied under private teachers in New York and at the New England Conservatory, joining the BSO in 1920. He has a business interest in a haberdashery shop at Harvard Square. He is the only musician in the orchestra who is a Harvard graduate.

Roger Louis Voisin, principal trumpet. Born in Angers, France, he attended the English High School in Boston. His grandfather was a musician, as was his father, under whom he studied at the New England Conservatory and whom he succeeded as principal trumpet player with the BSO. He is married to a Southern girl. They have a two-year-old son and a six-month-old daughter. He teaches solfege at the Berkshire Music Center and takes pictures in his spare time.

Samuel Diamond, second violin. A native of Boston, of Lithuanian ancestry, he attended the Boston public schools. After lessons in violin with his uncle at the age of eight, and later with Emanuel Fiedler, Felix Winternitz and Charles Loeffler, he became concertmaster for Victor Herbert in 1916. He traveled everywhere with him in 1916 and 1917, until he joined the BSO in 1918 under Monteux. He has two young children, a boy and a girl.

Gaston Elcus, first violin. A native of France, he won the first prize in violin at the Paris Conservatory. He was professor of advanced violin and chamber music in the Nadaud Conservatory, member of the committee of examinations and competitions at the Paris Conservatory, concermaster of the Opera Comique in Paris. He plays violins made by Carlo Antonio Tononi in Venice in 1717, by Vuellaume and by Chanok, famous French violin makers.

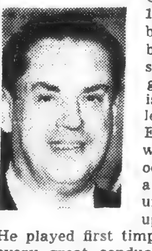
Irving Frankel, double bass. Son of an Austrian musician, he attended the Boston Conservatory. He joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1919 under Pierre Monteux. His hobbies are golf and swimming. When he came to this country at the age of 15 he was already well grounded in music, including harmony and composition as well as his instrument, the double bass. For recreation he writes music.

George Fourel, viola. Born in Grenoble, France, he attended the Lycee at Donai and Alencon. He won first prize in viola at the Paris Conservatory under Lafarge and studied orchestra under Vincent D'Indy. He entered the Lamoureux Symphony Orchestra in 1912 and the BSO nine years later. He teaches viola and string quartet at the New England Conservatory. He has violas made by Hieronymas and Amati.

Ruben Green, viola. Born in Boston, he was a star violinist of leading dance bands while he waited to join the BSO, which was his ambition. He played in Ruby Newman's Orchestra and did much radio and other dance orchestra playing in New York. He was appointed to his present position two seasons ago by Charles Munch, the musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Rolland Sylvester Taplay, first violin. Born in Hudson, he studied violin with Felix Winternitz and saxophone with Andrew Jacobsen, joining the BSO in 1920. He conducts various school and business men's amateur orchestras and plays solo. He likes to hunt, fish, play bridge and experiment in the measure of musical aptitude. He has three children, more than the average for BSO members.

Roman Szulz, timpani. Born in Warsaw, he came to the United States in 1935, when he became a member of the BSO, succeeding the great trombonist, Ritter. He learned enough English on his way across the ocean to get about Boston until he picked up some more. He played first timpani for almost every great conductor in Europe. His two sons are also musicians. Walter plays the trombone and Andrew the piano in popular dance orchestras.



Karl Zeise, cello. A painter as well as a musician, he became interested in both arts at the age of eight. He learned to play the cello because his uncle left his about the house. He started his career as a pictorial artist when he sketched scenes near his family's home in Needham and their summer cottage on the Kennebec River near Damariscotta, Me. While playing cello with the Philadelphia Orchestra he studied oil painting at the Academy of Fine Arts. His exhibit in the Tanglewood reception room last summer included scenes of the sea and of Lenox.

Jean deVergie, oboe. A native of Marseille, France, he attended the conservatory there and in Paris, where he won first prize in oboe. After playing first oboe at the Paris Opera, he joined the BSO. In his spare time he makes oboe reeds. He teaches privately.

William Waterhouse, second violin. The only Canadian in the orchestra, he was born in Winnipeg of a musical family. Graduating from Ravenscourt at the age of 15, he won cross-country competitions in his last three years. He holds the degrees of bachelor and master of music from Boston University. He won many prizes for chamber music, violin and string quartet and piano. Among his teachers was Sir Henry Wood, who taught his father 40 years before. Serving almost six years in the Canadian Army, he played in London under outstanding British conductors, but not under Sir Thomas Beecham until he joined the BSO last year. He plays in solo and chamber music and runs an automobile agency in Norwood. His violin, made by Joseph Rocca in Genoa in 1856, is a very fine one, loaned to him for an indefinite period.

Gottfried Joseph Wilfinger, first violin. Born in Allentown, Pa., he attended the New England Conservatory for two years, winning the Philadelphia Youth Contest in 1948, and playing as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra. He has held scholarships at Tanglewood and the Conservatory. He joined the BSO in 1950.

George Zazofsky, first violin. He was born in Boston, graduated from the Curtis Institute and was twice chosen to represent New England in the All-American Youth Orchestra that toured South America, Canada and the United States with Stokowski. He was concertmaster of the Curtis Symphony Orchestra and now occupies the same position with the Zimbler Sinfonietta and the New England Opera Company under Goldovsky. He plays a Gaudagnini violin dated Milan, 1752, which is pictured in the book, "How Many Gaudagninis" by Doving.

Alfred Zighera, cello. Born in Paris, he studied at the Paris Conservatory, starting at the age of 10. Playing in the Koussevitzky Concerts in Paris, he joined the BSO in 1925. A teacher at the New England Conservatory and Wellesley College, he plays in the Boston String Quartet and the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, in which he plays viola da gamba. He is a member of the Tanglewood faculty.

Bernard Zighera, principal harp. Born in Paris of a Romanian father and Polish mother, he began to study piano at the age of 8 and harp at 12, winning prizes in both at the Paris Conservatory. He followed his brother to the BSO in 1926. He founded and conducted a series of concerts by a chamber orchestra. He teaches at the New England Conservatory and Tanglewood. He often plays piano with the orchestra.

Manuel Zung, second violin. Born in Russia, he graduated with honors from the New England Conservatory, where he studied under Eugene Gruenberg. Joining the BSO in 1925, he is a member of the Zimbler Sinfonietta. He likes to play bridge. His instrument is a Gagliano.

Joseph Zimbler, cello. Born in Pilsen, Czechoslovakia, he comes of a family of professional musicians. Three uncles were members of the BSO and Arthur Fiedler, Pops and Esplanade conductor, is his cousin. He studied in Pilsen, Prague and Berlin and filled solo and chamber music engagements in various European countries. Since coming to the BSO he organized a string quartet and the Zimbler Sinfonietta, playing in concert and recording. His hobby is playing chamber music and collecting coins and stamps. He has a collection of old cello bows and an instrument made by Joseph Ingliano of Naples in 1760.

MAY 9 1952

Das Orchester als Präzisions-Mannschaft

Zum Deutschlandbesuch des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters / Von H. H. Stuckenschmidt

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester, das sich zur Zeit auf einer Europa-Tournee befindet, wird am 13. Mai im großen Funkhaus in Frankfurt ein öffentliches Konzert geben, am 14. Mai spielt es in Frankfurt für die Angehörigen der amerikanischen Streitkräfte. Am 15. Mai konzertiert das Orchester im Titania-Palast in Berlin. Dirigenten sind Charles Münch und Pierre Monteux.

Künstler, und Musiker zumal, stehen in dem Ruf, Individualisten und schwierige Herren zu sein. Faßt man sie aber unter der Idee gemeinsamer Arbeit an einem großen Darstellungsziel zusammen, so ziehen sie, Igeln gleich, ihre Stacheln ein, werden kooperativ und arbeitsfromm. Ja, ihre Bereitschaft, sich anzupassen, scheint mit der Größe der individuellen Leistung zu wachsen. So entstehen die Wunder großer Schauspiel-Ensembles und der hundertköpfigen modernen Präzisions-Mannschaften, die sich Orchester nennen. Für die Erfahrung, daß gemeinsame geistige Arbeit aus der Leistung von Menschengruppen mehr macht als die Summe ihrer Einzelleistungen, sind sie der anschaulichste Beweis.

Höhere Wellen hat kein transatlantischer Kunstruhm geschlagen als der des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters. Selbst die Rivalität der an Tradition reicheren New Yorker Philharmoniker und der unter Leopold Stokowski zeitweise zu hellerem Tonglanz gebrachten Philadelphia-Leute hat ihr Prestige nur gefestigt. Die Bostoner stehen in der ersten Reihe der Weltorchester; und sie sind im Begriff, sich solchen Ruhm auf dem deutschen Boden ältester symphonischer Kultur attestieren zu lassen.

Ein Musikfreund namens Henry L. Higginson fand eines Tages, es sei Zeit, der ältesten Kulturstadt der Vereinigten Staaten ein Orchester zu schenken. Und er schenkte es, entwarf die Statuten, garantierte die erforderlichen Gelder, engagierte einen Kapellmeister, der es aus dem Boden zu stampfen hatte. Das Orchester war plötzlich da, mit der gleichen spontanen Frische entstanden, wie in Amerika hundertstöckige Häuser, meilenlange Brücken, vorbildliche Bibliotheken entstehen.

Der Mann, dem die ersten Kindheitsjahre des Symphonieorchesters anvertraut waren, kam aus Deutschland. Er hieß Georg Henschel, war Breslauer, sang einen schönen Bariton und hatte Komposition studiert. Johannes Brahms würdigte ihn seiner Freundschaft. Henschel ist 1934, mehr als achtzig Jahre alt, in Schottland als Sir George gestorben. Er führte das von ihm zusammengeholte Bostoner Orchester drei Jahre lang im Geiste Brahms' und der deutschen Symphonik.

Genau so, vielleicht noch prophetisch eifriger, leitete es nach ihm der Österreicher Wilhelm Gericke insgesamt dreizehn Jahre lang. Henschel und Gericke wären sozusagen die Lehr- und Zuchtmeister des jungen Ensembles; ihre Rolle kann — ohne sonstigen Vergleich — der Hans v. Bülows bei den Berliner Philharmonikern an die Seite gestellt werden.

1889 folgte den Pädagogen das Genie. Boston gewann für vier Jahre den jungen, in Leipzig schon berühmt gewordenen Arthur Nikisch. Er fand in dem hochkonservativen Boston, bei dem aristokratischen Traditionssinn des amerikanischen Großbürgertums, keine rechte Resonanz. Man warf ihm Primadonnentum vor, nahm Anstoß an seiner zigeunerhaften Temperamentsdeutung der Klassiker und namentlich des vergötterten Beethoven und machte ihm das Leben schwer. Aber die Jugend beklatschte ihn enthusiastisch und bereitete dem Scheidenden Ovationen. Er hinterließ das Orchester in einem künstlerisch bereicherten Zustand; seine Vorgänger hatten es gehen, er hatte es fliegen gelehrt. Ihm folgte am Pult für fünf Jahre der Deutschböhme Emil Paur, ein Theatermann, der später kurz an der Berliner Hofoper tätig war. Er gab den Taktstock an Gericke zurück.

Die Ära Karl Mucks beginnt 1906; mit ihr der erste große Ruhm des Orchesters. Muck setzte die deutsch-symphonischen Traditionen fort, erweiterte sie im Geiste Wagners und des neuen Bildungskapellmeistertums. Seine Geistigkeit schuf Distanz zwischen sich und dem Hörer, aber auch zwischen sich und der Partitur. Gerade weil er den Meisterwerken, von Bach bis Wagner, eine kultische Verehrung entgegenbrachte, zog er um sie eine Art Bannmeile. Er gestaltete gleichsam aus der Quarantäne.

Dieses Distanzieren, verbunden mit einem unerbittlichen Streben nach Klarheit, ist ein Merkmal des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters geblieben, auch als längst Mucks Geist aus seinem Umkreis verbannt war, bis auf den heutigen Tag. Im Wechsel mit Max Fiedler, dem großen Träger Brahmsscher Tradition, hat Muck bis 1918 die Bostoner geleitet.

Mit Henry Rabaud, und ein Jahr später, 1919, mit Pierre Monteux, beginnt die französische Epoche in der Geschichte des Orchesters. Der vielfach als übertrieben und einseitig empfundenen Deutschbetontheit des Repertoires folgt das andere Extrem. Ein Viertel der gespielten Werke sind französische Partituren. Auch die Zusammensetzung des Orchesters wandelt sich. Als 1920 die ersten schweren Kämpfe mit der amerikanischen Musikergewerkschaft ausgefochten werden, verläßt etwa ein Drittel der Musiker das Ensemble. Es sind überwiegend Deutsche. An ihre Stelle treten Russen, Italiener, Franzosen. So macht auch der Klang des Orchesters eine Wandlung durch. Zu den deutschen Blasmanieren treten romanische Eigentümlichkeiten.

Mittlerweile hat in Europa ein neuer russischer Dirigent von sich reden gemacht. Sergej Koussevitzky, Prophet Scrjabins, Gründer des russischen Musikverlags, 1917 bis 1921 der erste Mann im Musikleben der jungen russischen Republik.

Er emigriert, wird in Paris zum Champion modernster Orchestermusik, namentlich Igor Strawinskys. 1924 tritt das Bostoner Orchester an ihn heran; er übernimmt die Leitung. Behält sie bis kurz vor seinem Tode ein Vierteljahrhundert lang. Auch in der neuen Heimat bleibt Koussevitzky seinem Gedanken treu, zeitgenössische Musik mit allen künstlerischen und materiellen Kräften zu fördern. Durch ihn wird Boston zum Forum des musikalischen Zeitgeistes. Was die jungen Komponisten Amerikas ihm und dem Bostoner Symphonieorchester verdanken, ist kaum zu ermessen. Er hat Aaron Copland, Samuel Barber, Roy Harris und Roger Sessions ermutigt und George Gershwin Platz in seinen Programmen gegeben. Wenn seine tiefere Liebe der russischen Moderne galt, in deren Kreis er auch Rachmaninoff und den Finnen Sibelius einbezog, so hat er neben Strawinsky doch auch Hindemith und Martinu, Bartók, Berg und Schönberg nicht vergessen.

Auf Koussevitzkys Anregung und mit wesentlichem Anteil seines Orchester wurde 1940 das Berkshire Music Centre gegründet, aus dem das Tanglewood Festival hervorging, eine allsommerliche Veranstaltung, bei der in Kursen und Aufführungen die wichtigsten Probleme der modernen Musik bearbeitet werden.

Es war die Epoche Koussevitzkys, in der das Orchester seine endgültige Form fand. Die Verschmelzung aller nationalen Klangkulturen zu einem Optimalton war sein Werk. Es war ein Orchesterspiel, das der Vollkommenheit aufregend nahekam. In dem Streben nach solcher präzisen Schönheit wich das individualistische Empfinden einem Korpsgeist der Vollendung. Diese über hundert Männer, meist schon in Amerika geboren, aber mit russischen, deutschen, polnischen, skandinavischen, italienischen, spanischen, französischen, niederländischen und griechischen Namen, waren stolz auf ihre kollektive Leistung, einig in dem Wunsch, als Ensemble unübertrefflich zu sein. Zwar gibt es noch nationale Gruppenbildungen: die Klarinetten sind italienisch, die Trompeten französisch, die Streicher zur Hälfte russisch-polnisch. Aber der Stil des Ganzen, eben in seiner stromlinienhaften Ausgeglichenheit, trägt die Züge der jungen amerikanischen Kultur. 1950 übernahm Charles Münch, der in Deutschland geschulte Elsässer, die Leitung.

Pierre Monteux, der 77jährige französische Meister, wird die deutschen Konzerte leiten. Er ist ein Musiker der unbedingten Sachlichkeit, ein lateinisch klarer Geist, dem Beethoven das zentrale Erlebnis geworden ist, der früh zu Debussy und Strawinsky gefunden hat und spät zu Brahms. Daß er in seinen Frankfurter und Berliner Programmen Brahms huldigt, Berlioz, Debussy und Ravel sprechen läßt, Hindemith nicht vergißt, und moderner amerikanischer Symphonik das Wort gibt, zeugt für die Vielseitigkeit seiner Kunst und des Orchesters, das an ihr reifen konnte.

[335]

AMERIKA-HAUS MANNHEIM
Am Wasserturm

"Allgemeine Zeitung"
vom 16.5.52

In Frankfurt a. M.:

Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters

Unter dem französischen Dirigenten Pierre Monteux

Dank der Großzügigkeit des Mannheimer Amerika-Hauses hatten einige Musikfreunde und Musikkritiker die Gelegenheit, das erste Gastkonzert des weltberühmten „Boston Symphony Orchestra", das im vollbesetzten Großen Haus in Frankfurt am Main stattfand, zu besuchen. Das aus insgesamt 103 Musikern bestehende Orchester, das seit dem Jahre 1950 von dem in Deutschland geschulten Elsässer Charles M ü n c h geleitet wird, befindet sich zur Zeit auf einer Europa-Tournee, in deren Verlauf in diesen Tagen drei Konzerte in Deutschland (zwei in Frankfurt a. M. und eines im Berliner Titania-Palast) stattfinden.

Jeder einzelne Musiker dieses Orchesters ist ein Künstler und ein Instrumentalvirtuose. Im Zusammenspiel der einzelnen Klanggruppen ergibt sich eine klangliche Verdichtung (nicht Verdickung!), die als Ergebnis höchster technischer Virtuosität und einer ganz verfeinerten Spielkultur wohl ihresgleichen suchen dürfte. Der metallene Glanz und die erstaunliche Sauberkeit des schweren Blechs, die dunkle Klangfülle der Hörner, die schöne Rundung und Geschmeidigkeit der Holzbläser und die unerhörte rhythmische Präzision des Schlagwerks, das immer sehr differenziert eingesetzt wird, verbinden sich mit der satten Klangfülle der fünfundsechzig Streicher zu einem symphonischen Zusammenklang, der in seiner Durchsichtigkeit und in der völligen Ausgewogenheit der einzelnen Klanggruppen untereinander als ein Wunder bezeichnet werden kann. Man weiß nicht, wen man bei diesem großartigen Orchesterkörper mehr bewundern soll: die Prägnanz in der Wiedergabe des thematisch-motivischen Gefüges, die minutiöse Sauberkeit der Intonation, die schlackenlose Transparenz des Klanges, die auch bei den großen Höhepunkten nie das Maß für das symphonische Gleichgewicht verliert und daher auch nie verschwommen oder „breiig" wirkt, oder die vorbildliche instrumentale Zucht und den mitreißenden Schwung, der den Hörer von dem ersten bis zum letzten Ton in Spannung zu halten vermag.

Als Leiter des Konzerts fungierte Pierre M o n t e u x, der siebenundsiebzigjährige Altmeister der französischen Dirigenten. Er ist ein typisch französischer, ja pariserischer Dirigent, von einer hohen geistigen Bewußtheit, einem bestechenden Feingefühl und musikalischen Takt und von einem lateinischen Formgefühl wesentlich bestimmt und erfüllt. Seine ganz sparsame und unauffällige Dirigiergestik weist ihn als einen Künstler von hohem Geschmack aus, und er versteht es mit seinem Sinn für die klanglichen „Valeurs" jedes Detail bis in seine letzten Verästelungen auszukosten. Ganz erstaunlich wirkt — bei seinem hohen Alter — die fast unbegreifliche geistige Spannkraft, die ihn ein Symphoniekonzert von beträchtlicher Dauer mit frischer Elastizität bis zu seinem Ende ohne jede Ermüdung aushalten läßt, die geistige Aufgeschlossenheit auch den Werken der modernen Musik gegenüber und — nicht zuletzt — die Kraft seines nie erlahmenden Gedächtnisses, die sich bei seinen präzisen Einsätzen auf eine überzeugende Weise offenbart.

Er begann die Vortragsfolge mit der glanzvollen Ouverture zur Oper „Benvenuto Cellini" (op. 23) von Hector Berlioz, die man wohl nur ganz selten in einer solch orchestralen Vollendung zu hören bekommt. Als weiteres französisches Werk stand Ravels klangprächtige Orchesterbearbeitung seines virtuosen Klavierstückes „Alborada del Grazioso" („Morgenständchen des Narren") aus dem Zyklus der „Miroirs" auf dem Programm. Hier bemerkte man Monteux' Fähigkeit zur Aufspürung aller klanglichen Details wohl am deutlichsten; und das Orchester konnte bei diesem aparten und brillanten Stück all sein virtuoses Können entfalten, dem man nur mit den Ausdrücken höchster Bewunderung gerecht werden kann. Daß Monteux und das Orchester auch die Werke der deutschen Symphonik gültig und bezwingend erfüllen können, bewiesen sie mit der Darbietung der dritten Symphonie in F-dur (op. 90) von Johannes Brahms, bei der allerdings die „deutsche Innigkeit und Gefühlswärme" durch den romanischen Sinn für die formale Gestaltung ersetzt wurde. Es war gewissermaßen ein „entromantisierter" Brahms: ganz auf klassische Klarheit und Verdeutlichung des formalen Umrisses gestellt. Mancher deutsche Hörer wird gerade bei der Wiedergabe dieses herrlichen Meisterwerkes die leidenschaftliche Kraft der Aussage und die Intensität eines von herber Melancholie überschatteten Gefühls vermißt haben: doch muß die ernste Bemühung um das Werk des deutschen Symphonikers sowie die dominierende geistige Zucht, mit der die F-dur-Symphonie dargeboten wurde, mit hohem Lob anerkannt werden, wenn man auch hier anderen Interpretationen den Vorzug geben mag. Auf jeden Fall kam durch diese romantische Interpretation die magistrale Faktur des Werkes und sein bewunderswürdiger Formbau dank Monteux' souveräner Stabführung und der stupenden Spielkultur des Orchesters zu ihrem vollen Recht.

Der Brahms-Symphonie stand eine zweiteilige (viersätzige) Symphonie Nr. 3 des Amerikaners William Schumann gegenüber. Das Werk, das auch in Mannheim schon teilweise (unter Richard Laugs) aufgeführt wurde, stellt den interessanten Versuch dar, die kontrapunktischen Formen (Passacaglia, Fuge, Choral und Toccata) und die Satztechnik der Polyphonie in den Rahmen eines zyklischen, symphonischen Satzablaufs einzubauen. Trotz mancher „leeren Stellen" und gewisser trockener thematischer Formeln zeigt es den bedeutenden amerikanischen Komponisten als einen Satz- und Instrumentationstechniker von hohen Graden. Allerdings setzt die Wiedergabe eines solchen Werkes ein höchst kultiviertes und ausgeglichenes Orchester und einen Dirigenten mit der Kraft zur Bändigung voraus, die ihm in diesem Falle auch beschieden waren. So wurde auch dieses Werk von dem Publikum mit stürmischem Applaus aufgenommen. Schließlich beendete das geistvollspritzige Orchester-Rondo „Till Eulenspiegels lustige Streiche" (op. 28) von Richard Strauß die stürmisch umjubelte Vortragsfolge. Auch bei diesem glänzenden Stück, das von dem Orchester mit mitreißender Bravour und mit unvergleichlichem Elan dargeboten wurde, bewies sich Pierre Monteux als ein typisch französischer Dirigent, der an die Stelle des deutsch-bajuwarischen Humors den französischen Esprit und den gallischen Witz setzte. Eine verblüffende Meisterleistung!

Das Orchester der Bostoner und sein Gastdirigent haben wohl bei dem illustren Publikum einen tiefen und unauslöschlichen Eindruck hinterlassen.

Willi S c h m i d t

Am Pult: Charles Münch

DAS BOSTONER SYMPHONIEORCHESTER

Das zweite Frankfurter Konzert des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters war für die amerikanische Besatzung bestimmt. Nach Pierre Monteux betrat diesmal Charles Münch das Pult. Er ist in der Welt der deutsch-französischen Doppelkultur des Elsaß aufgewachsen wie René Schickele und andere, denen man es im Dritten Reich törichterweise verübelte, daß sie in zwei Sprachen redeten und schrieben. Straßburg mit seiner anregenden Atmosphäre vor dem ersten Weltkrieg war die Heimat von Charles Münch. Hier war jene buntfarbige Stimmungswelt vorhanden, die der Künstler für seine weitesten Empfindungen braucht, hier neben dem großzügigen äußeren Leben — Straßburg war die kleinste Weltstadt —, in dem norddeutsches, süddeutsches und französisches Wesen vermischt waren und alle deutschen Dialekte und viel Ausländertum auf der Straße und in der Gesellschaft sich begegneten, auch ein Stadtbild gegeben, dessen Reize ganz eigenartig bezauberten. Charles Münch entstammt einer grundmusikalischen, geschwisterreichen Familie, deren Oberhaupt viele Jahre die Kirchenmusik mit Bachschen Passionen, Oratorien, Motetten in Straßburg leitete. Die Münchs waren gleichsam die Bachs der elsässischen Hauptstadt. Aus jener gesegneten Zeit heraus, der auch ein Hans Pfitzner als Konzert- und Opernchef sein bedeutendes Gepräge gab, wurde Charles Münch jetzt als Nachfolger Koussevitzkys in der ständigen Leitung der Bostoner Symphoniker einer der prominentesten Musiker Amerikas.

Wir freuten uns, auch von ihm einen Brahms zu hören, und stellten erneut fest, wie nachfühlend die Bostoner dem norddeutschen Meister sich öffnen, nachdem Dirigenten wie Max Fiedler, der als Spezialist dieser Klangwelt überall zum „Brahmsen" begehrt wurde, so eindringlich vorgearbeitet hatte. Münch faßt die Vierte in e-moll lebhafter auf als der würdige Monteux die Dritte. Besonders das Andante nimmt er etwas eilig, so daß es nicht mehr ganz in sich zu ruhen scheint. Sehr straff packt er den letzten Satz an, die großartige Chaconne über das achttaktige, 32mal variierte Thema. Er steigert das Werk zu mächtig sich erhebendem Abschluß.

Vor diesem zweiten Teil des Programms hörte man nach einer vorzüglich gearbeiteten und inspirierten Ouvertüre „The School for Scandal" von Samuel Barber (Komödie von Sheridan) zwei glänzende Paradestücke des Bostoner Orchesters: von Debussy das dreiteilige „La Mer" und von Ravel die zweite Suite aus „Daphnis und Chloe", die man in Frankfurt vor zwei Monaten im Museumskonzert unter Nino Sanzogno hörte. Münch realisierte die impressionistischen Teile beider Stücke zauberhaft schön, hinreißend den „Danse générale". Wir erlebten ein Fest der Instrumentalsolisten, besonders der Bläser. Münch beherrschte dieses exquisite amerikanische Orchester mit genauer Kenntnis der Partitur. Er ist ein temperamentvoller, sehr nerviger und elektrisierender Dirigent von oft weiträumigen Bewegungen. Er interpretiert mit angespanntem Körper, bleibt aber dennoch locker in jeder Phase und hat, musikbesessen, nichts von einem Schaudirigenten an sich. Dieser französische Teil des Programms wurde durch Münch zu einer Faszination für das Große Haus. Fr. Br.

MAY 16 1952

Pre-Europ
Pars
Europe
POPS
Symph

Das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester

Gastspiel in Frankfurt / Zum erstenmal auf deutschem Boden

Das berühmte Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester ist auf wenige Tage nach Deutschland gekommen. Das Gastspiel in Frankfurt am Dienstagabend war nicht nur ein gesellschaftliches, sondern auch ein funkelndes und weithin ausstrahlendes künstlerisches Ereignis. Die südwestdeutschen Amerikahäuser hatten die wichtigsten Persönlichkeiten des musikalischen Lebens sowie die Presse zu Sonderfahrten nach Frankfurt eingeladen. Dieser außerordentliche Akt eines kulturellen Mittlerdienstes, für den auch an dieser Stelle Dank gesagt sei, hat dem Konzert eine Breitenwirkung gesichert, wie man sie sich umfassender kaum vorstellen kann. Die bewunderungswürdige Leistung des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters konnte damit auf wirklich großer Basis zum Gegenstand der Diskussion werden.

Glanzvoller noch und mitreißender, als man von den vertrauten Schallplatten her ahnen mochte, präsentierten sich die Bostoner an diesem Frankfurter Abend. Keine Frage, dies ist ein Orchester von Weltformat! Keine einzige technische Schwäche wurde offenkundig, und dies bei einem Monstre-Programm und bei einem höchst gefährlichen Programm dazu. Berlioz, Brahms, der Amerikaner Schuman, Ravel und Richard Strauß — bei einer solchen Folge konnte kein Winkel des Hundert-Mann-Orchesters undurchleuchtet bleiben.

Eine Phalanx hervorragender, zu einem makellosen Gleichklang erzogener Streicher — einschließlich der neun Kontrabässe handelt es sich um rund sechzig Köpfe — wird an Wirkung noch überboten von der Mannschaft der Bläser, deren Außerordentlichkeit in Trompetern gipfelt, wie wir sie nicht kennen. Die unüberbietbare Virtuosität dieser Männer, in deren Hand die uns bisher bekannte Ausdrucksfähigkeit dieses Instrumentes sich vervielfacht zu haben scheint, bestimmt in hohem Grade den Stil der einzelnen Aufführungen. Es kommt dadurch eine Brillanz in die Interpretationen, deren suggestive Kraft gar nicht hoch genug eingeschätzt werden kann. Daß sich dabei das Schwergewicht vom seelischen und geistigen Hauch eines Werkes zwangsläufig mehr auf das Artistische der Wiedergabe verschoben hat, sollte den Trost unserer großen deutschen Orchester ausmachen können, deren Tradition und Mission in eine andere Richtung weisen.

Bei der dritten Symphonie von Brahms wurde der Unterschied recht erkennbar. Die Bostoner spielten sie mit kalligraphischer Deutlichkeit. Sie spielten sie prachtvoll. Und doch tat die Selbstverständlichkeit, mit der auch hier die Bläserstellen artistisch ausgewertet wurden, irgendwie weh. Umgekehrt wurde aber auch — im Falle der dritten Symphonie von William Schuman — schlagartig klar, daß ein William Schuman ohne solche Orchester gar nicht denkbar ist. In dem Stil dieses Komponisten sind die führenden amerikanischen Orchester von der Art des Bostoners produktiv geworden. Ihre alles überragende technische Meisterschaft ist die Voraussetzung dafür, daß eine Symphonie wie diese Dritte von Schuman überhaupt geschrieben werden konnte. Wie sehr die Zusammenballung von Bläserkraft und großartig organisiertem Schlagzeug-Tumult zur Krönung eines Werkes werden kann, davon hatte man in Deutschland bisher wohl kaum eine Ahnung.

Am Pult stand Pierre Monteux. Diesem Manne, der so viel für die Musik getan hat, dessen Name mit so vielen denkwürdigen Aufführungen in Frankreich, in England und Amerika unablösbar verbunden ist, einmal danken zu können, wäre allein schon Grund genug gewesen für die Beifallsstürme, mit denen ihn die Zuhörer wieder und wieder ihrer Sympathie versicherten. Was für ein souveräner und meisterhafter Dirigent dieser körperlich so kleine, eher gemütlich als streng wirkende Mann ist, das hatte sich schon nach wenigen Takten gezeigt.

Es war ein großer Abend. Die völkerverbindende Kraft der Kunst hatte freien Lauf. Und sie bewährte sich. Edwin Kuntz

"Rhein-Neckar Zeitung" vom 16.5.1952

[Pars]

Pre-
Europ-

Pars

Europe

POPS

AMERIKA-HAUS MANNHEIM
Am Wasserturm

"Mannheimer Morgen"
vom 15.5.1952

Zum ersten Male in Europa: Boston Symphony Orchestra

Enthusiastisch umjubeltes Gastspiel in Frankfurt

Das neue Große Haus der Städtischen Bühnen Frankfurt war am Dienstag- und Mittwochabend Schauplatz eines bedeutsamen künstlerischen Ereignisses: in zwei Konzerten (einmal für deutsches, dann für amerikanisches Publikum) hörte und sah man das zum ersten Male in seiner Geschichte in Europa gastierende „Boston Symphony Orchestra". Zuvor war es in Paris gewesen, heute wird es in Berlin sein und dann wiederum nach Paris fahren, um dort im Rahmen der Internationalen Festspiele zu konzertieren. Wer das Glück hatte, sie dabei zu hören — bisher kannte man sie hier nur über den Rundfunk und von Schallplatten —, wird den Gästen aus Amerika bestätigen, daß der gute Ruf, der ihnen vorausgeht, zu Recht besteht. Die Begegnung mit den Bostoner Symphonikern war eines der interessantesten und zweifellos auch eindrucksstärksten musikalischen Erlebnisse, die in den letzten Jahren in Deutschland geboten wurden.

•

Die Geschichte dieses Orchesters beginnt 1881: ein Bostoner Bankier — Henry L. Higginson — begründete es aus eigener Initiative und zahlte auch die ersten Subventionen. (Auf dieser privaten Finanzierungsbasis steht das Orchester — wie übrigens alle amerikanischen Orchester — auch heute noch).In den ersten Jahrzehnten holte man sich die Dirigenten für diesen neugeschaffenen Klangkörper ausschließlich aus Deutschland und Oesterreich. Den Breslauer Georg Henschel, den Oesterreicher Wilhelm Gericke, dann für vier Jahre Artur Nikisch, später Emil Paur, Karl Muck und als letzten Deutschen Max Fiedler. Unter Henry Rabaud und Pierre Monteux beginnt ab 1918 der Einfluß deutscher Symphonik zu Gunsten des französischen Musikschaffens zurückzutreten. 1924 schließlich wird der in Europa als Protagonist moderner Musik geschätzte Russe Sergej Koussevitzky verpflichtet, der dann auch in den 25 Jahren seines Wirkens das Orchester zu jenem hohen künstlerischen Niveau führt, für das es seit vielen Jahren auch über die Grenzen Amerikas hinaus bekannt ist. Ein Jahr vor seinem Tode — 1950 — gab Koussevitzky die Leitung an den in der Schweiz beheimateten Charles Münch ab.

•

Wie man sich bei der Wahl der Dirigenten nicht an Nationalitäten gehalten hat, so fanden und finden sich auch im Orchester selbst neben zahlreichen deutschen viele französische, italienische, slawische und selbstverständlich englische, beziehungsweise amerikanische Namen. Ein anschauliches Beispiel dafür, wie man sich bemühte, in aller Welt die besten Musiker zu suchen, bietet der Lebensweg des heute in Neckargemünd wohnenden Musikers Johannes Warnke. Karl Muck bestellte ihn 1908 nach Bayreuth zum Probespiel und engagierte ihn auf der Stelle für das Bostoner Orchester, in dem Johannes Warnke dann 31 Jahre lang, bis zu seiner Pensionierung 1939, als Cellist tätig war. Eine respektable Arbeitsleistung und ein unablässiges künstlerisches Streben steckt hinter dieser nüchternen Zahl; denn bei den amerikanischen Orchestern kennt man keine langjährigen Verträge: die Musiker haben sich in jeder Saison neu zu bewähren, wenn sie weiter verpflichtet werden wollen. Für Johannes Warnke, der inzwischen 80 Jahre alt geworden ist, bot sich nun die Gelegenheit, wieder einmal „sein Orchester" zu hören; er ist, seinem Wunsch entsprechend und durch Vermittlung seiner „Kollegen", zu einem der beiden Gastspiele in Frankfurt eingeladen worden.

•

Das Programm des ersten, von Pierre Monteux dirigierten Frankfurter Konzerts brachte von Berlioz die Ouvertüre zu „Benvenuto Cellini", weiter die dritte Symphonie von Brahms, die Symphonie Nr. 3 in zwei Teilen von William Schuman, einem lebenden amerikanischen Komponisten, Ravels „Alborada del Grazioso" und „Till Eulenspiegel" von Richard Strauß. Diese Vortragsfolge, die dem Programm des Heidelberger Furtwängler-Konzertes am vergangenen Samstag nicht unähnlich ist, beleuchtete die charakteristischen Wesenszüge des Bostoner Orchesters in sehr eindrucksvoller Weise und bot manche Vergleichsmöglichkeiten. Der wohl am unmittelbarsten sich einprägende Unterschied zu dem von den Berliner oder Wiener Philharmonikern vollendet demonstrierten deutschen Musizierstil ergab sich bei der Symphonie von Brahms. So hell und licht, so starr in den Tempi und fern aller expressiven Dynamik hat man Brahms bei uns wohl noch nicht gehört. Eine Romantik ohne Geheimnis, klassisch fast im Stile Haydns (etwa im langsamen Satz), sauber und untadelig in jeder Nuance, „objektiv" und formstreng bis zum äußersten — ein Triumph bewußten Musizierens. Diese hervorstechende Eigenschaft: die Bewußtheit nämlich, die Klarheit der Diktion und die Scheu vor allem Sentimentalischen, gestatten den Bostonern, Berlioz, William Schuman (in seiner kontrapunktisch dicht verzahnten, wenn auch mitunter etwas trocken anmutenden Symphonie), Ravel und auch Richard Strauß in einer artistischen Vollendung zu interpretieren, die so phänomenal ist, daß sie durchaus des negativen Beigeschmacks entbehrt, der bei uns dem Begriff des rein „Artistischen" anhaftet. Die Orchesterfarben sind konstrastreicher und schärfer konturiert, die Einsätze kommen wahrhaft gestochen (wie ja überhaupt dieses amerikanische Orchester ein kaum vorstellbares Maß an Präzision erreicht). Der Gesamtklang wirkt nie massiert und dick. Selbst wenn die hervorragend besetzten Blechbläser in hellem Glanz die mit über 60 Musikern besetzte Streichergruppe überstrahlen, geht die Ausgewogenheit des Klangbildes nicht verloren.

•

Es mag einiges fremd geklungen haben an diesem Abend, der Gesamteindruck aber war schlechthin faszinierend. Der enthusiastische Applaus, mit dem man das Orchester und seinen Dirigenten, den 77jährigen, in seiner sparsamen, rein taktierenden Gestik wie in seiner martialischen Erscheinung so sympathisch wirkenden Pierre Monteux, feierte, legte dafür ein beredtes Zeugnis ab.

Kurt Heinz

[Pops]

Die Rheinpfalz
May 14, 1952

Pfälzer Musikant Mitbegründer der Bostoner

Ehrung anläßlich des Konzerts in Frankfurt

Im Herbst des vergangenen Jahres wies Albert Zink in der „Rheinpfalz" zum ersten Male auf einen aus dem pfälzischen Musikantengewerbe hervorgegangenen hochbegabten Musiker hin. Es war Daniel Kuntz, der am 10. April 1860 als Sohn eines Bauern und Musikanten zu Oberstaufenbach geboren war. Er war noch schulpflichtig, als er mit einer Kapelle als Straßenmusikant nach Amerika ging. Eine dort lebende pfälzische Familie sorgte für seine Ausbildung, so daß er nicht nur im Jahre 1881 das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester gründen half, sondern dort auch Erster Geiger wurde. Im Jahre 1892 wurde Kuntz unter vielen Bewerbern als Erster Geiger in das Bayreuther Festspielorchester engagiert.

Der Kreis Kusel und die Pfalz ließen sich die Gelegenheit nicht entgehen, anläßlich einer Europareise des von Daniel Kuntz mitbegründeten Bostoner Symphonieorchesters, ihren Sohn, der als 92jähriger noch in Boston lebt, zu ehren. Das geschah am 13. Mai bei dem einzigen Konzert, das das Orchester in Deutschland, in Frankfurt a. M., gab.

Landrat Simon ließ durch die Kunstgewerblerin Kalle in Oberweiler-Tiefenbach eine in Pergament gebundene, mit dem pfälzischen Löwen und Photos aus der Heimat des Kuntz gezierte Mappe gestalten, die Regierungspräsident Dr. Pfeiffer bei dem Konzert überreichte. In die Mappe wurde ein von Frl. Kalle in Kunstschrift geschriebenes Grußwort aufgenommen, das folgenden Wortlaut hat: „Die Pfalz, der Landkreis Kusel und die Gemeinde Oberstaufenbach fühlen sich zu ihrer großen Freude auf besondere Weise mit dem Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester verbunden. An seiner Gründung im Jahre 1881 nahm auch der am 19. April zu Oberstaufenbach in der Pfalz geborene Daniel Kuntz teil. Er war auf den weltweiten Wanderwegen der vielen tausend Pfälzer Musikanten einer der Besten. Daniel Kuntz stieg vom Straßenmusikanten zum Ersten Geiger bei den Wagner-Festspielen im Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester auf und war auch 1892 Erster Geiger bei den Wagner-Festspielen in Bayreuth. Das erfüllt das Land seiner Geburt, das er in seinem langen Leben zwölfmal wiedersah, mit Stolz.

In Anerkennung der hohen musikalischen Leistung, die Daniel Kuntz während 30 Jahren im Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester entfalten durfte, grüßen die Pfalz, der Landkreis Kusel und die Gemeinde Oberstaufenbach ihren noch lebenden großen Sohn und mit ihm das Bostoner Symhonie-Orchester, das heute, am 13. Mai 1952 zu Frankfurt a. M. gastiert."

Das Grußwort ist unterschrieben vom Regierungspräsidenten der Pfalz, vom Landrat des Kreises Kusel und dem Bürgermeister der Gemeinde Oberstaufenbach. Z.

Pre-
Europ

Paris

MAY 15 1952

Europe

POPS

Symph

Gobo Remszhardt

Zweites Konzert der Bostoner

Das Boston Symphony Orchestra gab sein zweites Konzert im Frankfurter Großen Haus — und in Deutschland überhaupt — für amerikanische Soldaten und leitete es nach alter Tradition mit der Nationalhymne ein. Das gewichtigste Werk des Programmes war wieder eine Symphonie — diesmal die Vierte — von Brahms, der in Boston besonders gepflegt wird. Hatte Pierre Monteux am Dienstag die Dritte unverkennbar französisch interpretiert, so hielt der Elsässer Charles Munch, der am Mittwochnachmittag dirigierte, die Vierte in einem fesselnden Zwielicht, das besonders dem ersten Satz einen eigenartigen Schimmer gab.

Das Programm begann mit Samuel Barbers Ouvertüre „The School for Scandal", die bestrebt ist, den Geist von Sheridans Komödie musikalisch einzufangen. Eine virtuose und spirituelle Komposition, ein Paradestück für dieses Orchester, bei dem alles klappt wie bei einem großartigen Mechanismus, ohne freilich im Mechanischen zu erstarren. Debussys „La Mer" folgte. Ein Rausch von Klang und Farbe. Unerhört die Feinheit der malerischen Effekte, das Gleiten der Stärkegrade, die Bändigung des Fortissimos, die Spannung auch noch des zartesten Figurenwerks. Das gleiche bei Ravels „Daphnis und Chloe"-Suite. Besonders bewundernswert die Holzbläser. Den Soloflötisten Georges Laurent holte Munch an seine Seite, damit er des Beifallssturmes vor allen teilhaftig werde. F. St.

MAY 15 1952

Triumph virtuoser Orchesterkunst

Pierre Monteux mit den „Bostonern" in Deutschland

Frankfurt, 14. Mai. — Das erste Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters auf deutschem Boden im Frankfurter Großen Haus (nach einem weiteren für Angehörige der amerikanischen Armee werden die Bostoner noch in Berlin konzertieren) gestaltete sich vor einem erlesenen deutsch-amerikanischen Publikum zu einem triumphalen Erfolg für die Gäste aus Uebersee. In Pierre Monteux, dem in Europa unvergessenen Leiter des Pariser Conservatoire, des Concertgebouw- und schließlich lange Jahre hindurch des San Francisco-Orchesters, stand zugleich eine Persönlichkeit am Pult, die den hervorragenden Klangkörper in wahrhaft souveräner Weise zu führen wußte.

Man kennt den spezifischen Klang amerikanischer Orchester bei uns nur von Schallplatten her. Dieser erste direkte Eindruck bestätigte das vorherrschende Moment einer technischen und klanglichen Brillanz, die sich jedoch nie im rein Virtuosen erschöpft. Der satte Glanz der Streicher, der nicht nur auf die Mahlerschen Ausmaße der Besetzung zurückgeht, sondern offensichtlich besonders angestrebt ist, (die Orchesteraufstellung weicht wohl hauptsächlich deshalb etwas von der bei uns inzwischen eingebürgerten ab), das betonte Brio des Blechs (ganz hervorragend die Trompeten) im Gegensatz zu den „schlanken", ungemein beweglichen Holzbläsern — das waren die hervorstechenden Kennzeichen einer Vereinigung, die keine Wünsche mehr offen ließ.

Dieses Instrument ganz und gar in den Dienst der Werke zu stellen, war die besondere Leistung des Gastdirigenten Pierre Monteux (der auf der Europa-Tournee mit dem ständigen Leiter des Orchesters, Charles Münch, alterniert). Bewundernswert allein die Gedächtnisleistung des 77-jährigen, der das umfangreiche und mit „technischen" Schwierigkeiten vollgepfropfte Programm auswendig dirigierte. Monteux zeichnet den klanglichen Ablauf mit sparsamen, eindeutigen, klaren Schlägen vor, die ein wenig an Richard Strauß erinnern, er balanciert ihn förmlich auf der Spitze des Taktstockes und weiß mit einem Minimum an allerdings temperamentgeladener Gebärde die ganze Skala der Nuancen sichtbar zu machen.

So erstand, nach Berlioz' klangprächtiger Benvenuto Cellini-Ouvertüre, die „Dritte" von Brahms, wohl die konziseste seiner Symphonien, in gradezu klassischer Rundung, ausgewogen in ihrer wechselnden Dur-Moll-Haltung, voll Schwermut ohne Pathos, durch ungewöhnlich ruhige Zeitmaße den Ausgleich der beiden Welten unterstreichend.

Zum ersten Male in Westdeutschland erklang die von der New Yorker Kritiker-Vereinigung 1942 preisgekrönte Symphonie Nr. 3 von William Schuman. Das zweiteilige Werk, das mit den Sätzen Passacaglia — Fuge und Choral — Toccata die symphonische Ordnung nur noch im kompositorischen Zuschnitt anerkennt — thematische Bindungen halten es zusammen —, überzeugte vor allem im ersten Satz, der sich über einem ausdrucksvollen Thema in erfindungsreichen Variationen entwickelt. Fuge und Choral (beide mehr „Haltungen" als strenge Form andeutend) sind zu wenig gestrafft, die glanzvolle Toccata allzu sehr nach außen gewendet und wenig wählerisch in den Mitteln: sehr „gekonnte" Musik, aber noch ohne den Stempel letzter Notwendigkeit.

Mit Ravels „Alborado del Gracioso" (aus den „Miroirs") und Straußens „Eulenspiegel" schlossen zwei Werke das Programm, die noch einmal die virtuosen Möglichkeiten des Orchesters erkennen ließen. Besonders dem letzteren gab Monteux eine unnachahmliche weltmännische Eleganz mit, ohne der „volksliedhaften" Süße etwa des Epilogs etwas schuldig zu bleiben. Der stürmische Jubel des ausverkauften Hauses lohnte eine ungewöhnliche Leistung.

Günter Engler

ABENDPOST

MAY 14 1952

Boston Symphony Orchestra begeisterte im Großen Haus

Es war wohl einer der großartigsten Konzertabende dieses Winters, den das Frankfurter Amerikahaus mit einem Gastkonzert des Boston Symphony Orchestra einem musikinteressierten Publikum darbot. Das weite Rund des Hauses war bis auf den letzten Platz von einem in größter Eleganz erschienenen Auditorium besetzt.

Der 77jährige Gastdirigent Pierre Monteux wurde mit herzlichem Beifall empfangen, den er sofort auf das Orchester ablenkte. Es erscheint uns kaum möglich, die Leistung dieses Klangkörpers mit den üblichen Adjektiven einer kritischen Betrachtung zu würdigen. Das war alles von einer derartigen Geschlossenheit des Gesamteindruckes, daß man es einfach nicht zerpflücken darf. Von Hector Berlioz (Benvenuto Cellini-Ouvertüre) über Johannes Brahms (III. Symphonie), Maurice Ravel (Alborada del Gracioso) und Richard Strauß (Till Eulenspiegel) führte die Vortragsfolge zu William Schuman (Symphonie Nr. 3), einem amerikanischen Komponisten, dessen Werk trotz vieler Aeußerlichkeiten doch eine starke Substanz aufweist.

Es war vielleicht noch nicht einmal so sehr das „Was" sondern das „Wie" des Musizierens, das das Publikum zu ungeahnten Beifallsstürmen hinriß.

Nach dem Konzert empfing Hochkommissar McCloy das Orchester in engstem Kreise im Foyer des Großen Hauses. Im Rahmen dieses Empfanges überreichte ein Vertreter der Regierung von Rheinland-Pfalz eine künstlerisch ausgeführte Adresse für einen der Mitbegründer des Boston Symphony Orchestra, den heute 92jährigen Geiger Daniel Kuntz, der als junger Musiker von Oberstaufenbach bei Kusel (Pfalz) nach Boston ausgewandert war und dort zu den Männern gehörte, die das Boston Symphony Orchestra ins Leben riefen.

wwgg.

APR 26 1952

Munch und die Bostoner Symphoniker

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester wird unter Leitung seines Dirigenten Charles Munch am 13. Mai in Frankfurt und am 15. Mai in Berlin gastieren.

Im Jahre 1881 gründete Henry Higginson das Bostoner Symphonieorchester. Er sammelte sechzig ausgebildete Instrumentalisten und lud den jungen Sänger, Komponisten und Dirigenten Georg Henschel aus London ein, die Leitung dieses neugebildeten Ensembles zu übernehmen. Das erste Programm der Bostoner Symphoniker — am Samstag, dem 22. Oktober 1881 — bestand ausschließlich aus Werken deutscher Klassik und Romantik.

Siebzig Jahre sind seitdem vergangen. Unter der Leitung bedeutender Dirigenten, unter dem Einfluß verschiedener musikalischer Persönlichkeiten hat sich das Orchester zu einem Instrument entwickelt, dessen Möglichkeiten nach allen Seiten hin erprobt und ausgebildet sind. Durch seine musikalischen Leiter stand das Orchester ständig unter dem Einfluß bester europäischer Tradition: Nach dem Ungarn Nikisch, der sich in Leipzig die ersten Lorbeeren erworben hatte, betrat der kultivierte, elegante Operndirigent Karl Muck aus Berlin das Dirigentenpult. Ihm folgten, nach einer kurzen Uebergangszeit unter dem Pariser Komponisten Henri Robaud, der geduldige, unermüdliche Arbeiter Pierre Monteux, bekannt als Dirigent von Serge Diaghileffs Ballet Russe. Nach ihm führte der virtuose Russe Koussevitzky 25 Jahre lang den Stab, den er vor drei Jahren Charles Munch aus Straßburg übergab.

Munch stammt nicht nur aus einem hochmusikalischen Elternhaus, sondern — wie Albert Schweitzer — auch aus einem Land, das durch seine glücklich-unglückliche Lage gleichermaßen Anteil an der französischen wie an der deutschen Musikliteratur hat. Er spielte Violine bei Lucien Capet in Paris und fand sich bei Ausbruch des ersten Weltkrieges in der deutschen Armee. Nach dem Krieg, setzte er sein Studium unter Flesch in Berlin fort und wurde Konzertmeister im Leipziger Gewandhausorchester unter Furtwängler und Bruno Walter. 1929 ließ er sich in Paris nieder, gründete das Orchestre Symphonique de Paris und begab sich auf eine Reihe erfolgreicher Tourneen als Gastdirigent. 1937 übernahm er das Orchester des Pariser Konservatoriums. Für jeden Dirigenten hätte es ein Problem bedeutet, der Nachfolger eines Koussevitzky zu werden. Charles Munch aber erwarb sich Anerkennung und Zuneigung des Orchesters und des Publikums.

Im Januar 1950 erschien das Dreigestirn der Bostoner Dirigenten zum letzten Male gemeinsam in der traditionellen Konzerthalle: neben Munch als Gastdirigenten Pierre Monteux und Koussevitzky.

A. D.

[225]

Virtuosität des Klanges

Begeisterung um das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester in Frankfurt

Eines der berühmtesten Orchester der Welt, das Boston Symphony Orchestra, hat sich auf die Reise begeben, um im Lande der ältesten symphonischen Kultur seinen in großen Wellen vorausgeeilten Ruf bestätigen zu lassen. An sich hätte das Bostoner Orchester keine Konfrontierung mit anderen Ensembles nötig, da es gleich den anderen durch eine Eigenheit ausgezeichnet ist, die es als einen einmaligen Fall herausstellen läßt. Gewiß, man kann sagen, daß hier nicht die samtne Wärme des Streichkörpers der Berliner oder der vibrierende Glanz der Wiener Philharmoniker, nicht die abgeklärte Klangkultur der Dresdner Staatskapelle zu finden ist. Aber wo kommt ein Orchester dieser Größe zu jener schon beklemmenden, fast beängstigenden Vollkommenheit des Zusammenspiels? Die Präzision, die doch noch gerade so viel Lebendigkeit aufweist, daß man nicht unliebsam an maschinelle Perfektion erinnert wird, löst bei diesem Klangkörper die Faszination aus. Man hat wohl noch selten in diesem Maße erlebt, wie aus über hundert Orchestermitgliedern, die für sich beachtliche Individualitäten sind, eine vollkommene Einheit des Klanges wird.

Und obwohl hier Klangmassen in ungewohnter Stärke entfesselt wurden, sich stellenweise im Verhältnis zur Akustik des Großen Hauses zu orkanartigem Lärm steigerten, war die Homogenität des Klanges niemals gleichbedeutend mit einer undurchsichtigen Klanganhäufung, die keine Einzelheiten erkennen ließe. Immer leuchtete auch im forcierten fortissimo eine Instrumentengruppe noch hervor. Ueberhaupt traten die Instrumente kompositionsgemäß so hervor, wie man das bei kaum einem Orchester so prägnant erleben kann. So begegneten wir in gut bekannten Werken, wie etwa bei Brahms 3. Sinfonie oder dem Till Eulenspiegel von Strauß, plötzlich Klängen, die einem ganz neu erschienen durch die einzigartige orchestrale Beleuchtung. Nebenstimmen kamen zur Geltung, die man bei uns fast nie hört, und doch war das Klangbild immer genau ausgewogen, was sich im Harmonischen entscheidend bewährte. Ein beseelter Melos scheint diesem Orchester weniger zu liegen.

Das Programm, von Pierre Monteux als Gast mit einer schönen Mischung aus Musikalität und Sachlichkeit, Intensität und lokkerer Eleganz dirigiert, konnte alle Vorzüge des Orchesters eindeutig zeigen: Berlioz' effektvolle Cellini-Ouvertüre, der klanggesättigte Brahms, der brillante Ravel (Alborada del Grazioso), der übermütige Eulenspiegel. Der neueren Musik huldigte man mit einem sehr eindrucksvollen Werke, der 3. Sinfonie des Amerikaners William Schuman, der das Stück Serge Koussevitzky, dem Vollender der Bostoner Orchesterpräzision (an der vor ihm auch ein Nickisch und Muck gearbeitet hatten), gewidmet hat.

Lange hörte man nicht mehr einen so berechtigt enthusiastischen Beifall, mit dem man in Frankfurt das Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester und Pierre Monteux begrüßte, feierte und verabschiedete. ski

Darmstädter Tagblatt 20 May, 1952

Pre-
Europ-

Pars

Europ

POPS

Strauss

Oberhessische Presse 21.5.52

Triumph der Präzision

Gastkonzert des „Boston Symphony Orchestra" in Frankfurt

Wohl selten hat man in Frankfurt einem auswärtigen Orchester so herzliche und anhaltende Ovationen bereitet wie dem Bostoner Symphonie-Orchester unter der Leitung seines Gastdirigenten Pierre Monteux. Das neuhergerichtete Schauspielhaus glänzte von illustren Gästen, Kritikern und Musikfachleuten aus allen Teilen der Bundesrepublik. Ein auf den ersten Blick reichlich lang und anspruchsvoll erscheinendes Programm erwies sich als klug zusammengestellt und trug den Stempel suggestiver Wirkung. Berlioz' Benvenuto-Cellini-Ouvertüre, eine Partitur von klar konzipierter Thematik und prägnant formalem Aufbau, wurde in dieser Aufhellung zum Symbol des ganzen Abends.

Die 3. Symphonie von Brahms wurde in allen Phasen deutlich interpretiert; alles, was man in landläufigem Sinne als Brahmsstil zu kennzeichnen glaubt, wurde hier unter Pierre Monteux vergeblich erwartet. Nicht nur, daß dieser bedeutende Dirigent alle verwickelten Stellen dieser Partitur sorgsam ableuchtete, das Gewirr thematischer Fäden bloßlegte, auch der Stimmungsgehalt wurde überzeugend dargestellt. Dabei verliert er sich nicht in Einzelheiten; sein Orchester spielt ohnehin in schier unüberbietbarer Präzision, so kann er sich der großen Linie, dem „Symphonischen" zuwenden. Mit einem Mindestmaß an Gestik, erreicht er ein Maximum an subtilem und klanglich ausgewogenem Musizieren.

Von William Schuman hörte man die 3. Symphonie (1942), ein nicht bloß ob seiner instrumentellen Gewandung und meisterhaft zielstrebigen Kontrapunktik interessantes Werk: hier zeigen sich in glücklicher Vereinigung typisch Amerikanisches (Rhythmik) und offenbar europäische Einflüsse mit einer geradezu packenden Vehemenz des harmonischen „Gefälles". Die Virtuosität in der Wiedergabe unterstrich alle diese Momente so, daß der Beifall — bei einem zeitgenössischen modernen Werk! — ehrlich, fast stürmisch war. Ravels „Alborada" wurde unter Monteux zu einem Kabinettstück romantischen Temperaments mit verblüffenden Wirkungen. Und schließlich riß „Till Eulenspiegel" von Richard Strauß das Publikum zu nicht endenwollenden Beifallskundgebungen hin. Es war ein großer Tag im Musikleben Frankfurts und ein Erlebnis für jeden Konzertbesucher.

ht

Amerika-Haus
Marburg
Kelzerbach 1 Tel. 3253

[3x5]

GIESSENER FREIE PRESSE

17/18. MAI 1952

Das Boston Symphony Orchestra in Frankfurt a. M.

Zwei Tage nach den Berliner Philharmonikern unter Furtwängler eine weitere musikalische Spitzenleistung im ausverkauften „Großen Haus" in Frankfurt: das Konzert des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters, das sich z. Z. auf Europa-Tournee befindet und in Deutschland nur drei Konzerte gibt (zwei in Frankfurt und eines in Berlin).

Schon nach dem Verklingen der einleitenden Ouvertüre zur Oper „Benvenuto Cellini" von Berlioz war man davon überzeugt, daß die Bostoner den ihnen vorangegangenen traditionell begründeten Ruhm durchaus verdienen: die ungemein präzise Schönheit des Orchesterspiels dieser über 100 Männer — ein jeder ist auf seinem Instrument als Solist von Rang zu werten — faszinierte als Ensembleleistung, getragen von ausgezeichneter Klangkultur. Der 77 Jahre alte Dirigent Pierre Monteux, der mit bewundernswertem Elan sämtliche Werke bei sparsam-ruhiger Zeichengebung partiturfrei dirigierte, gab der 3. Symphonie Brahms die erforderliche Klangdurchsichtigkeit und führte die preisgekrönte 3. Symphonie des Amerikaners William Schuman, die auf alten Formen aufgebaut ist, zu eindrucksvoller Wirkung. Die funkelnde Virtuosität von Ravels liebenswürdig kleinem Werk „Alborada del Grazioso" beglückte danach ebenso wie der Ausklang des Beifall umrauschten Abends: „Till Eulenspiegels lustige Streiche" von R. Strauß. Hier blitzte der elektrisierende Schwung, der das Werk durchpulst, in vollem Glanze der rhythmischen Effekte auf, ohne in die Gefahr der leider so oft gehörten Darstellungsglätte anderer Orchesterdirigenten zu verfallen.

August Kruhm.

MAY 14 1952

Eleganz und Solidität

Begeisterung für das Bostoner Symphonieorchester in Frankfurt

Boston Symphony Orchestra — für die Amerikaner Inbegriff vom Reichtum der Orchestermusik, für die Europäer bisher nur der Klang eines Namens, der irgendwie mit märchenhaften Schönheiten zu tun hatte, vielleicht auch von manchen als eine Art verchromter Apoll beargwöhnt; nun kam der Klang selber nach Europa (von wo er einst auszog) — Festival in Paris, Begeisterung in Holland und Belgien. Erstes Konzert in Deutschland. Galastimmung im Frankfurter Großen Haus. Anwesenheit von hohen, höheren und höchsten Persönlichkeiten aus allen Zweigen des öffentlichen Lebens. Kaskaden von Beifall. Verbeugungen. Wieder Beifall.

Das gäbe allein schon Stoff für eine fällige Lobeshymne. Aber, abgesehen davon, war diese Begegnung doch so ernsthaft, daß sie — und das ist mehr als eine Lobeshymne — eine sachliche Würdigung verdient.

In den letzten Wochen haben wir in Frankfurt verschiedene bedeutende Orchester gehört, das Pariser Rundfunkorchester, die Berliner Philharmoniker. Vergleiche drängen sich auf. Und am ehesten wären die Bostoner mit den Franzosen zu vergleichen. Nicht allein, weil an diesem Abend Pierre Monteux vor dem Orchester stand. Dieses Orchester hat die aggressive Leichtigkeit, die wir an den Franzosen bewunderten, Durchsichtigkeit des Klanges und jene rhythmische Eleganz, die ihren Impuls nicht aus dem Metrum, sondern aus der melodischen Phrase bezieht. Es hat dazu auch eine Perfektion, die manchmal an Politur erinnert. Die Delikatesse mischt sich aufs eigenartigste mit einer fast handfesten Solidität.

Die Ankündigung besagte, daß die Bostoner, in deren Reihen Solisten — und welche Solisten! — aller europäischen Abstammungen sitzen, auch ältere deutsche und französische Musik spielen würden. Diese bestand aus der Ouvertüre zu „Benvenuto Cellini" von Berlioz und der dritten Symphonie von Brahms und wurde in der ersten Programmhälfte absolviert. Nicht eigentlich absolviert. Dafür sorgte die Musikalität der Musiker und des Dirigenten, dessen Zeichengebung zwar präzise sparsam war, aber doch geeignet, Impulse freiwerden zu lassen.

Nach der Pause gab es ein mit einem amerikanischen Kritikerpreis ausgezeichnetes Werk: die dritte Symphonie des noch jungen William Schumann. Sie benutzt alte Formen, Passacaglia, Fuge, Choral und Toccata und erinnert an eine kontrapunktische Zeichnung, worin auch die großen Klangflächen mit hartem Bleistift koloriert wurden. Virtuosität schloß sich an: „Alborado del Grazioso" von Ravel und „Till Eulenspiegels lustige Streiche" von Richard Strauß. Es war Virtuosität und Schönheit der Virtuosität in jedem Sinne.

Heinz Enke

[3×5]

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG

MAY 15 1952

Das Bostoner Symphonieorchester

FRANKFURTER KONZERT UNTER PIERRE MONTEUX

Auf dem Podium des Großen Hauses von Frankfurt hat das Bostoner Symphonieorchester Platz genommen. Man sieht die altgewohnte deutsche Aufstellung, die zweiten Geigen vorn auf der rechten Seite vor den Bratschen, die Celli auf der linken hinter den ersten Geigen. Der Raum nimmt die Klänge dieses im Ruf des besten amerikanischen Orchesters stehenden, soignierten Tonkörpers ohne Ungleichwertigkeit der Tonwirkung, soweit sie nicht in der Partitur vorgezeichnet ist, auf. Alle berühmten Orchester der Welt haben ihre Geschichte. Sie müssen an Erfahrungen und Widerständen lernen, an sich selbst und am Dirigenten wachsen, sie müssen sich vervollkommnen und darum umgestalten. Jahrzehnte gehen vorüber, bis ein Kollektiv von besten Musikern die Kultur des Ausdrucks und die Reaktionsfähigkeit erreicht, die von einer internationalen Geltung verlangt wird. Higginson heißt der wohltätige Gründer des Bostoner Orchesters, Lehrmeister waren Arthur Nikisch, Karl Muck und Max Fiedler, bevor Pierre Monteux und Sergej Koussevitzky die Leitung übernahmen, die 1950 an den Elsässer Charles Munch überging.

Monteux, der 77jährige sympathische Dirigent, Typ des freundlichen, kultivierten Franzosen, wird bei seinem Eintritt herzlich begrüßt. Mit unauffälliger Freude an der Musik ist er ganz Sachlichkeit. Seine Taktbewegungen gehen bei ruhiger Haltung auf in der Gesamtheit der Zeichengebung. Auch Monteux dirigiert überwiegend das Auf und Ab der Affektströme, Akzente und Markierungen. Er hat ein sehr wachsames Auge, ist bestimmt mit den Einsätzen, ohne damit zu posieren. Die Reife seiner orchestralen Führung hat etwas sehr Gewinnendes. Er beginnt mit der schwungvoll feurigen Ouvertüre zu der Oper „Benvenuto Cellini" von Berlioz. Sie wird mit messerscharfem Zuschnitt wiedergegeben. Die amerikanische Musikwelt liebt solche Höchstleistungen von taktlicher und rhythmischer Genauigkeit. Dadurch entstand der Kult der Präzisionsorchester. Deutsche Meisterdirigenten setzen die Präzision im allgemeinen voraus. Man muß das sauerböse Gesicht von Furtwängler gesehen haben, wenn im Orchester gelegentlich einmal nicht präzise genug gespielt wird. Eine Ueberbetonung der Präzision kann jedoch Ausdruck von diktatorischer Herrschsucht sein und musikfeindlich werden. Man denke an Mozart oder gar an Schubert, deren Musik Gewaltsames und Herrisches so fernliegt. In der Berliozschen Ouvertüre ist maschinengenaue Ausführung schon eher angebracht. Die Wiedergabe verliert darin nichts, wenn man das Bostoner Orchester ganz aus der Nähe hört. Auch bei den letzten Pultreihen der Streicher ist kaum ein kleiner Phasenunterschied im Zusammenspiel wahrzunehmen.

Erstaunlich bei dem Franzosen Monteux ist der hohe Grad seiner Einfühlung in die Brahmssche Welt, und dazu noch in die am wenigsten populäre dritte Sinfonie. Aus der Sucht, Etikettierungen an Sinfonien anzubringen, entstand für sie der Beiname „heroisch". Er paßt kaum zu dieser F-dur-Sinfonie, wenn auch Gegensätzliches genug darin aufritt. Monteux' Realisation trug keine Zeichen der Uebersteigerung oder Ueberhitzung an sich. Sie war milde bewegt in den Mittelsätzen, reif, wie es zu Brahms gehört. — Als Neuheit für Frankfurt erklang die Sinfonie Nr. 3 von William Schumann, gelehrte Musik aus zwei Teilen mit Passacaglia und Fuge, Choral und Toccata, aber doch auch mehr noch und in einer Instrumentation, die dem amerikanischen Klangbedürfnis entspricht, hart, blendend, schmetternd von Blechbläsern und Schlageffekten und viel wechselnd in der Farbe. Im Choral geht es frömmer und nicht so wild weltlich zu. — Ein Vergnügen eigener Art wurde „Alborada del Grazioso" von Ravel aus dem Zyklus „Miroirs", der die Freude des Komponisten widerspiegelt. Geistreiche, ungehemmt losknallende Tollheiten in witzigster Instrumentation, sehr amüsant und brillant ausgeführt. — Als Abschluß noch Straußens „Till Eulenspiegel", auch von den Bostonern virtuos vorgetragen, etwas derber und temperamentvoller im Ausdruck als von deutschen Dirigenten, die der Schelmenweise in Rondoform gerne den Zug des Märchenhaften lassen. — Begeistert feierte man die amerikanischen Gäste. Viele bekannte Persönlichkeiten des deutschen Musiklebens aus dem Westen und Süden hatten sich eingefunden.

Fritz Brust.

Illustrer Besuch aus Boston

Zu den Gastkonzerten des berühmten amerikanischen Orchesters in Frankfurt und Berlin

Wenn man von amerikanischer Orchesterkultur spricht, so wird als einer ihrer wichtigsten Träger das Boston Symphony Orchestra genannt werden. 1881 in der intellektuellen Metropole der Vereinigten Staaten gegründet, hat es sich längst an eine führende Stelle unter den Orchestern der Welt gearbeitet. Seine ersten Leiter, George Henschel und Wilhelm Gericke, waren deutsche Musiker. 34jährig übernahm Arthur Nikisch als erster Vertreter des dirigierenden Genietums die Führung. Das konservative Boston betrachtete seine temperamentvolle Art mit einer spürbaren Reserve, die dem Verwöhnten mißfiel. Nach kurzem Interregnum wurde Dr. Karl Muck, der Prophet Wagners und Exponent eines neuen Bildungsmusikertums, nach Boston berufen. Ihm verdankt das Orchester die ersten großen Siege und eine distanzierende Klarheit, die ihm eigentümlich geblieben ist. Auf Muck folgte 1919 der große französische Stabmeister Pierre Monteux, bis 1924 Dr. Sergej Kussewitzky für ein Vierteljahrhundert die Leitung übernahm. Durch ihn ist das Symphony Orchestra ein Weltbegriff für hohe Klang- und Spielkultur geworden.

Als Dr. Sergej Kussewitzky sich 1949 von der stä. digen Leitung des Bostoner Symphony Orchestra zu rückzog, übernahm der Elsässer Charles Munch (links die Leitung. Pierre Monteux (rechts), sein 77jähriger französischer Kollege, der 1919 bis 1924 das Bostoner Symphony Orchestra geleitet hat und die Konzerte in Frankfurt und Berlin dirigieren wird.

AMERICAN EMBASSY BERLIN
DIE NEUE ZEITUNG
MAY 10 1952

THE STARS AND STIPES
May 15, 1952

ConcertHailed At Frankfurt

FRANKFURT, May 14 (S&S)—Both popular and critical acclaim greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert last night in Frankfurt's Grosses Haus.

An overflow audience of 1,400 vigorously applauded the group's first postwar appearance in Germany.

The performance, directed by guest conductor Pierre Monteux, was described in the Frankfurt Neue Presse review as a "triumph of orchestral brilliance."

Rundschau Raves

Heinz Enke, music critic for the Frankfurter Rundschau, wrote that the Boston Symphony performance had "elegance and solidity" and was received by the audience with "enthusiasm."

Enke compared the Boston group with the Paris Radio Orchestra, recently heard here, because of their "aggressive lightness, transparency of sound, and rhythmical elegance."

The orchestra was scheduled to give a performance for military personnel in the Grosses Haus this afternoon and to present another public concert in Berlin's Titania Palast tomorrow night.

MAY 14 1952

Das Bostoner Orchester in Frankfurt

Vom Großen Haus sehr angetan

Dienstagnachmittag, Frankfurter Hauptbahnhof: auf dem Bahnsteig, in den der planmäßige Kölner D-Zug einlief, standen die Reporter, Photographen, Rundfunkleute und konnten beim besten Willen den erwarteten illustren Gast nicht entdecken. Er hätte nicht übersehen werden können, denn, kurz gesagt: es handelte sich um das Bostoner Symphonieorchester, immerhin hundertundzehn Musiker mit allem, was noch dazu gehört.

Während man noch wartete, waren die Musiker schon in ihren Hotels: Savoy, Haus der Kochkunst, National, Monopol-Metropol und die beiden Dirigenten, Pierre Monteux und Charles Munch im Frankfurter Hof. Eigentlich hätten sie mit Flugzeugen kommen sollen. Der Oelstreik verhinderte das. Nun hatten ihre Sonderwagen den planmäßigen Zug so verlängert, daß sich die Bundesbahn entschloß, den Sonderanhang — darunter allein zwei Wagen für das Gepäck mit den Instrumenten — auch gesondert laufen zu lassen. So war das Orchester vorzeitig nach Frankfurt gekommen, so daß die Empfangs- und Interview-Welle zunächst im Sande verlief.

Inzwischen hatte es einige Schwierigkeiten bei der deutschen Zollbehörde im Frankfurter Hauptbahnhof gegeben. Aber schließlich konnten die Instrumente ausgeladen und ins Große Haus gebracht werden. Die Orchesterleute, mit denen wir sprachen, zeigten sich vom Großen Haus sehr angetan, vom Zuschauerraum, von der Bühne, von dem Raum, den sie noch übrigließ, um immense Mengen von Instrumenten, Zubehör und sonstigen Dingen übersichtlich abzustellen. Vom europäischen Publikum, das sie auf dieser Reise zum ersten Male kennenlernen, sind sie begeistert, von ihrer Aufnahme in Paris, wo sie zwei Konzerte beim Festival des „Kongresses für kulturelle Freiheit" (mit „Meisterwerken des zwanzigsten Jahrhunderts") gaben, von Amsterdam, Den Haag und Brüssel. In Deutschland werden sie nun drei Konzerte geben, zwei in Frankfurt, danach eines in Berlin. Es folgen Straßburg, Lyon, noch einmal Paris, Bordeaux und London: vierzehn Konzerte in zwanzig Tagen. Das Orchester ist an solche Strapazen gewöhnt. In Boston gibt es für die Symphoniker nicht nur eine Saison, sondern vier, jeweils in anderem Rahmen: weit über zweihundert Veranstaltungen im Jahr, 47 Wochen angestrengter Orchesterarbeit, zwar mit wechselndem Programm-Niveau, aber stets mit dem gleichen musikalischen Niveau, das den Bostoner Symphonikern den Ruf eingetragen hat, zumindest eines der besten Orchester Amerikas zu sein.

-ke

MA[illegible] 1952

Pierre Monteux in Frankfurt

Pierre Monteux, der 77jährige französische Dirigent, landete auf dem Rhein-Main-Flughafen, um das Gastspiel des Bostoner Symphony Orchestra im Frankfurter Großen Haus zu dirigieren. (Photo: Fenzl)

M[illegible] 1952

Triumph orchestraler Brillanz

Bostoner Symphonieorchester in Frankfurt
(Vorbericht)

Ein glanzvolles musikalisches Ereignis gestern abend im vollbesetzten Großen Haus. Mit den ersten, in scharf rhythmisiertem Brio intonierten Takten der einleitenden Ouvertüre zu „Benvenuto Cellini" von Berlioz hatte das berühmte amerikanische Spitzenorchester schon die Hörer auf seiner Seite. Desgleichen der Gastdirigent Pierre Monteux, der mit der Gelassenheit meisterlicher Souveränität und zugleich höchst intensiver Antriebskraft den klingenden Ablauf steuerte, trotz seiner 77 Jahre physisch bewundernswert unerschüttert. Wir werden über das bedeutende Konzert, das weiterhin an der Dritten Symphonie von Brahms, der Dritten Symphonie des Amerikaners William Schuman, dem Scherzo „Alborada del Grazioso" von Ravel und dem „Till Eulenspiegel" von Richard Strauß die blendende Spielkultur dieses Orchesters zeigte, in der nächsten Ausgabe noch ausführlich berichten.

H. P.

MAY 1952

Amerikanische Musik aus europäischer Wurzel

Zum Europa-Besuch des Bostoner Symphonieorchesters

Mit den Dirigenten Pierre Monteux und Charles Munch kommt das Bostoner Symphonieorchester zum erstenmal nach Europa. In Deutschland wird es dabei drei Konzerte geben: am 13. und am 14. Mai (das zweite für die amerikanische Armee) in Frankfurt und am 15. Mai in Berlin.

Die Amerikaner, vor allem die Nordamerikaner und darunter speziell diejenigen aus den Neuengland-Staaten, haben eine besondere Vorliebe für Orchestermusik. Sie führten sie vor über hundert Jahren aus Europa ein und pflegten sie sorgfältig — zunächst weniger indem sie den Boden, die allgemeinen Grundlagen der Musikkultur verbesserten, als damit, daß sie die belebenden Kräfte und die Nährstoffe der kostbaren Pflanze ebenfalls aus Europa importierten: die besten Dirigenten, die besten Musiker, das Repertoire. Der Qualitätsvorteil des Verfahrens ist offenbar; sein Nachteil bestand darin, daß die jungen Kräfte im eigenen Land keine rechte Basis fanden, während die europäischen Dirigenten aus einem weitverzweigten Musikleben emporsteigen konnten, bis sie so berühmt waren, wie es der amerikanische Anspruch erforderte. Auf solche Weise gelangte die Musikpflege bei ein paar größen amerikanischen Orchestern nicht nur zu Perfektion und erstklassiger Produktion, sondern sie kam auch hierorts in den Ruch von Millionärs-Standard und unerhörtem musikalischem Luxus.

Wenn wir jetzt in Deutschland Gelegenheit haben, eine der edelsten Blüten dieser Züchtung zum erstenmal aus der Nähe zu bewundern, gilt es, das Maß von Tradition, das Gewicht des auf ihr gegründeten Luxus und den Impuls an Eigenem gegeneinander abzuwägen. Denn seit den Jahren, da Artur Nikisch die Sensation von Boston und von ganz Amerika war, und auch seit der Zeit, da die Publikumsdirigenten ungebührlich hoch im Kurs standen, hat sich manches geändert. Leute, die es wissen müssen, sprechen von mehr als dreißigtausend Orchesterneugründungen (allerdings alles eingerechnet) in den USA in den letzten Jahrzehnten; die Zahl der wirklich bedeutenden großen und unabhängigen Orchestervereinigungen wird mit zwanzig bis dreißig angegeben. Diese Entwicklung verstärkt und erhöht aber vor allem ein stets fühlbarer werdender Drang nach originärer amerikanischer Musik, worunter keineswegs die alte einheimische Indianermusik verstanden wird, auch nicht der Jazz, sondern eine vorwiegend symphonisch orientierte Musik, die aus dem impulsiven Lebensgefühl Amerikas selber gewachsen sein soll. Schon Dvoraks „Aus der Neuen Welt" hielt man für eine amerikanische Symphonie in diesem Sinn. Das war freilich ein begeistertes Mißverständnis. Inzwischen gibt es aber Kompositionen mit deutlich amerikanischer Physiognomie.

Zeichnet sich so in nicht wenig zeitgenössischen Werken „Amerikanisches" ab (das, je mehr es in Erscheinung tritt, desto freudiger begrüßt wird), so ist es nicht leicht, ähnliches für einen amerikanischen Interpretationsstil zu entdecken. Es sei denn, man wolle den als Vorbild geltenden Stil Toscaninis von Dynamik und Vereinfachung, von einer fast stromlinienhaften Einkleidung als verbindlich in jenem Sinn anerkennen. Dagegen steht noch weithin fast übermächtig die Macht der europäischen Tradition. Je nach der äußeren und inneren Entwicklung des Orchesters und seiner Dirigenten ist sie französisch, italienisch, deutsch oder slawisch gefärbt. Sie durchdringt sich mit der geistigen Atmosphäre, ja auch ein Weniges mit dem Lokalkolorit der Umgebung. Jede Stadt spiegelt sich auf irgendeine Weise auch in ihrem Orchester.

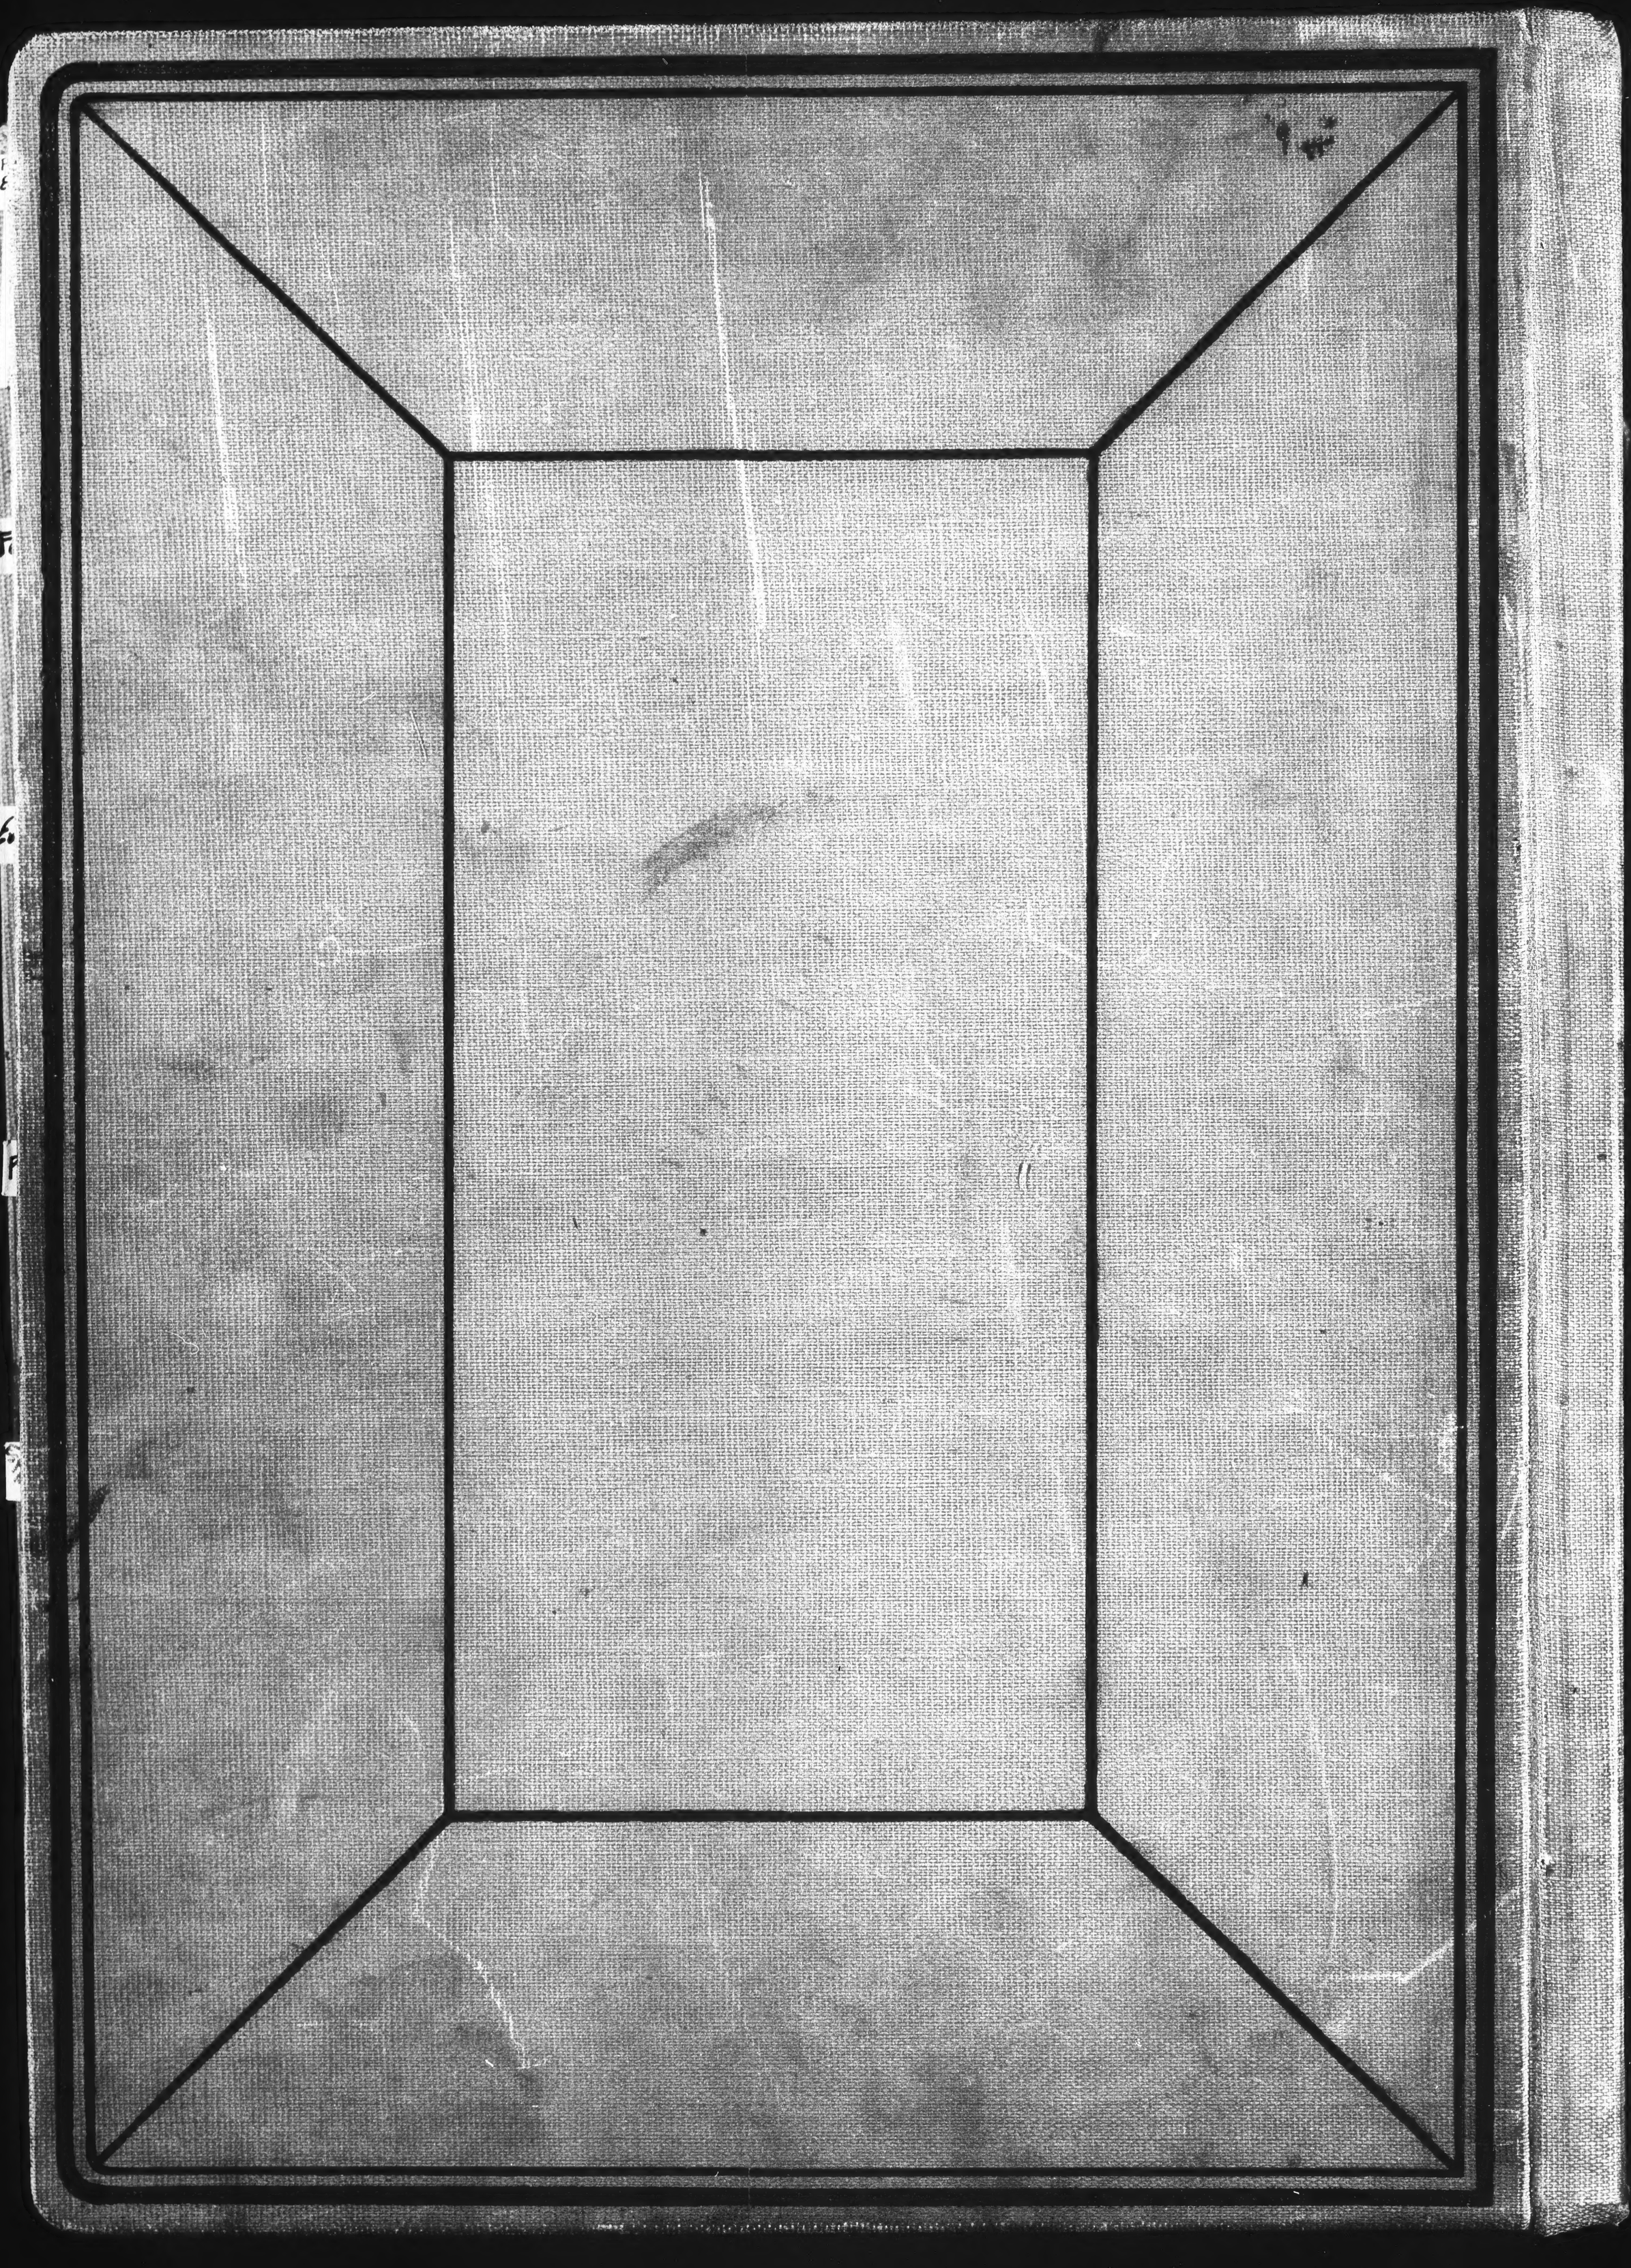
*

BOSTON ist eine Stadt der Solidität und der Eleganz. Sein Orchester genoß den Vorzug, fünfundzwanzig Jahre lang von Koussevitzki dirigiert zu werden, nachdem es durch die deutsche Schule von Karl Muck und die französische von Pierre Monteux gegangen war. Zu einer Zeit (1881), als die New Yorker Musiker, um existieren zu können, noch eher einem ihrer ohnehin spärlichen Konzerte fernblieben als eine Gelegenheit zum Unterrichterteilen ausließen, wurde das Bostoner Symphonieorchester gegründet von Bankier Higginson, der selber in Wien Musik studiert hatte und dem die Wiener Philharmoniker Anregung und Vorbild waren. Er eröffnete dem Bostoner Orchester den Weg, der es an die Spitze des amerikanischen Musiklebens führte.

PIERRE MONTEUX, 77 Jahre alt, Dirigent der Pariser Uraufführungen von Strawinskys „Petruschka", „Sacre" und „Rossignol" und Ravels „Daphnis et Chloe" (all dies mit Diaghileffs „Ballett Russe") ist das Gegenteil von einem Schaudirigenten, weshalb er sich im Amerika der zwanziger Jahre noch nicht seiner wirklichen Leistung entsprechend durchsetzen konnte. Sein Ruhm ist nicht allein in seiner Bedeutung als „Apostel der neuen Musik" begründet, sondern in seiner gallischen Klarheit, in der französischen Leichtigkeit und Durchsichtigkeit, dem unprätentiösen Glanz seiner Interpretationen, in seiner Arbeit mit dem Amsterdamer Concertgebouw-Orchester und schließlich seiner fünfzehnjährigen Tätigkeit als Leiter der San Francisco Symphony, die ihm endlich auch Amerikas Achtung und Liebe sicherte.

CHARLES MUNCH, Landsmann und Schwager von Albert Schweitzer, ist — obwohl er auch wesensmäßig dem deutsch-französischen Zwischenbereich entstammt — wie Monteux einer der bedeutendsten Vertreter der französischen Schule. Er begann seine Laufbahn als Geiger, dirigierte mit 41 Jahren sein erstes Konzert. Die Berufung als Nachfolger Koussevitzkis zum ständigen Leiter der Bostoner Symphoniker war vor zwei Jahren äußere Bestätigung einer großen Laufbahn.

Heinz Enke



END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE REWIND